CONSECRATION TO WORK.

REV. A. E MAIN ADMONISHES CHRISTIANS TO BECOME ACTIVE.

This Week of Prayer Christians Should Make a Special Effort of Stretching Out a Hand to Those in Sorrow and Trouble.

The second of the union week of prayer services was held in the Trinity Reformed church Tuesday night. The meeting was largely attended and the church was well-filled in the central line of pews.

The meeting opened with singing, led by Horace J. Martin. George R. Cornwell offered the opening prayer, which was followed by several more hymns. Rev. Dr. Charles R. Barnes acted as leader of the services. After the devotional services, Rev. A. E. Main made a short address on the topic for the evening which was "Consecration to work and Christian Service." He took his text from Romans 12th chapter, 1st verse. "I beseech you therefore, brother, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable to God."

Paul, he said, did not call upon them as in the early times for a burnt offering but for them to offer themselves as a living sacrifice. By consecration, he continued, it is meant that they are to offer, to give them unto God. Consecration should not be an act of self-denial but an offering of love of joy.

Next he asked from what does consecration separate the Christian and gave as his answer that the soul was taken from the kingdom of Satan, from the service of that king into the service of a greater king. It is simply, he said, the voluntary separation from the kingdom of Satan. From the service of Satan the consecration was into the work and Christian service. That is the duty of the churches, to work.

Christians should make a special effort this week to consecrate themselves to the work of stretching out a hand to those in sorrow and trouble. And for such consecration, preparation is needed. He closed with an earnest prayer along the same lines as his remarks and after another hymn, was followed several other prayers by the other pastors present and some of the principal workers. A period of prayer, praise and testimony followed in which quite a number took part.

Rev. Mr. Schenck was missed from the service, but it was thought best for him to remain at home and husband his strength for the regular Sunday services in his own church. Tonight the meetings will be held in Vincent chapel, and a still larger attendance is hoped for.

CHANGE OF TEACHERS.

Better Work Arranged for the Borough High School.

Several important changes have just been made in the teaching department of the North Plainfield Public School. Miss Laura Sydenham, teacher of the seventh grade, now devotes her time to instruction in music and drawing in the school, and her place has been filled by Miss Grace Fraser, a graduate of the McGill University, Montreal.

Miss Bainbridge has entered the State Normal College at Albany, N. Y., and her place is taken by Miss May Baldwin, a graduate of Boston University.

Miss Maude McKane, a graduate of the Trenton Normal School, has been engaged to teach the fifth grade.

The board of education are to be congratulated on securing such excellent teachers who will maintain the high standard attained.

Entertained at Dancing.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Townley, of West Second street, entertained a few friends at their home Tuesday night. There were about fifty people present who enjoyed the dancing which was the principal feature of the evening. O'Reilly furnished the music. It was very early in the morning when the guests departed for home, but they all agreed that they had a good time.

Still Abusive.

John Roth, the insane shoemaker, who was locked up on Monday night pending his commitment to the New Jersey State Hospital at Morris Plains, was driven over to the hospital Wednesday under the care of Sergeant Kiely and his father, Martin Roth, Sr. Roth made no objection to the ride, but continued to abuse both the officer and his father with his tongue.

Lost the Tip of His Finger.

J. B. Meffard, aged 40 years, an employee of Potter's Press Works, had one of his fingers caught in a piece of machinery while at work this Wednesday. He went to the hospital where it was found necessary that the tip of the finger should be taken off. The man was able to return to work this afternoon.

TAKEN FOR A GREAT MAN

FANWOOD'S ASSESSOR'S PICTURE LABELED GARRETT A. HOBART.

Exhibited in a Big New York Dry Goods Store as That of the Vice-President-Elect—Clerks Saluted Mr. Stanbery.

Unbeknown to the residents of the little borough of Fanwood, or to those of this city either, one of the well known citizens of that place has been posing as the Vice-President-elect of the United States. He, however, knew no more of it than the rest for a time.

In the mammoth store of Seigel, Cooper & Co., in New York, there is an art gallery and there are displayed in a large velvet frame a photograph of McKinley and another picture supposed to be of Garret A. Hobart. But it wasn't. It was a photograph of Fanwood's genial assessor, William R. Stanbery, better known as "Billie" Stanbery. Everybody thought the picture was all right and so they might for, on examination, the likeness between the Paterson statesman and the Fanwood assessor is very noticeable.

Mr. Stanbery was in New York Tuesday when one of his friends came up and asked him how long since he had been having his photograph on exhibition. Now Mr. Stanbery did not know that a crowd was standing in front of his picture at that moment admiring the new Vice-president and he replied that his picture was not on exhibition. Then the friend advised him to visit the art gallery in Seigel, Cooper & Co.'s store and see for himself, so he hurried to that store and came to the place in question and, to his great astonishment, beheld his own likeness staring at him from within a handsome velvet frame. He did not notice the photograph of the next President along side but started to investigate.

Mr. Stanbery removed his hat and with his sweetest smile accosted the lady in charge of that part of the art gallery.

"By what authority do you exhibit my picture here?" he inquired with a bow. The young woman looked at him and then at the picture. Then with a deep courtesy as best befitting an official of such high rank, she answered:

"Oh yes. This is Mr. Hobart, the Vice-President." Then Mr. Stanbery dropped to the situation. Meanwhile the crowd had also seen the likeness and drew round for a closer look at such a rare curiosity as a vice-president of the United States. But Stanbery was equal to the situation. He explained that he was not the great man from Paterson, neither was he vice-president but only William R. Stanbery, a quiet and well-behaved citizen of the borough of Fanwood and the picture that was now on exhibition was not of the successful candidate for national office, but himself.

Some time ago Mr. Stanbury lent the negative from which the picture was made to the Bas-Relief Company, now of Elizabeth, but then of New York, for them to make one of their new style pictures from but how the picture went from the company's office to the art gallery and how it came to change its name is still a mystery. The likeness is a good one and singularly resembled that of the Vice-President, except that the face of the Fanwood man is somewhat narrower.

NOW HUSTLE FOR MEMBERS.

A Chance to Get a High Grade Bicycle Free of Cost.

This announcement was made at the Y. M. C. A. on New Year's Day, and the explanation of it is as follows:

A local dealer has contributed a high grade 1897 wheel to the association, to be used in extending the membership, and the committee in charge has decided to offer it as a prize to the member securing the largest number of new members previous to April 1st.

This is a peculiarly attractive offer, and is sure to enlist the young men in an earnest rivaling for a prize of such value, and which can be secured without cost except of a comparatively small amount of effort, for almost any man not already a member of the organization will join it if the matter is properly presented to him.

Application blanks and ammunition in the way of printed matter and other information can be secured from the general secretary at the association building.

Slowly Recovering.

Abe Hooley, formerly of this city, who has for some time been confined in a New York hospital, the result of injuries received a long time ago, came to Plainfield on Monday and spent the night with his brother, Edward, of Washington Park. Mr. Hooley is now able to move about with the aid of crutches.

—The Seminary opened yesterday after the holiday vacation.

A MAYOR FOR BOROUGH.

PETER EMMONS MAY BE NOMINATED TO SUCCEED MR. HEGEMAN.

Democrats Not Likely to Remain Silent This Year and ex-Mayor Saunders Talked of For a Candidate to Make a Fight.

Though the borough election is still some time distant, there is a good deal of talk among the politicians who know the ins and outs of municipal life across the brook as to who will be the ones to capture the honors to be bestowed by the nominating conventions.

While the Democrats were in a condition of innocuous desuetude at the last Mayoralty election of the borough there are signs that they will throw off this lethargic state this year and give the G. O. P. a hustle for the offices to be contested for.

Mayor Hegeman has been a good chief executive for the borough, but he has no further desire to burden himself with the duties for another term and is determined to step out into the rank and file of the party. Everything points to ex-Councilman Peter A. Emmons as being his successor. Mr. Emmons made a creditable record as a member of the Council, has been a faithful Republican worker, is personally popular with the people, and is considered to be an all-round strong candidate for the Republicans to continue in power with.

Just who the Democrats may center upon, if they put a candidate in the field, is somewhat uncertain, but ex-Mayor William L. Saunders' name is frequently and favorably mentioned. Mr. Saunders has not, as yet, evidenced an inclination to take up the gauntlet for his party. Should he consent to do this, however, he would doubtless make such a run that the Republicans will have to put on their hustling togs to beat him.

TAKEN BY SURPRISE.

Josie Van Natta Given a Pleasant Time at Her Home.

A very pleasant surprise party was tendered to Miss Josie Van Natta, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Van Natta, at her home 351 East Third street, Tuesday night. The surprise was almost complete but the young lady was equal to the emergency, and in furnishing entertainment for her guests she acquitted herself most admirably. During the evening there was vocal and instrumental music, followed by games and refreshments. Music for the occasion was furnished by Miss Tyrrell, Mr. Blatz, Mr. Burtsell and Miss Van Natta. A list of the guests follow:

Misses Mildred Tyrrell, Cora Scull, Lillian Thorn, Madora Ulrick, Lyda Pangborne, Mabel Hockridge, May Shimer, Bertha Wilcox, Fanny Mills, May Squires; Messrs. M. Sutphen, F. Blatz, W. Trembath, A. McVoy, W. Thorn, F. Schuck, T. Scully, G. Graves, S. Robertson, B. Tolles, W. Bertsell, W. Wertz, Newark.

Great Embroidery Sale.

Edsall advertises in another column a great special sale of fine Hamburgh embroideries, which he has just purchased of a manufacturer in St. Gall, Switzerland. They are what are called the clearings up of the factory; odd pieces, and are put at about one-half the usual price. Edsall said yesterday while they were arranging them on the sales tables one lady selected about fifteen dollars worth of them in a few minutes. Those who purchased say they are the cheapest they have ever seen.

A Benefit Concert.

A benefit concert for the piano fund at the North Plainfield Public High School will be given in the school building about the middle of February. Superintendent Warde is preparing a delightful programme which is sure to be greatly enjoyed by all. Only two hundred tickets will be sold and of that number nearly one hundred have been subscribed for already.

A New Trial Granted.

Judge McCormick, of the Union County courts, has granted a new trial in the appeal case of Mary E. Gartland against Laura R. Ellis, on contract, at the request of S. S. Swackhamer, the lawyer for the plaintiff. Ex-Judge W. A. Coddington is the attorney for the defendant.

Sale of Fancy Articles

A sale of fancy articles was held by the ladies of St. Stephen's church, Saturday afternoon, to raise sufficient funds to issue a catalogue of the Sunday-school library. The sale was a successful one and the net proceeds amounted to about $25.

Sprained Her Wrist.

Miss Emma V. Shattuck, principal of the Bryant Public School, while on her Christmas vacation fell and seriously sprained her left wrist. She has not yet recovered from the effects of the fall and is still unable to use her left hand.

WAR ON SLOT MACHINES

JUDGE VANSYCKEL DRIVES THE DEVICES OUT OF ELIZABETH.

His Charge to the Grand Jury Was the Signal for Citizens to Remove Them —J. F. Hubbard Foreman of the Jury.

At the opening of the January term of the Union County Court Tuesday at Elizabeth Judge VanSyckel severely scored the saloonkeepers and others who ran nickel-in-the-slot machines in disorderly houses. The Judge said it was gambling, pure and simple, as the machines were played for money and drinks, thus constituting the places they were in disorderly houses. The Judge told the Grand Jurors they could indict the owner of any place where these devices were found as running a disorderly house, and it would be their duty to fully investigate the matter and act accordingly.

Immediately after Judge VanSyckel's charge the slot machines began disappearing from Elizabeth. There were over four hundred machines scattered about the city, and two hours after the Grand Jury had received its instructions not a single machine could be found.

Telephones, messengers and trolley cars were pressed into service to notify the threatened parties by their friends, and the result has been simply astonishing. Never in the city's history has an evil been eradicated so quickly.

The calendar for the January term is light and the term promises to be short. The jail list numbers only eleven. Three of the prisoners are the Summit burglars, Miller, Warner and Ballinger. They had two confederates, a man and a woman, who are now in jail at Westerfield, Conn., for a robbery committed there.

MAYOR FISK PRESENTS TWO SHIELDS.

Valuable Acquisition to the Library Acknowledged by the Directors.

A regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library was held Tuesday night. There were present: Mason W. Tyler, J. Evarts Tracy, John B. Dumont, William H. Larrabee, Joseph W. Yates and William M. Stillman.

The minutes of the meeting of December 1st were read and approved. A number of bills were ordered paid.

It was moved that the president have power to arrange for the placing of the boulder given to the library by Mr. Fountain in the front yard of the library grounds.

Miss Sara Dean, of Mr. Leal's school, was granted eight teachers' cards for school use.

On motion the following resolution was passed:

Whereas, The Honorable Charles J having offered to loan the Library two shields, one described as the Pilgrim Shield, designed to illustrate scenes from Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and the other described as the Milton Shield, designed to illustrate scenes from "Paradise Lost;" Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the offer of Mr. Fisk be accepted and that the thanks of the Board be tendered to him therefor; and that the shields be hung under the direction of the art committee.

The report of the librarian was read, approved and ordered on file.

A Growing Lodge.

Martha Washington Council, No. 23, Daughters of America, the only confined auxiliary to the Jr. O. U. A. M., is not yet six months old, but is growing very rapidly, and the members are endeavoring to bring the membership up to 150 by the time the Council celebrates its first anniversary which will be on August 4th, next. At their meeting Tuesday night seven propositions were received, and the Council also arranged for a series of evening socials to be held at the homes of the members. The first will be held at the home of Mrs. Andrew Mattis, of Madison avenue, Friday evening, January 15th.

—The Plainfield Camera Club will hold its first meeting for the new year on Monday evening, at which time the new administration will be in charge. Business of importance to all the members will be brought up at the meeting.

CONNECTING TO SEWERS.

ALL HOUSE OWNERS OBLIGED TO CONFORM WITH A STATE LAW.

Board of Health to Have an Ordinance Passed Containing the Provisions Necessary to Enforce the Law Here.

There was very little of importance done at the meeting of the Board of Health, held in the Mayor's office, Tuesday besides the regular routine business. All the members of the Board were present.

Councilman Frost appeared at the meeting and held an informal conference with the members of the Board regarding the proposed garbage crematory. No action was taken, but the Board will soon appoint a committee to confer with a committee from the Council on the matter.

There was also a discussion of the proposed ordinance relative to the connecting of all houses with the sewer as conforming with the State law recently passed. Now that the local system of sewers is in perfect running order everybody along the line of the sewer will be compelled to connect their houses at once. The Board has charge of the passing of such an ordinance, and one containing such provisions will be brought up for first reading at a special meeting of the Board, which will be held on next Monday evening.

BEN HUR KEPT THEIR INTEREST.

H. Theo. Chamberlain Gave a Graphic Description of Wallace's Masterpiece.

There was a large and appreciative audience at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Tuesday, when H. Theo. Chamberlain gave his wonderfully interesting illustrated lecture on "Ben Hur," under the auspices of Plainfield Lodge, No. 14, O. O. F., for the benefit of the Odd Fellows' Home.

Those who have read the story of "Ben Hur," which is a master-work by Gen. Lew. Wallace, know what an intensely interesting story is presented, and to have the same illustrated with fine views makes the story doubly interesting.

Mr. Chamberlain is an entertaining speaker and the expression given to his remarks is marked. He exhibited over one hundred views of the finest specimens and he held the closest attention of his audience as he led them from the beginning of the life of Ben Hur to the triumph end. That portion leading up to and through the chariot races was so interesting that the audience was spell bound, and as the views, showing the different parts of the races were given, those present almost imagined they were at the races. The remarkable life and characteristics of "Ben Hur" were graphically related in a manner that will leave a lasting impression on the minds of all present.

INSTALLATION AND BANQUET.

Jerusalem Lodge, F. and A. M., Had a Fraternal Time Last Night.

Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., met in the Babcock building, Tuesday and installed the officers elected at the meeting of December 10th last. They were installed by Past Master Dr. D. C. Adams in a manner that did credit to both himself and the lodge. Following the installation exercises there was the usual collation which consisted of chicken salad, coffee, cake, fruit and other necessary perquisites at which there was a flow of wit and good humor. Those who spoke in response to informal toasts were: Master-elect H. M. Beeching, C. C. Howard, Dr. H. H Lowrie, Henry Woodland, B. F. F. Cotiell and H. O. Hance.

The officers installed were as follows:

Worshipful master, Stephen Beeching; senior warden, H., O Hance; junior warden, Garret T. Dunham; treasurer, Alex. Titsworth; secretary, Charles Yeager; chaplain, J. H. Van Horn; senior deacon, Robert A. Meeker; junior deacon, E. R. Pope, Jr.; senior master of ceremonies, L. S. Pocock; junior master of ceremonies, Charles Conover; stewards, L. E. Woolston and J. W. VanSickle; tyler, Kasper Bolsterli.

No Increase in Alimony.

Another move has been made in the Kurzhals divorce case which is at present agitating the gossips of Westfield. Paul I. Oliver, of Westfield, solicitor for Mrs. Kurzhals, made a motion before Vice-Chancellor Stevens, at Jersey City, for an increase in the alimony allowed her. Counsellor W. S. Angleman, of this city, successfully opposed the motion, and Mrs. Kurzhals will have to be content with her present allowance.

An Invitation Reception.

The Board of Governors of the Plainfield Catholic Club held a meeting Tuesday evening and transacted routine business. They also made arrangements for an invitation reception to be given in the club hall on the evening of January 21.

IN THE WAY OF A BULLET

MISS AILIDA CLARK MAY LOSE THE SIGHT ON ONE EYE.

Shooting at a Target in Company With Her Sister Margaret and Accidentally Got in Range of the Rifle in the Latter's Hand's.

A serious shooting accident occurred Tuesday afternoon at the home of the Misses Clark, of Maple avenue, and may result in the loss of an eye.

Miss Ailida Clark, who is about thirty-six years of age, and her sister, Miss Margaret Clark, aged thirty-two years, reside with their father on the above avenue. The sisters are especially fond of shooting at a target with a flobert rifle, and they often pass their spare time in this way. The target is erected near the house and the range is a fairly long one.

Yesterday afternoon the two women were enjoying their practice, as usual. A dog owned by them happened to be nearby, and he ran in front of the target. Miss Margaret was shooting at the time and the other sister ran to the target to drive away the dog, lest he be shot. The canine had just been taken away, and the sister had called back that everything was all right, when the rifle went off.

At the same moment Miss Ailida Clark turned around just in time to get in range of the course of the bullet. The ball who had discharged the gun ran to her sister, and to her astonishment learned that the ball had struck on the side of the nose next to the left eye.

The two immediately went to the house and Dr. Hedges was sent for. When the doctor arrived he examined the wound and thought it best that the injured woman should be taken to the hospital. Miss Clark was accordingly removed to the hospital. As yet the doctors are unable to tell whether Miss Clark will lose the sight of her eye. Dr. Ard and Hedges have the case in hand.

Miss Margaret Clark, the sister who performed the deed, is nearly frantic with grief, for she fears that her sister may lose her eye. The injured apparently suffers no great pain.

A JOINT INSTALLATION.

A. of V., G. A. R. and W. R. C. to Meet Together for That Purpose.

John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., met Tuesday and accepted an invitation to install their officers jointly with G. A. R. Post No. 73, and the Woman's Relief Corps. Another invitation from the W. C. T. U. to attend a patriotic service in the rooms of the latter early in February, was also accepted.

In response to a request from department headquarters, G. A. R., asking for the appointment of a committee to wait on the Senator and Assemblymen in this district and secure their support towards favorable legislation for the Soldiers' Home at Kearney, a committee was appointed, with H. C. McVoy as chairman.

THE DOCTORS DINE.

The Medical Association Enjoy a Period of Relief From Professional Duties.

The quarterly meeting and dinner of the Plainfield Medical Association was held Tuesday at the Hotel Tulleries on East Front street, and was attended by the following physicians: Drs. Hallock, Long, Probasco, Tomlinson, Ben. Hedges, Carman, Clawson, Jenkins, Davis, Gaston, Fritts and Boots.

Dr. Gaston read a paper of peculiar interest to the profession and afterwards it was discussed by those present in an edifying manner. During the course of the dinner, which occupied a couple of hours, there was evidenced much sociability by the doctors.

First Anniversary Soon to be Here.

The regular monthly meeting of the Germania Beneficial Society was held on Monday evening. One new member was initiated and two more were proposed for membership. Arrangements were made for the private celebration of the first anniversary of the society about the middle of next month. A committee, composed of Fred Conde, M. Menzenbach and P. Postler, was appointed to look after the matter.

A Court of Enquiry.

A court of enquiry will soon be held regarding the frequent use of a false fire alarm key in the borough. It is said that a borough official has full knowledge concerning the matter.

Jerry's Calf is Gone.

Jerry Rowe, of Grove street, has lost a very valuable calf weighing nearly two hundred pound. The calf strayed away on Monday and nothing has been heard of it since.

A Temporary Postmaster.

Norman Dunn has been assigned to fill temporarily the position of the late Postmaster Baker, of Scotch Plains. The term of office will expire next June.

THE MISTRESS of the Mine.

or A Woman and Two Interviews.

By Robert Barr.

[Copyright, 1895, by Robert Barr.]

peared with my recent London experiences.

"I want to get into the woods and recover some of my lost tone and my lost faith in human nature. If you can arrange matters with the owner of the mine so that I may stay here for a year or two, you will do me a great favor."

George Wentworth read over the latter part of this letter two or three times. Then he rose, paced the floor and pondered over the matter. "It isn't a thing upon which I can ask anyone's advice," he muttered to himself. "The trouble with Kenyon is he is entirely too modest. A little useful self-esteem would be just the thing for him." At last he stopped suddenly in his walk. "By Jove," he said to himself, slapping his thigh. "I shall do it, let the consequence be what they may." And he sat down to his desk and wrote a letter.

"MY DEAR MISS LONGWORTH: You told me when you were here last that you wanted all the documents in the case of the mine in every instance. A document has come this morning that is rather important. John Kenyon, as you will learn by reading the letter, desires the management of the mine. I need not say that I think he is the best man in the world for the position, and that everything will be safe in his hands. I therefore inclose you his letter. I had some thought of cutting out some part of it, but knowing your desires, as you said, to have all the documents in the case, I take the liberty of sending this one exactly as it reached me, and if anything is omitted, I am the person. I remain your agent,

"GEORGE WENTWORTH."

He sent this letter off at once, so that he would not have a chance to change his mind. "It will reach her this afternoon, and doubtless she will sail and see me."

It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say she did not sail, and she did not see him for many days afterward, but next morning, when he came to his office, he found a letter from her. It ran:

"DEAR MR. WENTWORTH: The sending of Mr. Kenyon's letter to me is a somewhat dangerous precedent, which you must, on no account, follow by sending me letters you have received from any person to Mr. Kenyon. However, as you were probably aware when you sent the letter, we have a certain confidence shoulders or on those of anyone else in this instance. Still, be very careful in future, because letter sending, unabridged, is sometimes a risky thing to do. All the same, you are to remember that I always want all the documents in the case, and I want them with nothing eliminated. I am very much obliged to you for forwarding me the letter.

"As to the managership of the mine, of course, I should like Mr. Kenyon to come back to London. If he is content to stay abroad, and really wants to stay there, I hope you would tell him that Mr. Smith is exceedingly pleased to know he is willing to take charge of the mine. It would not look businesslike on the part of Mr. Smith to say he is to name his own salary, but unfortunately Mr. Smith is very ignorant as to what a proper salary should be, so will you kindly settle that question? I do not like the word pay for such an occupation. Please write down that figure and add £20 a year to it. Tell Mr. Kenyon that Mr. Smith is the salary Mr. Smith assigns to him.

"Pray be very careful in the wording of the letter, for Mr. Smith will not have any idea who Mr. Smith is. Yours truly,

"MARY LONGWORTH."

When Wentworth received this letter, being a man, he did not know whether Miss Longworth was pleased or not. However, he speedily wrote to John, telling him he was appointed manager of the mine, and that Mr. Smith was very pleased to have him in that capacity. He named the salary, but said if it was not enough, no doubt Mr. Smith was so anxious for his services that the amount could be increased.

John, when he got the letter, was more than satisfied.

At the same time Wentworth had been reading his letters, John had received those which had been sent him when the mine was sold. He had believed to find that Melville was not, after all, the owner, and he went to work with a will, intending to put in two or three years of his life with hard labor in developing the resources of the property. The first fortnight, before he received any letters, he did nothing but make himself acquainted with the way work was being carried on there. He found many things to improve. The machinery had been allowed to run down, and the men worked in the listless way men do when they are under no particular supervision. The manager of the mine was very anxious about his position. John told him the property had changed hands, but until he had further news from England he could not tell just what would be done. When the letters came John took hold with a vim, and there was soon a decided improvement in the way affairs were going. He allowed the old manager to remain as a sort of submanager, but that individual soon found out the easy times of the Austrian Mining company were forever gone.

Kenyon had to take one or two long trips in Canada and the United States to arrange for the disposal of the products of the mine, but, as a general rule, his time was spent entirely in the log village near the mine. Within a year had passed he was able to write a very jubilant letter to Wentworth. "You see," he said, "after all the mine was worth the £200,000 we asked for it. It pays, on an average, every year, on per cent. on that amount. This will give back all the mine has cost, and I think, George, the honest thing for us to do would be to let the whole proceeds go to Mr. Smith this year, who advanced the money at a critical time. This will recoup him for his own outlay, because the working capital has not been touched. The mine has more than paid the working of the mine, and all the rest is clear profit. Therefore, if you are willing, we will let our third go this year, and then we can take our large dividend next year with a clear conscience. I inclose the balance sheet."

To this letter there came an answer in due time from Wentworth, who said that he had placed John's proposal before Mr. Smith, but in second the gentleman was pleased with the profitable investment he had made that he would hear of no other division of the profits but that of share and share alike. He appeared to be very much touched by the kind way John had made, and expected him for making it, but the proposed rescinding on his part and Wentworth's was a thing not to be thought of. This being the case, John sent a letter and a very large check to his father. The moment of parting that letter was doubtless one of the happiest of his life, and this ends the formidable array of letters which appears in this chapter.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Kenyon's luck, as he said to himself, had turned. The second year was even more prosperous than the first, and the third as successful as the second. He had a steady market for his mineral, and, besides, he had the great advantage of knowing the rogues to avoid. Some new swindles, he had encountered, but having had experience, had taught him lessons that he profited by in the second and third. He liked his home in the wilderness, and he liked the rough people among whom he found himself.

Notwithstanding his renunciation of London, however, there would, now and then, come a yearning for the big city, and he promised himself a trip there at the end of the third year. Wentworth had been corresponding a month after month, to come out and see him, but something had always interfered.

Taking it all in all, John liked it better in winter than in the summer, in spite of the extreme cold. The cold was a tonic to be depended upon; moreover, it was healthful and invigorating. In summer John never became accustomed to the ravages of the black fly, the mosquito and the innumerable pests of that season. His first interview with the black fly left his face in such a condition that he was glad he lived in a wilderness!

At the beginning of the second winter, John treated himself to a luxury. He employed a little French Canadian horse that was very quick and accustomed to the ice, because the ice of the river formed the highway by which he reached Burntpine from the mine. To supplement the horse, he also got a comfortable cutter, and with this turnout he made his frequent journeys between the mine and Burntpine with comfort and speed, wrapped snugly in buffalo robes.

If London often reverted to his mind, there was one subject that obtruded itself even more frequently. His increased prosperity had something to do with this. He saw that, if he was to have a third of the receipts of the mine, he was not to remain a poor man for very long, and this fact gave him a certain courage which had been lacking before. He wondered if she remembered him. Wentworth had said very little about her in his letters, and Kenyon, in answering, had confessions he made when his case seemed hopeless, was loth to write and ask his friend anything about her.

One day, on a clear, sharp, frosty winter morning, Kenyon had his little sleigh loaded for the mine, and started to Burntpine. After the rougher part of the journey between the mine and the river had been left behind and the pony got down to her work on the ice, with the two white banks of snow on either side of the smooth track, John gave himself up to thinking about the subject which now so often engrossed his mind. Wrapped closely in his furs, with the cutter skimming along the ice, these thoughts found a pleasant accompaniment in the silvery tinkle of the bells which jingled around his horse's neck. As a general thing he met no one on the lonely road from the mine to the village. Sometimes there was a procession of sleighs bearing supplies for his own mine and those beyond, and when this procession was seen, Kenyon had to look out for some place by the side of the track where he could pull up his horse and cutter and allow the teams to pass. The snow on each side of the cutting was so deep that these boys were shoveled out here and there to permit them to pass each other. He had gone half way to the village when he saw ahead of him a pair of horses which he at once recognized as those belonging to the hotel keeper. He drew up in the first bay and awaited the approach of the sleighs. He saw that it contained visitors for himself, because the driver, on recognizing him, had turned round and spoken to the occupants of the vehicle. As it came along the man drew up and nodded to Kenyon gravely, although ordinarily the most polite of men, did not return the salutation. He was stricken dumb with astonishment at seeing who was in the sleigh. One woman was so bundled up in furs that he could see nothing of her, in the cold, but the smiling, rosy face of the other needed no introduction to John Kenyon.

"Well, Mr. Kenyon," cried a laughing voice, "you do not expect to see me this morning, did you?"

"I confess I did not," said John, "and yet," here he paused. He was going to say, "and yet I was thinking of you," but he checked himself.

Miss Longworth, who had a talent for reading the unspoken thoughts of John Kenyon, probably did not need to be told the end of the sentence. "Are you going to the village?" she asked.

"I was going; I am not going now."

"That's right. I was just going to invite you to turn round with us. You see, we are on our way to look at the mine, and, I suppose, we shall have to obtain information from the manager before we can do so." Miss Longworth's companion had emerged for a moment from her wraps and looked at John but instantly retired among the furs again with a shiver. She was not so young as her companion, and she considered this the most frightful climate she had ever encountered.

"Now," said John, "although your sleigh is very comfortable, I think this cutter of mine is even more so. It is intended for two. Won't you step out of the sleigh into the cutter? Then, if the driver will move on, I can turn and we will follow the sleigh."

"I shall be delighted to do so," said the young woman, shaking herself free from the buffalo robe and stepping lightly from the sleigh to the cutter, pausing, however, for a moment before she did so, to put her own wraps over her companion. John tucked her in beside himself, and, as the sleigh jingled away, he slowly turned his pony round into the road again. "I have got a pretty fast pony," he said, "but I think we will let them drive on ahead. It irritates this little horse to see anything in front of her."

"Then you make up speed," said Edith, "and catch them before they get to the mine. Is it far from here?"

"No, not very far; at least, it doesn't take long to get there with a smart horse."

"I have enjoyed this experience ever so much," she said. "You see, my father had come to Montreal on business, so I came with him, as usual, and, being there, I thought I would run up here and see the mine. I wanted—" she continued, looking at the other side of the cutter and trailing her well-gloved fingers in the snow—"I wanted to know personally whether my manager was conducting my property in the way it ought to be conducted, notwithstanding the very satisfactory balance sheets he sends."

"there were no distances on the white-topped hills."

"Your property!" exclaimed John, in amazement.

"Certainly. You didn't know that, did you?" she replied, looking for a moment at him and then away from him, "I call myself the Mistress of the Mine."

"Then you are—you are—?"

"Mr. Smith," said the girl, coming to his rescue.

There was a moment's pause, and the next words John said were not at all what she expected. "Take your hand out of the snow," he commanded, "and put it in under the buffalo robe; you have no idea how cold it is here, and your hand will be frozen in a moment."

"Really," said the girl, "an employe must not talk to the employer in that tone! My hand is my own, is it not?"

"I hope it is," said John, "because I want to ask you for it." For answer Miss Edith Longworth placed her hand in his.

Actions speak louder than words. The sleigh was far in advance, and there were no witnesses on the white-topped hills.

"Were you astonished," she said, "when I told you that I owned the mine?"

"Very much so, indeed. Were you astonished when I told you that I wished to own the owner of the hand?"

"Not in the slightest."

"Why?"

"Because your treacherous friend, Wentworth, sent me your letter applying for a situation. You got the situation, didn't you, John?"

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Report on Our Trade by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics.

Washington, Dec. 16.—The chief of the bureau of statistics reports that the total values of the exports of merchandise from the United States during the month of November, 1896, and during the eleven months ending November 30, 1896, as compared with similar exports during the corresponding periods of the preceding years respectively, were: 1896, $107,767,794; 1895, $69,691,937; 1894, $67,312,581. Eleven months ended November 30, 1896, $888,080,369; 1895, $739,468,300. In November, 1896, the exports exceeded the imports by $59,053,885. In November, 1895, the excess of exports over imports was $16,767,794. During the eleven months ended November 30, 1896, the excess of exports over imports was $266,086,709, and the excess of exports over imports for the corresponding period of the preceding year was $146,131,811. In November, 1896, the imports of gold exceeded the exports $6,924,148, and during the eleven months ended November 30 1896, the excess of imports over exports was $43,860,498. The excess of exports of silver over imports during the eleven months ended November 30, 1896, was $44,985,015.

Grape Preserve.

For this, half-ripe fruit is best. Squeeze the pulp from the skins, put skins in one dish and pulp in another. Boil the pulp until the seeds are loose, then strain. Put the juice back in kettle with the sugar, using one pound of sugar to each pound of fruit. When this has boiled up well add the skins. Boil a few minutes, and you will have a fine preserve, free from seeds. It will keep in any jar.—Ladies' World.

A MODERN KNIGHT.

BY GEORGE THOW.

It was dark enough on the wharf. Lamps here and there showed barely to outline where the quay ended and the black void of water began. No vessels lay alongside, for a coal strike had sent them elsewhere seeking cargo, and the coast harbor was deserted. The cranes stood gaunt and silent, and the coal-trimmers' huts were empty.

A light shone out of the unshuttered window of a wooden box placed close to the quay wall, and bearing the signboard of the Albion Steam Shipping company. Inside, the shipping clerk sat in weary expectation of the Tuskar, due from a German port. He had prepared the customs house papers ready for the captain's signature, had studied the manifest of the cargo, come to hand by post, and, as for the ninth time he refilled his pipe, he gazed mournfully at the hands of the loudly-ticking little ship-chronometer, that ornamented the dingy wall boards. "Ten o'clock," was his unspoken soliloquy, "which means that light as she is—and the captain might have carried all the cargo this trip in his coat-pockets—she won't be here until the tide makes say 12 o'clock;" and after this effort he relapsed into comatose state, tobacco smoke at times slowly filtering out of his mouth. A rush of cold wind beckoned the opening of the door, and a head appeared, hairy, with cloth cap and ear laps tightly fastened down.

"She ain't in sight yet. I bev been to the pier-head, and can't see her anywheres," and the old watchman and rope-binder edged to the box.

A somnolent grunt was the only reply.

"That could Tuskar ain't fit for the work, that she ain't; she's missin' tides reg'lar, now."

With clumsy carefulness the old man opened the red-hot door of the little bogey stove, and added fresh fuel. Although of small size, the shipping box, with its warped boarding, was not near so cold as the wind found entry through a hundred crevices; and it was cold outside. Here and there in the plank flooring knot-holes let in the sound of the sullen wash of the rising tide with its restless bubbling among the piles of the wooden pier. The muffled roaring of the stove, and the ticking of the clock, were the only other sounds to be heard, with the intermittent gurgling as the old watchman laboriously moved his quid.

For a moment a face looked in at the window, and then a light tapping came to the door. Too light for the dulled ears of the old man or the half-sleeping shipping clerk. The tapping changed after some fumbling, and a stiff blast sent the door against the wall with a bang.

"Shut the door, dart you," was the irritable exclamation of the shipping clerk, as the biting piercing wind bit-ing the back of his neck. "You customs men get to think that the whole harbor belongs to you."

"Please can you tell me when the steamship Tuskar is likely to arrive?" was asked in a timid, softly modulated voice.

The shipping clerk jumped up so hastily that the wooden chair he sat upon fell back with a loud crash, and the old watchman, who had been dozing sleepily at the glowing stove, stood erect, and backed into a corner, meantime unceasingly fingering his cap. A lady, young, not more than 18, of slender make, very pretty, even as could be seen partly through the veil she wore, stood on the threshold in a doubtful way, and there was a nervous thrill in her voice that went straight to the not over susceptible heart of the shipping clerk.

"Come in, miss, it is very cold to-night. Yes, this is the agent's office. The Tuskar is behind time this trip. She won't get alongside for a couple of hours or so, even if she did come in. Except anybody on board of her, miss?" he queried, with the least tinge of wonder in his accents.

"But I thought the vessel would be in harbor." There was a suspicion of tears in the voice.

"It's blowin' fresh from the west'ard, ma'am, and that's agin' her, ye sees," interjected the watchman. "She's an old boat, ma'am, and ain't got the legs, askin' yer pardin', ma'am, as she once had."

"Perhaps, if you went home and came down to-morrow it would be better," added the slipping clerk, as he sympathetically regarded the girlish figure, and speculated curiously to himself who on board the old Tuskar could be this lady friends, for a lady she was, although little could be distinguished owing to the heavy and close veil.

"Oh no, I can't go back," was the nervous rejoinder. "I must wait. Please let me wait here. Please, please do."

"No, miss," was the apologetic reply. "You see our boats don't carry passengers as a rule, but"—earnestly—"please take this chair. It's not a very fit place for a lady, but you will be out of the cold."

Half hesitating, and with a slight bow, and a murmur of thanks, the young girl stepped into the office and accepted the proffered chair after its former occupant had assiduously wiped it down with a sheet of blotting paper.

Perched on a high stool, the only other seat in the diminutive office, the shipping clerk stared out into the darkness, as if he expected at every moment to see the green and red lights of the Tuskar heralding for the harbor; while the old watchman resumed his seat on a sack of waste that was part of the engine-room stores of the steamer.

Silence again, broken at last by a shuddering exclamation from the girl.

"It's only a rat," said the clerk, as he followed the direction of her eyes, staring in wide-open anxiety at a corner of the cash box, and the bill of lading book, hurled with a vigorous hand, "The place is overrun with them, ma'am," grumbled the old man. "I have had my supper eaten out of my pocket, when I took a wink or two at nights in the sheds."

Silence again.

Footsteps sounded outside, and a peremptory knock came to the door, followed immediately by the turning of the handle. A tall, stoutly-built man stood framed in the doorway. The girl shrank back nervously, and a low exclamation broke from her lips. The newcomer, of gentlemanly exterior, with an imperious bearing, entered the shipping box, his eyes falling at once on the young lady's companion. In angry tone, regardless of the other occupants, he addressed her:

"You will return with me, young lady. You shall pay dearly for this escapade."

There was no response, but the girl shrank farther into a corner of the apartment, while the clerk and the watchman stared in silent amazement.

Hastily stepping forward the intruder passionately seized the girl by the arm.

"Come away, I say, or I shall drag you out."

"Excuse me, sir," slowly interposed the shipping clerk, "but may I ask what you have to do with this young lady?"

"What, sir!" was the hot response. "This girl is my ward, and has run away from my house. Do you hear, girl," he almost shouted; "come out of this at once."

"No, no," was the shuddering reply, and the girl burst into tears.

"This won't do, you know," interposed the shipping clerk, as he protected the lady from closer to the stranger. "Whether she is your ward or not, she is not going out of here unless of her own accord, and," he added, sarcastically, "if this is your usual little way I don't wonder at her not being anxious to go along with you."

"Curse you, you fool! What do you mean by your interference?" was the angry retort. "I tell you, sir, I'm her lawful guardian, and I shall compel her to accompany me."

"I guess you won't, not so long as I am here," was the quiet rejoinder. "Pardon, lady, but do you wish to stay here until the arrival of the Tuskar? The place is quite at your service."

"I do, I do," was the low reply, amid broken sobs.

"Then, misters" continued the shipping clerk, "this office is not a public one, and perhaps you will have the goodness to get out of it."

"That's your game, is it, put with him," interjected the old watchman, as he gripped his stick threateningly.

"Look here, sir, there's my card. My name is Gordon, and that's my address. I shall expect an explanation from your employers to-morrow morning."

"You can do what you like to-morrow, but out you go to-night," was the reply, in an unconcerned tone. And the two men stood facing each other, the stranger pale with passion and his opponent cool but firm.

The hoarse scream of a steam-horn sounded near at hand, and almost simultaneously came the roar of a deep voice:

"Stand by for a line ashore, there."

"Why, that's the Tuskar!" excitedly exclaimed the old watchman. "She must have crawled into harbor unbeknown to anybody," and with scant ceremony he pushed past Mr. Gordon and hurried on the quay.

Duty made the shipping clerk follow; and he took a few steps, then stopped, as his eye caught an imploring gesture from the girl.

"Come," peremptorily, "out of this, Mr. Gordon," and he bustled the stranger out of the office, locking the door behind him. "Here, stand back," he added, to the excited stranger who was shoved by the throat. "Hands off, or I'll have you into the harbor."

Wrenching himself free, and paying little heed to the curses both loud and deep hurled after him, the shipping clerk hurried to the steamer just then hauling alongside and shook hands with the captain, a young, open-faced, frank-spoken seaman.

"Any passengers on board, captain?" "Passengers!" was the amused response, "not expecting a lot of cork, or the emperor of Germany? Who do you think would take passage on board an old cargo-boat, eh?"

"Well, that's strange, anyhow," said the clerk, gravely. "Come into the office, captain; there's a matter bit of business on," and he led the way to the office. "This young lady, captain," he explained as he threw open the door, "is—"

"Ethel!" "Harry!" burst from the lips of the captain and the girl; and next moment the latter lay sobbing on the breast of the Tuskar's skipper.

A dawn of understanding came over the shipping clerk as he quietly withdrew, drawing the door to behind him. He stood on the pier watching the mooring of the vessel, and reflecting on the mutability of human affairs. How and when the young captain had made the acquaintance of the young lady he could not conceive, "and a well-bred one she is," was the firm conviction he had arrived at.

Half an hour elapsed, and the shipping clerk still stood on guard, still turning over in his mind the strange incident that had happened, a novel departure truly in the prosaic daily round of a shipping office. The second mate had come ashore, cargo-book in hand, and had had his questions as to loading answered; and the old watchman had finished his rope-tending part of the work and stood near by, his thoughts, as could be seen by his frequent glances at the box, running in the same groove as those of his young companion.

A train of coal-laden wagons was backed along the pier, the red-capped "pilot" sitting outside one of the buffers of the foremost wagon, his lighted lamp swinging in his hand.

"Ten wagons here," he sung out to the clerk "bunkers for the Tuskar will be ready for her to make a start first thing in the morning." Jumping off his hazardous seat, and picking his way carefully over the intervening rails to the office, he regarded the shipping clerk somewhat curiously.

"I passed the police station," he went on, "just afore I came away with the train, and I see a big gent a-talking to the sergint. In a great rage he was. They've comin' along," and he jerked his thumb significantly backwards. "Something about a lady, I heard mention," and his eyes sought the closed door of the office.

Without a word the shipping clerk rentered the box, and repeated what he had heard.

The girl clung to her lover, for that they were lovers was plain enough, even to the unsentimental beholder. A few words from the captain put the clerk in possession of the facts, which were plain enough. It was another case of true love, an heiress, a harsh guardian, a detested guardian's son, and a miserable home. Rather than go back to the weary round of precaution the girl tearfully declared she would go somewhere and work for her living.

"Best thing you can do, miss," said the shipping clerk, meditatively, "is to marry the captain right away."

"How can we get a parson at this time of night, man?" was the captain's impatient reply.

"Don't want one; this is Scotland; join hands afore witnesses, accept each other as man and wife, and you're married as hard as fast."

The girl started back, blushing furiously, and the captain stood uneasily.

Cautiously the door opened, and the old watchman put his head in. "Beg pardin," he said, "but them police are coming up the pier with that mister ye had the words with, sir."

"Is the railway man outside yet?" asked the shipping clerk.

"Ay, I'm here," and the red-capped "pilot" pushed in at the doorway, curiosity written large on every feature, but still the girl hung back.

Heavy footsteps rung outside, drawing nearer every moment. The girl made a frightened movement to the captain's side, and their eyes met. A nod from the captain, and—

"Clap on all steam," in a gruff voice, was sufficient for the shipping clerk.

"Come inside, both of you men. Turn the key in the door, Peter," and the old watchman did so, and placed his back to the panels.

"Ye see, it's this way. This is Capt. Harry Thomas, of the Tuskar, as both of yer know well, and this young lady is Miss Ethel Morrison, I believe. I never quite got hold of your name!"

"Ethel Morrison," came in a whisper from the girl.

"Yes, this is Miss Ethel Morrison, and the one is going to have the other for a husband, and the other is going to have the tother for a wife. That is what they call a purpose of marriage, ye understand?"

A couple of nods with wide grins was the reply.

Sharp rappings at the door took place, while the handle was tried; and pressed close to the window panes were the faces of the police sergeant and Mr. Gordon, with as a background the "pilot" hustled by the curious, the forms of some of the Tuskar's crew, and a few stragglers who had followed the policemen along the pier. In impressive accents, Mr. Gordon demanded admittance, and shook the door violently.

"Miss Ethel Morrison takes this man as your lawful husband?" continued the shipping clerk, gravely punctuating each word with a shake of his extended forefinger.

"I will," was the almost inaudible response.

"Ye heard that, Peter, and you, Bill?" Nods again; gravely this time.

"Do you, Harry Thomson, master of the steamship Tuskar, take this woman as your wife?" in a loud voice.

"I do," was the firm response.

"And ye heard that likewise, you two? Speak out, men."

"Ay, I did that," and "Yes, right you were the replies.

"Then I declare you two, Harry Thompson and Ethel Morrison, now man and wife. And those whom God has joined, let no man dare put asunder. Now wait till I've unbarred the door," and knocking at the door, and the wondering faces glued to the window, the shipping clerk took a blank customs bill of entry form and wrote on the plain reverse the necessary certificate of marriage, which was signed by all.

"Now, Captain and Mrs. Thomson," he went on, as he damped a sheet of the copy-book and proceeded to take a boldface impression of the document, "I wish you all happiness. Here's your certificate, Mrs. Thompson. Open the door, Peter."

And later, as the shipping clerk walked homeward along the pier, pipe in mouth, he observed reflectively to himself that he had heard of his eyes fell on the lights of the Tuskar: "Some men have luck."—Idler.

Inconsistency of Mankind.

He needed a shave and he knew it. He started down the street, but had not gone far when he met a friend.

"Say, why don't you get you trimmed?" said he.

Soon another friend came up.

"Have you decided to grow a beard?" asked the last one. "Pretty hot weather for that sort of thing."

A few steps on the bewhiskered man met another.

"Trying the effect of the wind on 'em, I suppose," this one said, with a grin.

At the next corner he met still another.

"Why don't you go somewhere, put on a clean collar, take a shave, and otherwise disguise yourself?" asked this last one in a hoarse tone of voice.

And yet this was none of their business.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CAN OLD MAIDS WAY.

BY WILL ALLEN DROMGOOLE.

Now, things had turned out curiously. For the second time in her life, Miss Elizabeth declared, she "couldn't see her way clear."

"The mask roses and the moonlight," she told herself. "I mustn't forget the moonlight."

As if she ever had forgotten or ever could forget, for one single moment, unless it should be the moment when she would be lying in her coffin, the scent of the old rose that night in a far-away zone, when she stood within the shadow of the burdened branches and told him good-by. And how the moonlight looked on the pale blossoms, and upon the glistening white street outside, and upon his face as he said good-by.

Miss Elizabeth sighed and pinched a corner of the yellow envelope with her small, work-hardened hand. She forgot that her hands were hard, that the scent of the musk roses was in her nostrils.

"He told me," she was repeating the words softly to the moonlight, "that he must have a wife who had money. That his business demanded it and his taste, for all his life had been one of luxury; he would be a torture to me without money. 'It is for your sake, Elizabeth'"—she was repeating his very words—"poor fellow! he said—'Yes, too, would grow unhappy with nothing but love to live upon.'"

It was just one month after her father died, and the estate was found to be insolvent; gone to pieces. He had been considered a very rich man, and she was his only child. She had not known an hour since that had not been a hand-to-hand fight with poverty. Yet, she told herself, it was not death that had taken away her father. Drink, who had entered her life in the form of Abigail Stone and her money.

She remembered how poor she felt that night when she walked back to the empty house without him. How poor, and how alone! Alone to grieve

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

The first annual message of Mayor Fisk to the Common Council, read at the meeting of that body last Monday, and published in another column of to-day's paper, shows that Mr. Fisk has observed carefully of the needs of the city in the way of local government. The suggestions are concise and practical in many ways, and while their attainment would mean a model city, indeed, it cannot be expected that they will all come in the first term of Mr. Fisk. But it is well for us to consider them in the abstract as thoughtful consideration will best determine what is just right when the time is opportune for accomplishment.

Mr. Fisk's idea of a Board of Assessors is along the right line. While Plainfield has an Assessor in Mr. Hubbard against whom but little fault finding comes, it would be much better for the city to have a Board as prescribed by the law mentioned. In many matters city government would be simplified thereby.

The need of a city hall has long been recognized and it is but a matter of time when such a building will be constructed as the conveniences and ultimate economy of the city officials demand.

Nothing adds more to the desirability and growth of a place than good streets and while the thoroughfares of Plainfield are better than most of the neighboring towns, there is still room for much improvement. It is a pleasure to know that Mr. Fisk contemplates a method for better things in this direction, but his advice that extraordinary expenses should not be incurred without the consent of tax payers is also timely.

The suggestion that the West Second street fire department house be sold and the proceeds devoted to establishing a fire company in both the east and west ends of the city is practical and desirable. While $1,200 seems an insignificant sum in itself to pay forty call firemen, instead of having a volunteer department, it is a question whether this would be a trend in the direction of economy and practicability. It is the small sums that count up in the aggregate, and the taxpayers will not countenance indulgence in plans whereby taxes may be increased.

The creation of Department of Public Works has been hinted at frequently of late, and in the consolidation of the street and sewerage committees under one head much has been accomplished in this direction. There is nothing more of a disgrace to Plainfield than the alleged police station house, and the Mayor's suggestion of a new one being provided strikes a sympathetic strain. But if a city hall is erected it would seem best to locate it there and avoid the expense of another building.

We are glad to learn that the Mayor does not believe in the employment of cheap men at low salaries to perform city work. The city should be willing at all times to pay fair compensation for competent officials.

DEATH OF AUGUSTUS W. CUTLER.

The death of Hon. Augustus W. Cutler removes one of the most distinguished characters of New Jersey political life. Though an active partisan in Democracy's cause, his ardor never descended into offensiveness to opponents and in this way he was personally very popular. He was prominent in the councils of the Democratic party and had been honored with elective office several times. Mr. Cutler was well known to many Plainfielders, and his death will be the source of much regret.

GYMNASTIC LOGIC.

One of the veracious chroniclers who find employment on the paper published by the editorial drone writes writes an item to the effect of little boys "staggering around so drunk that they could not stand up," and following up this statement with one that the boys give Chief Grant a trying chase "through backyards and over fences." How boys could jump fences when they were unable to stand up is a bit of logic that the Drone's men are alone capable of elucidating.

THE REASON THEREFOR.

The total value of the taxable property of Plainfield is $12,000,000, whereas that of New Brunswick is only $10,228,000. Who would think that Plainfield, with about 12,000 population, had a higher taxable value than our fourteen New Brunswick Home News.

And who would think of comparing New Brunswick with Plainfield? About the only thing New Brunswick spends money for is to officeholders. Of modern improvements she is woefully lacking, and it is the possession of all these things that makes Plainfield property valuable.

THE NEED OF A REVIVAL

DR. BARNES WANTS A QUICKENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE IN PLAINFIELD.

The People Are Growing Too Material in Their Thoughts and Interests—Turning to God Will Bring Better Times.

Plainfield's greatest need, as pointed out by Rev. Charles R. Barnes, D. D., in his sermon at the First M. E. church, last Sunday, is a grand revival among the church people of the city and the consequent quickening of the spiritual life here. "Plainfield's Greatest Need" was the topic of his sermon last evening and his Scriptural lesson was from Jonah, the part referring to his call to Nineveh to convert the inhabitants of that beautiful city.

Trouble in one part of the body affected the rest of the body, said Dr. Barnes, and so it was with the world, trouble in one quarter was felt in the others to some extent. He spoke of the great interest at the present time in the Cuban rebellion and how that many of the wishes that the war would close came from financial causes and not from motives of humanity as many supposed.

He then spoke of cities and how it was not only the material that made the cities desirable. Morality was a great factor in it.

The world needs a grand revival. The people are growing too material in their thoughts and wishes. It is the same in all portions of the country. I am surprised, continued the speaker, that after these four years of financial trouble that the world does not seem to turn to God more than it does. The people are constantly being told how to get out of their troubles by the best writers of the country, but how little is said about men getting nearer to God as a remedy. Unless there is a general turning to God soon there will be worse times ahead of us. It is righteousness that builds up economy and frugality and with them real prosperity.

What Plainfield needs most is a revival, said Dr. Barnes. Revival means an awakening of the people of God. There are periods of spiritual declination that come at intervals and one is now here. He went on to say that he had not only noticed the need, but the workers in the different churches in the city have told him of it. The week of prayer is at hand. Everyone should pray earnestly for the coming of the revival.

He spoke of the beneficient results of a revival and said that every church in the city should be crowded if all the church members did their duty. He closed with an exhortation to all to do their share in the furthering of the general awakening.

FOR BOROUGH GOVERNMENT.

The result of a meeting of some twenty representatives from different New Jersey boroughs held in Trenton, last week, was the appointment of a committee of seven to receive complaints and suggestions from the different boroughs and use these as a basis for formulating a bill, to be submitted to the joint commission on revision of borough laws appointed at the last session of the Legislature. The committee will hold a meeting at Trenton, January 9th, to consider suggestions for the proposed bill.

BLOOMERS NOT SO NEW.

Mrs. Lillie Devereaux Blake is responsible for the following: "A modern girl declared the other day that she was astonished at the shocking customs of the Puritans. She had, she said, been looking at the pictures of a history and, incredible as it might seem, the Pilgrim Fathers wore bloomers!"

GET AWAKE!

Union county could get recognition in the Legislature if there was a little more push in her Assembly delegation. John Kean is only human. He cannot perform an impossible task. There must be something like united action or Essex and Hudson will take not only the plums, but the tree that bears them.—New York Press.

BIMETALLISM.

Senator Woolcott has sailed for England with the avowed intention of investigating the attitude of European powers as to an international bimetallic conference, a bill to provide for which is now being framed for introduction in Congress.

The Legislature meets on Tuesday, January 12th, and immediately after its organization Governor Griggs will send his message to both Houses.

shake it off

The general belief among doctors is that consumption itself is very rarely inherited. But the belief is becoming stronger that the tendency to consumption is very generally transmitted from parent to child. If there has been consumption in the family, each member should take special care to prepare the system against it. Live out doors; keep the body well nourished; and treat the first indication of failing health.

Christmas Exercises of the Borough Catholics Were Held Sunday and Many Little Hearts Were Made Happy

The last Sunday-school celebration in relation to Christmas tide was held Sunday afternoon in the Sunday-school room of the St. Joseph's R. C. church.

There was the usual large attendance of scholars and friends, which made the event one of pleasure. Father Miller was in charge, while Andrew Kenney announced the programme as follows: Opening chorus, Adeste Fideles; recitation, The Turkey Gobler, Archie Bailey; chorus, Little Bells; recitation, A Chime of Bells, Florence Smith; recitation, Just Before Christmas, Willie Daly; recitation, Hail December, Grover Caster; recitation, Boys Essay on Girls, Harry Casey; chorus, Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star; recitation, Girls Essay on Boys, Mabel Hamilton; concert recitation, Why We Love Christmas, school; chorus, The Holy Child; recitation, Little Paul's Christmas, Frances Laporte; recitation, Seeing Things at Night, Kennett Anderson; address, May Neely; recitation, Santa Claus is Coming, Leo Kenney; recitations, The Little Red Drum, Edward Conshee, Samuel Watson, Martin Whalen and Fred Emmons.

At this time James Bailey, in the person of Santa Claus, made his appearance and amused the scholars exceedingly with his comicalities. Every scholar was presented with a box of candy by Santa, and they also received ice cream and cake.

Father Miller was thoroughly surprised to receive a handsome clock from the Sunday school, and Santa Claus was equally surprised to receive an umbrella. After the latter sang a solo he made his escape, and the last number on the programme was "Over Judah's Starry Plain" by the chorus.

Those who arranged the programme and drilled the scholars were the Misses Fitzgerald, Smith and Mullen and Mrs. Wilkens, and they are deserving of praise of their work.

DEATH OF A POSTMASTER

JAMES A. BAKER, OF SCOTCH PLAINS, PASSED AWAY SUDDENLY.

The Direct Cause of Death Was a Hemorrhage and He Expired Before a Physician Could Arrive—An Active Career.

Many Scotch Plains and Plainfield people were surprised to hear Sunday morning of the death of Postmaster James A. Baker of the former place. His illness was of long duration, but the end was not expected so soon. Mr Baker had gone to his room as usual and at a late hour went to the bath room and had a bath. He was returning to his room and had evidently put his hand on the door latch, when he was stricken down and expired before medical aid could be summoned. Rheumatism, neuralgia and kidney trouble, resulting in a hemorrhage, is assigned as the cause of death.

Deceased was an honored member of Chemical Engine Company and a member in good standing of the Knights of Pythias and Royal Arcanum.

James A. Baker was a man liked by all. He was postmaster under the present administration and naught could be said against him while in office.

He was born in Gallopinette, Schoharie county, N. Y., fifty-nine years ago last May, and after attaining an unusually good education launched out into business. At the age of 14 he went to Albany where he remained until 1864, when he married Miss E. M. Schoolcraft. During the same winter Mr. Baker engaged in the grocery and dry goods business at Scotch Plains, in a small building on the John R. Marsh property, almost opposite his late place of business. From there he went to the store now occupied by Thomas Paff, Jr., and still later erected the building wherein he transacted his business and where he had built up a large and flourishing trade. In connection with his Scotch Plains business he was his own architect for his store building near the Panwood station, which has built up an admirable reputation during the past year or two.

He was secretary treasurer of the Scotch Plains Building and Loan Association and an active member of the M. E. church.

WORK AND HELP FOR THE NEEDY.

Relief Association Encourages the Poor to Help Themselves.

The Relief Association solicits donations of half-worn and discarded garments. Such garments, sent to the Relief house, 544 West Front street, will be a help to the needy, first in enabling the association to provide work for the unemployed in repairing and remodeling the articles donated, and again in providing warm and well appearing clothing at a nominal price to all deserving persons who are in straitened circumstances. The clothing is sold after being mended or otherwise renewed, on every Saturday morning between the hours of 9 and 11 at the Relief house. All who desire to buy may apply in advance for permits.

The Relief Association also desires customers for kindling wood, sawed and split under its supervision by the needy and unemployed. The wood is of good quality and is sold at market rates. All corresponding may be directed to Mrs. Horton, 544 West Front street, will be immediately filled.

The ladies of the Relief Association are struggling to pay off the balance of the mortgage debt on their house. Only about $560 more must be raised to free from indebtedness this headquarters of Plainfield charities. Contributions to this fund will be gratefully appreciated and may be sent to the president, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph, or to the vice-president, Mrs. J. Kirkpatrick Myers, or handed to any member of the Relief Board.

Contributions for the relief work will be welcomed by Mrs. Emil Woltman, treasurer. The association spends from $2 000 to $3.000 per year in the most careful and judicious manner for the temporary assistance of the needy. At this season especially the demands are numerous and urgent.

A Will Probated

The will of Deborah W. Brant who died at her home at New Providence a few days ago, was admitted to probate by the Surrrogate of Union county on December 31st. She left considerable property, the bulk of which was left to Mary Alice Nason, of New Providence, who was appointed executrix of the will. Ex-Mayor John H. Van Winkle, of the borough, was the counsel of the executrix.

Narrow Escape From Optical Injury.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh R. Knox's three-year-old daughter, of Webster place, came very near losing the sight of one eye a few days ago by falling on the point of a pair of scissors. The point struck close to the eyeball and entered the flesh. The serious part of the accident was that a piece of steel was broken off and remained in the flesh. Dr. Ard was called and removed the piece of steel and the little girl is now rapidly recovering.

Common Oatmeal

Sold from barrels or oftentimes in fancy packages (but still common oatmeal) is hard to cook, bitter in taste and overheating to the system. It overtaxes the digestive organs and the body derives no benefit from it—it injures rather than helps.

H-O

gets rid of all that is objectionable in oatmeal and preserves all that is valuable. It makes oatmeal a human food, palatable and easy of digestion, without taking away any of the elements needed for the building up of body, bone and brain. All other oatmeals—"steam-dried," "kiln-dried" and "partly cooked"—leave off just where H-O begins.

A CHURCH STARTS WELL

MONROE AVENUE PEOPLE NOW A REGULAR METHODIST SOCIETY.

Reports Show That the Church is in the Best of Standing With Members and Finances—Want Rev. O'Donnell Retained

The final details of the organization of the Monroe Avenue church were completed Sunday morning when the first quarterly conference of the church was held. It was conducted by the presiding elder, Rev. George W. Smith. First came the election of the trustees which resulted as follows: William C. Burt, James McGee, D. P. Hicks, J. T. Stafford, James Whitely and Adam Neuman. The following stewardesses and stewards were then elected: Mrs. LaRue, Mrs. D. P. Hicks, Miss Leora Wenzel, Nicholas Broyard, Edwin Beekman, N. J. Eaken and J. J. Praed. The pastor then made his report which showed that the church had, at present, 101 members in good standing and all on probation. He also reported the church to be free from debt and in a flourishing financial condition. A general request was made to the approaching conference to have the present pastor, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, returned to them for another year. James McGee was chosen a local preacher.

A sub-committee, composed of Rev. W. C. O'Donnell and James McGee, was appointed for benevolent purposes.

Then followed a communion service and a sermon by Rev. G. W. Smith, the presiding elder, on the text, Luke, 25th chapter, 46th and 47th verses. Four were taken into membership and one probation member was admitted to full membership.

The annual report of the church was made by James McGee. It showed that the expenses had been paid and that there was a nice balance in the treasury. It was a pleasing report and told of the faithful work of the Ladies Aid Society and the other societies of the church. The good work done in the Sunday-school was also mentioned.

Sixth Anniversary.

The sixth anniversary of the Salvation Army in Plainfield will be celebrated Thursday evening. The services will be led by Adjutant Emily March, formerly stationed here as captain. On Saturday and Sunday Ensign MacLaren and Captain Dart will have charge of the services. From the 16th to the 26th a great midwinter camp meeting will be held.

ON A SUNDAY RAMPAGE

AN ELIZABETH MAN TRIES TO DRIVE A HORSE ON THE SIDEWALK.

Had Been to a Place Where Drink Had Befuddled His Brain—Next Morning He Was Sorry and Sentence Was Suspended.

The Sunday peace and quiet of East Front street was disturbed last Sunday by a man from Elizabeth. He drove up to see a friend in the borough and accompanied by that friend, not a young lady, however, went out for a ride. They evidently went somewhere where the Sunday saloon closing law is not as strict as it is in this city, for they came back rather the worse for drink.

They drove out of Fairchild's alley and instead of turning into Front street they went on over to the sidewalk and started to drive along there. Patrolman Myers was in the vicinity and their little experiment came to a sudden end. The Elizabeth man was driving and the officer promptly locked him up for reckless driving and for being drunk. His companion was allowed to depart homeward on foot.

This morning the offender was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza and then gave his name as Joseph Kessler and said that he had recently been employed by the Elizabeth Beef Company. After hearing his story the Judge suspended sentence.

FRACTURED RIGHT LEG.

WILLIAM HICKEY JUMPED ON TO A ROLLING STONE WITH BAD RESULTS.

Acted in a Wagon When the Horse Became Frightened and Hickey Jumped to Escape Being in a Runaway.—Broke a Leg.

William Hickey, a laborer, of 543 West Third street, sustained a compound fracture of the right leg, midway between the ankle and knee, while on his way to work Monday. Mr. Hickey, together with several other men, were in a wagon going to Stirling, where they are engaged in rebuilding the silk mills.

A stop was made at the Arlington hotel to water the horses. In the meantime car No. 5 of the street railway, in charge of Motorman Totten and Conductor Lance, appeared and frightened the horses who attempted to get away.

The men in the wagon, thinking that there was going to be trouble, jumped out in different directions. When Hickey jumped he landed on a large stone which resulted in the fracture. He was unable to move and his fellow-workmen carried him to the car and he was brought to North avenue. From there he was taken to the hospital in the ambulance.

The doctors in charge found the fracture a bad one and they were obliged to wire the bone. He will be confined to the hospital for sometime.

Mr. Hickey is about forty-five years old and he has a wife and two children.

Suburban Resident at Sea.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Scieslinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Scieslinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortlandt, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

Mr. Fisk Outlines His Ideas of City Government.

SUGGESTIONS FOR MAKING PLAINFIELD A MODEL CITY.

The Work of Various Departments Taken up and New Plans For Improvement Offered in a General Way—Wants a Readjustment of the Assessing Method—Relieves Permanent Street Improvement Fund Should be Started—Advocates the Service of Call Firemen at $50 a Year—Underground Wires, City Hall and Many Other Things are Commented Upon.

The following is Mayor Fisk's first message to the Common Council, read at the meeting last Monday night:

Honorable Common Council, City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN:—For the present condition of the city, and what has been accomplished during the past year, I would refer you to the reports of the various officers and committees now on file with the City Clerk.—I shall at this time confine myself to calling your attention to certain matters that, in my opinion, require your prompt and immediate consideration.

TAXES.

One of the first things that the Common Council should consider is the question of the assessment and collection of taxes, and in this connection I would suggest that a special committee be appointed at your first meeting to take up and consider this matter. It is evident to those who have had occasion to examine into the matter, that the method of assessing property for the purposes of taxation should be radically changed. In making this recommendation, I would not for a moment cast any reflection on the present assessor, as I consider him one of the best, and a most conscientious officer. The property interests, however, are too large and important for any one man to do the work as it should be done. I would therefore recommend the passage of an ordinance, creating a Board of Assessors, as provided by the statutes of this State, and would call your attention to an act to provide for a Board of Assessors in cities of the third class, page 227, chapter 202, of the General Laws of 1890. This law provides for the appointment of a board of five members, to consist of four to be appointed by the Mayor, with the consent of the Common Council, no more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party, and no two of wh m shall be appointed from the same Ward, and the fifth to be elected by the legal voters on a general ticket, at the annual charter election.

In addition to the assessment of taxes for general purposes, this board would have authority to take control and charge of all awards for damages in the taking or damaging of lands for public improvement, and making all assessments for benefits required by any law or laws, by reason of such improvement, or by reason of the laying out or opening of any street, road, highway, &c. The city should be provided at once with a complete set of tax assessment maps, and all assessments should be made by block and lot number and not by street number.

Your committee should also be instructed to consult with the Board of Education, and arrive at some method of co-operation and conference between this Board and the Common Council in advance, for fixing the rate of the school purposes, as I consider it only right that the Common Council, as fiscal body, should be notified and consulted before having a peremptory demand made upon them, by the school laws, for such taxes they must honor, without taking into consideration the requirements of the City in other respects. (Attention was called to this by Mayor Mead in 1889.)

They should also be instructed to communicate through the County Board with the authorities in other municipalities in other parts of the county, and arrive if possible at a uniform method of assessment, so that the city shall not be called upon to bear more than its just portion for State and county purposes.

The collection of unpaid back taxes should have immediate attent on, and the necessary steps should be taken at once to put the machinery in motion for their collection, as provided by the present laws of this State.

In regard to the finances of the city, I may have occasion to address you later, after the treasurer makes his report for the fiscal year 1890, but pending the issuing of that report, I will pass the subject for the present.

THE CITY HALL.

The question of the erection of a municipal building, to be used for a Council room, court room, jail and city offices, should be considered and acted upon without delay, and a committee appointed at once to select a site and to secure plans. Under the present laws the Common Council are authorized to spend $30,000.00, to be raised by an issue of bonds for this purpose, and, in my opinion, the Common Council should proceed at once to act under this law, and secure for the city this much-needed improvement.

STREETS.

The question of street cleaning, repairs, and permanent improvements requires the most careful and serious consideration. The outgoing council did not deem it advisable to fix, any amount to be assessed by the present council for the permanent improvement of streets, as the present needs of the city were such that, in their judgment, they did not see, taking into consideration the needs of other departments, how any sum could be appropriated out of the money raised by the general fund for this purpose.

You are authorized to appropriate, from time to time, out of any unappropriated funds, money sufficient to clean the streets and make necessary repairs. There are now in the city about seventy miles of streets, about twenty-five of which are macadamized. There are a number of streets that should be permanently improved, but for this purpose you must provide the necessary funds, either by assessment on the property directly benefited, or the issuing of street improvement bonds. I would suggest that a fund be created, as I understand has been done in some other cities, out of the back taxes collected, and that a certain portion, say two-thirds of the cost of any new street improvement, be paid directly by assessment on the property owners, and one-third out of the fund. I have noticed the time to look up the laws in regard to the matter, but am under the impression that the statutes of the State provide for the creating of such a fund.

I would not deem it advisable to raise money for street improvements by an issue of bonds for any great amount, without first submitting the question to the legal voters of the city, either at the charter election, or a special election called for the purpose.

The condition of our streets might be greatly improved by the co-operation of the property owners taking a pride in keeping the portion of the street in front of their respective properties clean and free from leaves, papers, etc., and in this connection would suggest that the street committee co-operate with our Town Improvement Society.

An important matter for the committee on streets to take into consideration is the flagging and curbing of sidewalks. The ordinance requires that in certain sections of the city, which are now built up, these sidewalks should be laid at once. There are a number of places on important streets, where this ordinance has not been complied with, and the street commissioner should be directed to serve the required notices as soon as practicable, and the weather will permit the work to be done, directing such, delinquent property owners to lay their sidewalks at once."

TREES.

The beauty of our city and the health of the city depends a great deal on the care and proper location of the trees. The laws of 1883, page 67, chapter 288, provides for the appointment of a commission of three freeholders, who shall serve without compensation, and who shall have the exclusive and absolute control and power to plant, set out, maintain, protect and care for shade trees, in any of the public highways of the city, the cost and expense of caring for such trees to be borne by the general tax, to be raised by the city, and not to exceed the sum of one-tenth of one mill on the dollar.

I recommend that your committee carefully look into this matter, and if in your judgment such a commission seems advisable, I will take pleasure in making the necessary appointments.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The fire department is one of the best equipped in the State as far as apparatus is concerned. All of the apparatus is now concentrated in the centre of the city. The extreme western part of the city below Plainfield avenue has grown very rapidly and needs better fire protection: also the Netherwood district east of Richmond street. I would recommend as soon as it is possible to do so the erection of a building west of Plainfield avenue and the locating there of a hose wagon and the small hook and ladder truck; and in the near future the erection of the erection of a building with a combination wagon for hose, chemicals and two ladders. The East Second street fire headquarters are sufficient for the accommodation of all the apparatus needed immediately in that section of the city, and the West Second street house now used by the Alert Hose Company and Hook and Ladder Company should be sold, and these companies could be located as suggested above.

I would call your attention to the fact that under the present volunteer system by next October the time of required service of all but about twenty-five men will have expired. In my opinion instead of opening the doors for further enlistments, we would recommend that the Council authorize the appointment of the necessary number of men to man the different apparatus to be known as call men, and paid at the rate of $50.00 a year. This would require about forty men, and would only add to the expenses of the department about $1,200.00. There are a number of exempt firemen who would gladly give their services to the city in this way.

OVERHEAD WIRES.

The overhead wires, especially in the business streets of the city, should be put under ground as soon as it is practicable to do so. I have already had conferences in regard to this matter with the Electric Light Company and with the Telephone Company, and would recommend that negotiations be entered into at once with these different companies, as well as with the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies, to have their wires placed under ground within this portion of the city.

PUBLIC WORKS.

As soon as practicable a Department of Public Works should be created, with one responsible head, and the street work, sewers, disposal beds, and all matters of this character should be placed under the control of this department, as these matters are all of such a character that one superintendent can take charge and save the expense to the city of more than one high-salaried officer.

The sewerage system now being practically completed, you should see to it that an ordinance is passed requiring all property owners on the line of the sewer to make connections, and all cesspools and vaults should be ordered to be thoroughly cleaned and filled up.

POLICE.

For the condition of the police department I would refer you to the annual report made by the Police Board of last year. As recommended above, a new station house or jail should be provided at once, and pending the erection of such a building some other temporary provision. I would recommend that the lease of the present building used for that purpose, be renewed only from month to month.

As soon as practicable a police-alarm system, similar in character to the fire-alarm system, should be introduced into the City especially for the protection of the outlying districts, and a patrol wagon should be provided for the use of the department. Later in the year, after the organization of the new Police Board, I shall probably take the opportunity to recommend to you such more particularly, in regard to the management of this department.

SALARIES.

In regard to fixing the salaries of the officers and employees of the city, I would suggest that the committee having this matter in charge look carefully into the matter, and adjust the salaries in accordance with the work or services required in each particular case. I do not believe in the appointment of cheap men, at low salaries, but the city cannot afford to pay salaries unless it receives the requi lte amount of services in return, and like ev ry other business, we must take into consideration the amount that we can afford to pay, and try to secure the most competent men to fill the places at this amount.

In conclusion, I would recommend and urge upon the members of the Common Council and the members of the several committees to take up the important matters, at once, and act on them as promptly as possible, consistently with good judgment. I shall be ready and willing at all times to act with the members of the Council, where my services can be of any help to them, and trust that you will never feel any hesitancy in calling upon me.

Hoping that our relations may always be harmonious, and that we may always realize the duty of working together for the best interests of the city, I am,

Yours very truly,

C. J. FISK,

Mayor.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I have only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I employ none but skilled workmen and am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my business, as I do not clothe the greater portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work. Look at my business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertisement for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe in warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and same stone any cheaper and have it done.

KEEPING AN OLD CUSTOM

Y. M. C. A. HAD OPEN HOUSE ALL DAY YESTERDAY.

Gymnastic Exhibitions in the Afternoon and an Amusing Entertainment in the Evening Made Up the Programme.

Ever since the Y. M. C. A. took possession of their new building it has been their custom to keep open house on New Year's Day. This year was no exception. There were a score of members at the building only too glad to welcome strangers. In the afternoon Physical Director Heywood arranged a little programme for the members of the gymnasium, and it was witnessed by a large number of members and their friends.

First came a number of exercises on the apparatus and a bar bell drill. After that came some competitive events. The first event was the high vault, and Rev. W. C. O'Donnell was the winner, clearing the bar at six feet, four inches. Walter Long and Frank Richards tied for second, vaulting five feet, eight inches.

Putting the shot was the next event, and George Proctor Smith had every thing his own way. His put was thirty-eight feet, one and three quarter inches. Mr. Marcley was second with thirty-three feet, six and a half inches, while Long was third with twenty six feet, seven inches. In the high jump, G. P. Smith and Walter Long tied, both clearing four feet, eleven inches. Marcley was second with one inch lower.

Messrs. Barcley and Sink, of the New York Y. M. C. A., gave an exhibition of their work on the rings and high bar. They did some very wonderful things and received a regular ovation from the spectators.

A basket ball game betwen the team from the business men's classs and the regular team, resulted in a victory for the latter by a score of 4 to 2, after a very exciting game. Morraller threw the two goals for the regulars from the field. O'Donnell made the one goal from the field for the business men. The playing of the business men's team was especially good. Mr. Heywood refereed.

In the evening, the Star Course entertainment was the attraction. Mr. Spedon, the lightning artist and caricaturist, entertained the large audience very delightfully with his drawings rectilaltus. He sketched the pictures of several of the audience to the delight of the rest. His picture of the young woman and the young man of the period seemed especially to please the audience.

Found in a Coal Box.

Some unknown man, poorly dressed and evidently a tramp, went to Michael Moyanhan's house in West Dunellen, yesterday, and asked for something to eat. The fellow looked the picture of poverty, and the kind-hearted women folks of the house fed him freely and also gave him 20 cents in change. It was then learned that that the man was wanted for robbing a place near Bound Brook. He was traced to the Harris Lane school house, where he was found crouched in the coal box and later taken to Bound Brook.

FRANKLIN COUNCIL ELECTS.

Wren Townley to be the Presiding Officer For a Year.

Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., celebrated New Year's Eve in a lively manner. The committee appointed for the occasion provided a tree upon which were placed all sorts of toy presents suitable to every one present, and Harvey Thorn, as Santa Claus made the distribution. After each one had received a present all hands enjoyed a smoker.

The following officers were elected to serve the council during the next six months: Past Councilor, P. T. Bogert; councilor, Wren Townley; vice-councilor, Wm. Symons; Warden, John Jones; conductor, Samuel Fenner; inside sentinel, Chas. I. Young; outside sentinel, George Townley; recording secretary, H. M. Cooke; assistant recording secretary, H. R. Thorn; trustee eighteen months, P. T. Bogert.

Run a Hair Pin in Her Head.

Mrs. Charles Dodwell, of Dunellen, who attended the dance held in the Ulrich building, Thursday evening, fell while dancing and sustained a painful injury to her head which was due to the fact that she had a silver hat pin in her hair, which caused the wound when she fell down. The injury is not a serious one, although she is confined to the house.

—The horse attached to C. W. Lines' mason wagon became frightened while standing in front of Justice Wash's office Saturday a. m., and ran away. The runaway collided with a wagon in front of Barnes's store and both wagons were damaged by the collision. The runaway horse was caught at the corner of Second street by Frank Randolph and Willie Robinson.

—Although it is some distance off, the Mountain Park Inn will be open again on June 1st and it is stated upon most excellent authority that the trolley will be run to and pass the Inn before that time.

MAKING OF A CHURCH.

MONROE AVENUE CHAPEL NOW A REGULAR METHODIST SOCIETY.

The Act of Evolution Accomplished at the Watch Services in the First M. E Church—What Was Said and Done.

Expressions of true fellowship and good-will were characteristic features of the Union watch-night services held Thursday evening under the auspices of the First, Grace and Monroe Avenue churches, in Vincent chapel.

The services were of greater significance from the fact that at that time Monroe Avenue chapel became a church, and the large attendance and enthusiasm manifested made the meeting one of the best ever held.

The forepart of the evening from 9 to 10 o'clock was devoted to the organization and on the authority of Bishop Andrews, appointed Rev. W. C. O'Donnell as pastor of the new church.

Mr. Smith congratulated the new church in being able to take up advanced lines of work free from debt, and with property worth not one cent less than $16,000.

Dr. Barnes then read the list of members of the new church, which starts out with a membership of over one hundred, in addition to several who are on probation. This list was transferred to Mr. O'Donnell, after which the doctor made a few remarks somewhat as follows:

"This is the organization of a church and not a club. We, as Methodists, recognize the importance of the Divine influence on the world.

"A church to be successful must be a spiritual one and I urge you to make this church spiritual, and let all your services tend in that direction. Another essential qualification is that the members must be courteous. It has been said that the Holy Ghost teaches manners, and a man born of God is nig.-born. Don't join the church with the idea of letting other people do the work.

"A third essential point is that a church must be active to be successful. It must not be a place where people expect to be carried to Heaven on flowery beds of ease, and it is no market-place for idlers.

"Liberality is the fourth qualification, not for pecuniary gain, but because 'It is more blessed to give than to receive,' so give liberally.

"Lastly, for permanent success, a church must have chronic enthusiasm.

"You will notice by taking he first letters in each of the above essential qualifications that you have the word scale, which means steps. By ascending these steps I have mentioned you will attain spirituality."

Dr. Barnes, of the mother church, in transferring the property to the new church, spoke in substance as follows:

"A parent rejoices in the progress of a child. Our church at one time had two children, but some time ago the youngest child asked for its portion of the inheritance, and North Plainfield now has Grace church. Now the oldest child has come to us and asked for our consent that she may go to housekeeping, and we have granted their request."

Dr. Jackson, who gave a review of the history of Monroe Avenue chapel, a sketch of which appeared in The Daily Press a few days ago.

He spoke of the erection of the Epworth House by James McGee at his own expense, and he paid a glowing tribute to the late George W. Anglemman who, with the former, was instrumental in starting the chapel.

Mr. Jackson then stated that the members were pledged never to mortgage their property and to always maintain it as a Methodist Episcopal church.

He then transferred the deeds, properly made out, also insurance policies for $10,000, which expires in 1897, '98 '99.

W. C. Burt, president of the Board of Trustees of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, accepted the papers and thanked all on behalf of his church.

The response was made by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, who said in part:

"Tonight my feelings are mingled with gratitude and hope. How grateful we ought to be to God for the way He has led us. We often rehearse our troubles, when we should emphasize our blessings.

"With strong hope for the future, there is nothing but brightness and glory, and the great Captain of our Salvation calls us out into the work. It is not a human work, but God's work, and with pluck, push and patience, together with God's promises, we should do a mighty work.

"We are to use weapons forged in the Methodist Episcopal church. I love our church and I love every disciple in it.

"There ought to be a Bible in every family in our church, and our great ideal should be the saving of souls.

"I thank Dr. Barnes. Presiding Elder Smith and the mother church for their kindness, and I promise you that you shall be proud of your child."

Rev. H. J. Johnston, of the Grace M. E. church, extended fraternal greetings. His remarks were as follows:

"The thought in my mind at present is, Declaration of Independence, which is a little saucy, but very apt. In this case it has been granted to the older brother. I hope it results in the display of all his virtues. There is now a chance for the mother church to grow in grace.

"It is a pleasure for me to stand on this platform and look down on Brother O'Donnell.

"A church to be successful must be a warm one, for the church that is like an ice box is like a Manitoba blizzard. You can get more out of a man if you treat him kindly, than if you lick him.

"We should now strive to build our links stronger, and not separate them. I say God speed you. We will be with you in advancing grand old Methodism."

After the singing of a hymn, the social hour was enjoyed, during which time refreshments were served. After the social a praise service preceded the sermon, preached by Rev. G. W. Smith. His text was taken from Isaiah 44:3 4-5, and his remarks were based on the thought of the spiritual equipment of God's church.

He laid great stress on the importance of receiving the Holy Ghost and thereby possessing the real heritage of the Christian Church. The power of speech, Christian and courage were dwelt upon, and many helpful thoughts and suggestions were given. By way of advice he urged the new church to let the baptism of God's Holy Spirit rest upon them, and to let the thought that "I belong to the Lord" settle all matter of dispute.

The closing part of the service was then devoted to praise, prayer and testimony, during which time a large number took part. Thus it was that the old year passed away and the new year came in, while in words of praise all were thanking God for His richness and mercy.

NEW FIRE HORSES RUN AWAY.

The Driver Lost Control of the Reins and Couldn't Hold Them

The new team of horses purchased recently for the hook and ladder truck of the fire department, ran away Thursday afternoon and it was with difficulty that they were caught. Driver Henry Wierenga was driving them out of the house on East Second street, and was going to Alert's house for the exercise wagon for the purpose of giving the horses some exercise.

When he reached the street he slipped on some ice and fell down. The team seemed to realize what had happened and they pulled their driver the full length of the building. He was unable to hold the horses and was obliged to let them go.

It happened that Driver Townley was near with his team and the exercise wagon, and he started down West Second street after the runaway team. The latter went from Second street through Liberty street to Front street.

Just below Plainfield avenue on Front street, they ran upon the sidewalk and a hay carter named Gray caught them before they could get away. In the meantime Driver Townley and Harry Bush arrived, took charge of the horses and brought them back. There was only the slightest damage and that was to the reins, which were broken.

A Good Investment.

The New Jersey Mutual Realty Co. are offering a limited amount of their stock for sale and in view of the splendid location of their property lying as it does between this city and Bound Brook and fronting on the tracks of the C. R. R. of N. J. and Lehigh Valley R. R., we can recommend this stock as a safe form of investment. Messrs. A. D. Thompson and J. D. Runyon, of this city, are among the stockholders. Mr. Silas D. Drake, the founder of the thriving town of Lorraine, is manager of the company and is putting in the best efforts of his life in pushing its plans. The property was purchased at a low figure and if sold for farming purposes alone would yield a handsome profit. It is said that the town of Lorraine turned four dollars for every one invested and if this does only a fraction as well, will make a handsome profit. Their office is at Bound Brook, N. J., where full particulars will be given.

Lectures.

The next University Extension lecture will be held in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church on the evening of January 12th. Dr. Biggs will begin his lectures on "The Vital Forces in Modern History."

Dr. Steane will start his lectures on the International Sunday-school lessons in the Y. M. C. A. hall on Monday evening, January 11th, after a vacation for the holidays.

—The Board of Education of North Plainfield have purchased through F. S. Menzel, of West Front street, a Kranich & Back, baby-grand piano, for use in the Public High School. The piano is expected to arrive this week.

DANCED AS A YEAR WENT

CHARMING HOLIDAY EVENT AT THE PARK CLUB HOUSE.

Members and Guests of Club Participate in the Light Fantastic Toe and Usher Out the Old and Welcome in the New Year.

Ninety-six went and ninety-seven came and still the Park Clubites danced on. It was the holiday dance of the club and a delightful affair, indeed. As has been the custom of the club for several years past, the dance was held on New Year's Eve in the club house on Washington avenue. It is rarely that the charming little ball room of the club looked as pretty as it did on Thursday night. Janitor Israel Jones has been hard at work for some time in decorating the room with evergreens in a manner befitting the occasion. The evergreen roping was draped and festooned from the cornice and the angles in the ceiling while the walls were half hidden be hind the green branches.

It was like all other dances at the club, greatly enjoyed by all who were present. The dancing began at about nine o'clock and continued with hardly an interruption until long after the new year had made its appearance and ninety-six, a most successful year at the club, had come to an end.

The patronesses for this delightful affair were Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mrs. Samuel Townsend, Mrs. S. St. John McCutchen, and Mrs. Edward Douglass. It was arranged by the regular entertainment committee of the club which is composed of S. St. John McCutchen, Walter McGee, Laurens H. VanBuren, F. O. Ball, A. L. C. Marsh and William N. Runyon.

Among those present during the evening were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Howell, Mr. and Mrs. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Ball, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. James Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Lyman, Mrs. L. W. Serrell, Mrs. W. B. Fisher, Mrs. E. W. Waring, Mrs. Foster, of New York, Mrs. E. P. Williams, Mrs. Eli Long, Mrs. Walter McGee, the Misses Marion Henderson, Ethel C. McCutchen, Blanchard Randolph, Clifford Cooley, James Murray, Everett J Peck, Allan Wilson, Charles Swayze, Howard Terrill, and Mr. VanHerwerden.

A CHARMING LUNCHEON.

Mrs John Hetfield Entertains at Her Park Avenue Home.

One of the charming social events of the holiday season was the pink luncheon given by Mrs. John M. Hetfield, at her home on Park avenue, Thursday afternoon, in honor of her niece, Mrs. Dr. Baldwin, of Newark, who recently returned from a bridal tour.

The spacious rooms were richly decorated with greens, while the prevailing color of pink was given prominence through the use of carnation pinks and pink roses. The table was also prettily decorated with exquisite taste.

The luncheon was served by Stephenson, the caterer, and a menu of excellence was enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Hetfield received and introduced the guests to her niece, in whose honor the luncheon was given. Those present were:—Mrs. Dr. Baldwin, of Newark; Mrs. J. M. Hetfield, Mrs. William Sandford, Mrs. Albert Darby, Mrs. G. F. Brown, Mrs. James Middiedith, Mrs. J. W. Richardson, Mrs. J. P. Homan, Mrs. Andrew Manning, Mrs. T. S. Davis, Mrs. J. H. French, Miss Grace Yerkes, Miss Eleanor Demarest, Clarence Hetfield, of Plainfield; Miss Belle Grover, of Newark; Mrs. J. M. Crane, of Cranford.

Bills for Election Services.

In answer to an inquiry, Corporation Marsh has written a letter to City Clerk MacMurray expressing the opinion that the bills of members of the Boards of Registry and Election against the city should be made out under section 236, page 109, of the election pamphlet furnished by the Secretary of State. This will settle a much involved question among the members of the boards in this city.

ENDEAVORERS WATCHED

THE OLD YEAR OUT AND NEW ONE IN WITH SONG AND PRAYER.

Impressive Service Held in the Seventh Day Baptist Church New Year's Eve—An Inspiration for the Coming Year.

Promptly at 9 o'clock New Year's Eve, Endeavorers from Plainfield and vicinity were wending their way to the Seventh Day Baptist church, where they were to hold a union watch meeting. The occasion was one of pleasure and profit. The first hour and a half was devoted to the social side of the evening, during which light refreshments were served in the Sunday-school room.

At 10:45 o'clock the notes of the church organ announced the opening of the watch meeting, and soon the church was filled by the typical Endeavor audience eager to sing and pray out the old, and usher in the new year.

The service of song, led by Mr. Horace Martin, was followed by Rev. Arthur E. Main, who conducted the devotional exercises, and Rev. L. E. Livermore, who led in earnest prayer.

There was sunshine in the hearts of the Endeavorers, as usual, and when Mr. Martin sang the Washington favorite, "Let a Little Sunshine In," asking the audience to join him in the chorus, they responded with genuine spirit.

L. E. Anthony, leader of the service, prefaced his remarks with an earnest prayer; and then took for his text numbers 33:5, likening the journeyings of the children of Israel to the life of the Christian. The leader spoke very earnestly of the importance of seeking forgiveness for the sins of the past year, for the many opportunities for actual service neglected. "Christians," he said, "have been called of God to be a peculiar people, separated unto His service; in the world, but not of the world. The children of Israel had but one home in the land of Egypt. The Christian has but one home in the land over yonder, where eternity will be spent with Him who has promised a home to those who are faithful unto the end."

At the close of the leader's remarks, request was made for testimonies from all present; and many Endeavorers availed of the opportunity to acknowledge the goodness of God's mercy as experienced in their lives during the year so fast drawing to a close.

After the singing of the hymn "Only Remembered by What We Have Done," the leader called for sentence prayers. The old year, with its varied experiences, its joys, its sorrows, its opportunities, was almost gone; a new, an untried twelve months, was about to be ushered in, and the solemnity of the moment was keenly felt by each one present.

As they waited, the silence broken only by the voice of prayer, the tolling of the church chimes solemnly proclaimed the death of 1896, and then the same chimes joyfully rang in the new—the 1897.

A Serious Joke.

Friday morning about 12:50 some malicious person pulled fire alarm box 151, at the corner of Linden avenue and Grove street, and in some manner extracted the key before the department arrived. There was no fire and the whole thing was a practical joke. It is said that the person who pulled the box is known. This sort of thing has been done several times, and it is about time that steps were taken to put an end to it.

Endeavor Officers.

The following officers have been elected to serve the Church of Christ Christian Endeavor Society from January 1st: President, Mabel VanMiddlesworth; vice president, Rev. B. W. Hand; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. Hand; recording secretary, Percy Hand; treasurer, H. VanMiddlesworth.

At the Boys Club.

The Boys Club held a watch meeting at their club house on Sycamore street, Thursday night. An entertainment occupied the early part of the evening, in which William Skinner, Peter Galbraith and Robby Runyon gave a dumb-bell drill, Joseph Galbraith a clog dance, Chas. Meyer and John Cline an exhibition in tumbling and a song by Wm. Skinner. After this John Butscher gave a history of the club and Mr. Wadsworth, Mr. Tiffany and Superintendent Mason spoke a few words. Refreshments were served at 9:30 and then the boys adjourned to the gymnasium where they amused themselves until 12 o'clock.

Upset an Oil Stove.

Friday about noon an alarm of fire was sent in from Box 15, corner of Washington and East Second streets. It was learned that Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Roder's young child, while playing about the house, had upset an oil stove. Mr. Roder was home at the time and he quickly rescued his child from fatal injury, and while doing so, his hands and hair were quite badly burned. As soon as possible he threw the stove out doors, before any futher damage resulted.

SOCIAL SEASON OPENED

THE NEW YEAR STARTED PLEASANTLY FOR SOCIETY PEOPLE.

The First of the Subscription Dances Held in the Casino and Successful in Every Way—A Time of Pleasure for Participants.

With the new year came the opening of the social season in Plainfield for, on Thursday night, the first of the subscription dances at the Casino of the Country Club, which are to take the place of the Assemblies this winter, was held, and the new year was tripped in right merrily.

It was the first large dance of the winter, and it was attended by many of Plainfield's society people and a number of guests from out of town. The Casino presented a charming appearance. Evergreens were tastefully hung about the walls and open fireplace, while the platform was half hidden behind a profusion of palms and other potted plants. The ballroom was largely used and the colors, red and green, prevailed in the decorations. Red bunting was hung here and there amid the green and made a very pretty effect.

The following patronesses received: Mrs. Orville T. Waring, Mrs. James F. Scott, Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy, Mrs. John T. Baker, Mrs. Harry V. Borden, Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mrs. John B. Dumont, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. John Doull Miller and Mrs. William J. Roome.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Raymond, Miss Grace Cooley, Miss Gertrude Baker, Miss May Evans, Miss Wharton, of Pittsburg; the Misses Holly, Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Strong, Miss Holly, of New York; Miss Harris, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Miss Bessee, of New York; Miss Edith Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy, the Misses Tracy, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. H. Streull, Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Miss Reinhart, the Misses Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Depew, Mr. and Mrs. Kleinek, Mr. and Mrs. Harry V. Borden, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Yates, Miss Bessie Ginna, Miss Smock, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Saunders, Miss Hall, Miss VanBoskerck, Mrs. Orville T. Waring, the Misses Waring, Mrs. John Doull Miller, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Ames, Edward M. VanBuren, Miss Gertrude Andrews, Miss Minnie Wilson, Miss Middleditch, Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Hedges, Miss Butler, of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Roome, Mr. and Mrs. James T. Scott, Burritt Shepard, Rutherford Shepard, James Middleditch, J. H. P. Wharton, Howard W. Leebe, H. Reeve Stockton, Howard Huntington, Orville G. Waring, L. E. Waring, Jr., Dr. Patton, Percy Stewart, Walter Stewart, Clifford McCoy, Westervelt Clark, of New York; F. L. Huntington, A. G. Henderson, Dr. F. Ard, Laurens H. VanBuren, Irving G. West, Saumel P. Hall, Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, Edward Finch, H. C Metzger, S. C. Miller, T. R. VanBoskerck, F. B. Fish, Jr., Lambert Fish, Clarence Peck, Siegfried Arens, Mr. Messer, Mr. Bryan and Mr. Ryder, of New York.

Elliot furnished the music. A few minutes before midnight the dancers formed in line for "Sir Roger De Coverly" and to the strains of the old fashioned music the old year was danced out and the new danced in. Immediately afterwards supper was served, after which dancing was resumed and continued until about two o'clock.

The second dance will be given at the Casino on the twenty-fifth of January. The dances are under the direction of Clifton Wharton, Jr., Orville G. Waring, Howard Huntington, Harry V. Borden and Mrs. Howard W. Beebe.

Married at Netherwood.

A home wedding took place Wednesday evening last, at 7 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nielson, of South avenue, Netherwood, when their daughter, Marie, was united in marriage to William Hosinger, of Scotch Plains, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hosinger. The Rev. S. P. Simpson, pastor of St. Stephen's church, officiated. The bridesmaid was Miss Minnie Hosinger, sister of the groom and the best man was Charles Hallfeld, of Cornwall-on-the-Hudson.

The Cadi's New Year's Party.

City Judge DeMeza had his little New Year's party yesterday and this morning. Otto Fathoven and Tenis Vail were locked up Thursday night for being drunk and disorderly and fined $3 each yesterday morning. George Sebring was also fined $3 on Saturday for the same offence. The trial of Peter Sender for violating the back ordinance came up this morning, and the judge reserved his decision for a week.

—One of the handsomest calendars received at The Press office is that of Weeks & Part, flour merchants, No. 4 Stark street, New York.

—Stakes were driven Thursday for the new fire department building on Harrison street, North Plainfield, this morning. Pope Brothers, of the borough, have the contract.

A FEAST OF YULETIDE.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVITIES OF THE FRIENDS HELD WEDNESDAY.

Young People Made Especially Happy, and the Older Ones Entered Into the Spirit of the Occasion, Too—Programme.

The Christmas-tide festivities at the Friends' First-day school, held last Wednesday, a source of great pleasure to all, and all the good things attendant upon such an occasion was provided. In addition to the members of the school there were present many friends, who entered heartily into the joyous event. The enthusiasm of the scholars knew no bounds and their young hearts were gladdened with a feast of good things.

A programme of excellence was given as follows:—Concert reading, "The Children's Offering," the school; recitations, "The First Christmas Tree," May Wiegman; "The First Christmas Tree in New England," Mamie Mead; "Sing a Song of Santa Claus," Harvey Vail; "The Electric Santa Claus," Robbie Mattox; "The Christmas Doll," Anna Morrison; "Birdy's Christmas Breakfast," Arthur Kiedering; "Scaring Santa Claus," Harvey Morrison; "Our Visitor," Clifford Vail; "Keeping House in a Shoe," Bessie Pound; "Christmas Morning," Horace Vail; "Santa's Cake," Edith Mattox; "Old Santa Claus," Ethel Lorton; reading, "Polly Anderson's Holiday," Mabel Vail; concert reading, "The New Year," the school. A recitation was also given by Percy Roes. During an intermission in the programme, Aaron M. Powell gave the scholars an interesting short talk.

The superintendent, Miss Margaret Vail, made a few remarks and then invited the members of the school to the upper room, where they were served with ice cream and cakes in abundance. Afterward they returned to the meeting room and received gifts of candy and oranges. The refreshment committee consisted of Mrs. Clara S. Bushmore, Mrs. Keturah S. Palmer and Mrs. M. Jennie Pound.

A BOWLING TOURNAMENT.

Plainfield Catholic Club to Enter the Diocesan Contests.

Interest in bowling among the members of the Plainfield Catholic Club has been slumbering of late, but now it has awakened at the prospect of some exciting games. The Diocesan Union, in which the team from the club bowled last year, will set again this winter. A meeting was held at Elizabeth on last Monday night and the Plainfield club was represented by two delegates, Patrick Revelle and Richard Burmingham. The league will probably consist of six teams, with men in each. Besides the club from this city those that will probably enter are the Elizabeth Y. M. C. I. A., the Orange Valley Y. M. C. I., two teams from Newark and one from Orange, the Y. M. C. I. of that city. All the clubs, but the latter, are in favor of the five-men teams, the Orange club want ten men on the team and have been holding out on that account, but it is likely that at the next meeting of the union, on Monday night, they will consent to the will of the majority. The games will begin as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made, which will be about the middle of January.

There is also to be a pool tournament, which will be contested by the same clubs. There will be one representative from each club and Plainfield will probably be represented by John Daly.

In the City Court

Carmino Colluci, a bottled beer peddler from Westfield, was arrested by Boundsman Fredericksen Wednesday for peddling beer without a license. The accused gave bonds in the sum of $200 to appear for trial on January 11th.

Robbing Freight Cars.

The officials at the new freight house are on the track of marauders who have been visiting the freight yard and trying to steal the contents of some cars that have laid there. The unknown visitors have paid several visits to the freight cars in the yard, but it was only recently that a clue to their identity was secured.

The safety deposit vaults of the First National Bank are convenient and safe for people who have valuables that they do not want to keep about the house.

HAPPINESS WAS THERE.

CHRISTMAS TREE ENJOYED AT THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

The Family of Little Homeless Ones Spent an Hour in the Fairy Land With Old Santa Claus Wednesday Afternoon.

It would have made one's heart glad to have been present at the Children's Home Wednesday afternoon to witness the little tots enter into the festivities of their Christmas celebration.

It was 4 o'clock when the tree, brimful of good things, was lighted. At the same time the little children formed in line and marched into the large room, where everything so bright made them dance with delight. As they marched around the tree they sang a familiar carol.

Then they formed about the tree and received the numerous gifts provided. Some were given dolls and pretty picture books while others were remembered with toys of all kinds. Frequently exclamations of joy would be heard. One bright little tot was given a large picture book, and she exclaimed in her sweet childish way, "Ain't that sweet," and so it was with each one, for they all evinced a strong affectionate feeling for each other and were glad to share the mutual enjoyment of the affair. It was fully an hour before the tree had thrown aside its brilliancy, and during that time there was joy.

Those who managed the affair with Mrs. Hendrickson, the matron, were Mrs. Kimball, Mrs. Cahoone, Miss Serrell, Miss May Serrell, and Miss Ella Serrell.

Their were a number of guests present who shared the pleasure of the children and their kind words left a lasting impression.

In addition to the above gifts, candy and oranges were given to each of the twenty-three children in the home.

To any one who witnessed the celebration, it can safely be said, that they have never regretted all that has been done for the Children's home, and too much cannot be said in praise of the management.

CYCLERS DOWN THE DRUMMERS.

A Hot Bowling Match on the Ulrich Alleys Wednesday.

The Cleveland Cyclers and a team from the Independent Fife and Drum Corps bowled a match game on the Ulrich alleys, Wednesday, and the Clevelands won by a score of 1333 to 1165. During the contest the room was well filled with spectators. The following are the individual scores:

CLEVELANDS.		FIFE AND DRUM CORPS.
Suthen	112	Adams, F	122
Hollis	107	Adams, J	117
Babcock	114	Adams, H	98
Meighin	137	Bodine	135
Smith	120	Adams, A. G	108
Overbaugh, W	126	Bolsterli	110
Wilson	159	Coddington	141
Overbaugh, H	114	Cox	147
Nowlen	114	Bolsterli	91
Riely	147	Adams, H. G	91
	1333		1165

Be it said to their credit that Blatz rolled the highest score for the Fife and Drum Corps, 147, and Wilson with 159 for the Clevelands.

The American Queen.

The American Queen and the year 1897 come in arm in arm, and American women are to be congratulated upon the addition of so attractive a magazine to the list of publications devoted to their interests. The first issue of The American Queen, that for January, is a home journal in the truest sense of the term, covering in its twenty handsomely illustrated pages the best and dearest phases of a woman's life. Each department is a pocket magazine in itself, the whole being supplemented by a charming love story "The Grand Duchess." Beautiful pictures of the five new ladies of the White House, etc. The American Queen is published by Edward White, Plainfield, N. J.

A Dance at White House.

The second annual ball of the Independent Order of Foresters, of White House, was held Wednesday, and S. D. Frazee, of this city, furnished the music. The attendance was unusually large and the dancing was continued until the wee-small hours this morning. A bountiful supper was served at midnight. Many guests were present from High Bridge, Neshanic, Glen Gardner, Newark, Somerville and other places. The Misses Cora Conover and Stella Haver, of Round Valley, were among the most prominent entertainers.

Plainfield Workmen in Demand.

A. D. Phillips, Plainfield's well-known electrician, is completing a system of electric lighting, together with electric bells, etc., in a handsome residence at Pennington. The order for the work was taken by a Plainfield competitor, and for some reason he failed to go on with it. Mr. Phillips was then selected by the owner of the house to complete the work, which he is doing in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

Remembered Their Superintendent.

Fred Hardgraves, superintendent in Bushmore & Company's planing mill, was very kindly remembered by his employes Wednesday. A beautiful and costly set of drafting tools in a plush case was presented to him, and he responded feelingly.

EXEMPTS ARE AROUSED

OLD FIREMEN TO MAKE A PLEA TO THE LEGISLATURE.

To Vigorously Oppose the Movement to Remove the $500 Tax Exemption Which They Now Enjoy—Corporation Influence.

A largely attended meeting of the Exempt Firemen's Association was held in their rooms in the Coward building last week, when the proposition made in some quarters that the tax exemption conceded to firemen who have served seven years in a department be abolished by Legislative act, was taken up and vigorously discussed. The unanimous sentiment was that this proposition was an injustice that almost borded into an outrage on exempt firemen who have hazarded life and undergone many inconveniences in the performance of fire duty, the only compensation being the exemption from $500 taxes and jury duty. The proposition is said to eminate from Frank Bergen of Elizabeth, and will be pushed at the approaching session of the Legislature by several members who have been interested in the movement. But it will be met with an energetic opposition coming from exempt firemen all over the State. Newark and Patterson exempts have already taken the initiative in the movement against it. Plainfield is bound to figure prominently in the matter because the work of opposing the adoption of any such law will be invested in the Legislative committee of the State Exempt Firemen's Association, of which Daniel W. Littell, of this city, is the chairman. Mr. Littell told a Press reporter this morning that the reason of Mr. Bergen's interest and activity in pushing the scheme was easily explained. There is a manifest desire in some quarters to compel corporations to pay a larger share of taxes since public expenses were on the increase, and Bergen, an extensive corporation lawyer, was seeking to provide a method whereby tax receipts might be increased and the idea established that it was not necessary to assess corporations any more than now.

To compel all firemen who are exempt and own property in the State to pay taxes on this present exemption would increase tax receipts very materially.

But it is the firm intention of the firemen to oppose the act in the Legislature with all the vigor and resources that they can call to hand.

UNITY LODGE ELECTION.

Members Who Will Fill the Chairs For a Term.

Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., met in regular session in their rooms in the Babcock building Wednesday and elected the following officers: Chancellor commander, F. Green; vice chancellor, George Radford; prelate, I. N. Wyckoff; master of work, J. D. Anderson; K. of R. and S., A. B. Dunavan; master of finance, J. VanWinkle, Jr.; master of exchequer, A. Andrews; master at arms, F. Putnam; inner guard, Wm. Johnson; outer guard, T. C. Smith; trustee, L. R. Blackford; representative to grand lodge, F. Humpstone; alternate representative to grand lodge, J. W. A. Bauersachs. The above officers will be installed at the regular meeting night on Jan. 6th.

A Colored Wedding.

A pretty marriage took place at 615 West Third street, Wednesday at 9:30 o'clock, when Miss Laura Anderson, of this city, and George Carter, of Fluvannia, Va., where made as one. An informal reception followed the ceremony, after which the bride and groom left on a late train to spend their honeymoon and begin the new year in Boston. Included in the list of specially invited guests were Miss Jennie Batts, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Wyckoff, Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Johnson and Messrs. Champing and E. Johnson.

Mrs. Carney Dead.

Mrs. Catherine Carney, of Elizabeth, died at the home of her son, Special Officer Dennis Carney, of 321 Cottage place, Tuesday night. She was in her seventy-sixth year. The funeral took place this morning at the house at 8 o'clock, and at St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. The interment was in St. Mary's cemetery.

Her Third Birthday.

Dorothea Andress, of East Second street, celebrated the third anniversary of her birthday Wednesday afternoon, and a few of her young friends were present to help her make the occasion a memorable one. The young hostess received several appropriate gifts from her friends in commemoration of the event.

Looking For a Man.

Constable Robert Mattox has gone to Easton and Bloomsbury, today, to look after and, if possible, catch a man who skipped away "by the light of the moon" from an instalment agency, here, a few days ago.

A Little Fellow Hurt.

After having been confined to the house for two weeks with illness, Chrissie Mobus went out to have a little sport on a sled Wednesday afternoon. While playing he fell and inflicted a gash on his face. It was necessary for Dr. Probasco to take several stitches in the wound.

RITES OF LIFE'S ENDING.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE AT MRS. D. C. HORTON'S FUNERAL.

Dr. Honeyman, a Long Time Friend of the Departed, Spoke Words of Praise of Her Life and Drew Consoling Conclusions.

The funeral services of Mrs. Deacy C. Horton, widow of the late Stephen D. Horton, were held from the house, 55 Somerset street, Wednesday afternoon at 2:30. Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, of the Crescent avenue church, read appropriate Scripture selections and offered prayer. Remarks were then made by Rev. W. H. Honeyman, who was a neighbor of the departed for thirteen years. Mr. Honeyman advanced several helpful thoughts. In the first place he spoke regarding the domesticity of Mrs. Horton and what a faithful, prudent wife she had been. She had no desire for the frivolities of the world.

Secondly, he spoke of her kindness of heart in the performance of many deeds. As an illustration, he recited the first funeral mentioned in the Bible, when Abram buried his wife Sarah, and showed what comfort Abram derived from the fact that he believed God's promises.

In comparison he said that the promises of God was just as sure today as in the early ages.

An important thought brought out was that there is no such thing as mishap, but that everything is ordered and God governs all. It is not His wrath but mercy He afficts. In closing the speaker gave words of encouragement to the living and urged them to accept Christ now and not wait until it was too late.

A closing prayer was then offered by Dr. Richards, after which those present viewed the form of the departed for the last time. Interment was in North Plainfield cemetery.

Those who served as pallbearers were H. N. Spencer, Alexander Thorn, Stephen Staats, and David Pope.

IN HONOR OF SCHOOL FRIENDS.

Miss Nora L. Rockwell Entertained a Party of Young Society People.

Miss Nora L. Rockwell, of East Front street, who is home from boarding school spending the holiday season, gave a charming dance Wednesday in honor of a few school friends who were guests at her home. Among those present were: Miss Chackwin, Miss Morris, Miss Griswold, of Ossining, N. Y., Miss Hoffman, Sing Sing, Miss Georgi, Jamestown, N. Y.; Miss Heinish, Newark; Lieutenant Heinish and Mr. Buckley, Mt. Pleasant Military School; Mr. McDonald, Riverview-on-the-Hudson; George Watson, New York; Mr. Hoffman, Somerville; Miss Bessie Cornwell, Miss Alice Haines, Miss Mabelle Smith, Miss Laura Lovell, Miss Grace Bonney, Miss Grace Kampman, Miss Grace Miller, Miss Cordelia Miller, Miss Pauline Sandford, Mr. McClure, Thomas Smith, George Cornwell, Albert Runyon, Maxwell Honeyman, H. C. Van Emburgh, Charles Squires, Howard Miller, Van R. Schuyler, Erwin Cooley, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Sandford. The music for dancing was furnished by Rogers.

Riker; trustee, Mrs. Sarah Page; representative to State Council, Mrs. Tillie S. Riker.

New Fire Department Team.

The new fire department team recently placed on trial by Bainey, the Newark horse dealer, has been purchased for the hook and ladder truck. The "Phil" horse was taken by Bainey as a part of the consideration. The team will now be clipped and systematic care will be given to prepare them for doing good work in the department.

Their Fun Went Up in Flames.

Little Tommy Neuman, af West Third street, went over to his cousins the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Day one night recently to see the latter's Christmas tree lighted up. The candled were light and everything was in readiness for a glorious time when the tree took fire, and for several minutes there was a lively time. George Green carried water from the pump in the yard and deluged the place, but the tree and the cotton ornamentation only burned brighter, and finally the tree was thrown from the window, and the fire extinguished in the mud.

HOPE OF BEAUTY GONE.

JUSTICE NASH TO PUT A BILL BOARD IN THE RESIDENTIAL ELYSIUM.

And Two Little One Story Stores Will Also Find a Place in the Fashionable Section—The Residents Thereof are Indignant

The fashionable people who live in that residential elysium of Plainfield of which the section of Park avenue, Seventh and Eighth streets, and Crescent avenues is a part, have been hoping against hope that Justice Vincent W. Nash would not take the action that he proposed doing on the little triangular piece of ground which he recently purchased of Noah Delaney, situated between the Revere house and All Souls church; but Wednesday they witnessed the act that doomed all their hopes to disappointment. It was the arrival of a half dozen workingmen equipped with picks and shovels and the commencement of the work of excavating for the two one story stores and the ten-foot-high bill board which the justice said he was going to build on the property. The facts leading up to the action were told exclusively in The Daily Press a few days ago.

The publication of the story caused a tremor of indignation to run through the people who live in that immediate vicinity and by the fact of All Souls church adjoining Mr. Nash's recently acquired possession, the feeling of exasperation permeated the whole city through the members of the congregation who worship there.

Residents are noted for their pride in keeping the residential appearance of the city in consonance with the general prosperity that characterizes its citizens, and with the prospect of two squatty stores and a bill board ten feet high, to be covered with multi-colored lithographs of frowsy soubrettes, aspiring tragedians and melo-dramatic scenes, placed in their very midst, their rage can better be imagined than explained. There was talk and talk, and if there is any truth about one's ears burning when hard things are said, Justice Nash's ears must have been red hot for the last few days.

But it was to no avail, the justice said that he bought the property for investment and profit and the best way to get a return was to put something there that would do this. Of course, it was out of the question to build a house only eleven feet deep, the size of the lot, and it was impracticable to grow agricultural products their with such weather as winter brings. Then Mr. Nash's business instinct impelled him to build the stores and bill boards. And that is just what he is doing. And their is great wailing and gnashing of teeth of all the inhabitants of the elysium.

Some of the church people visited Mr. Nash and sought to have him change his mind, because the stores and bill board would cast an awful reproach on the beauty of the church edifice, and besides in the early morn it would prevent sunbeams from straggling in through the stained glass and casting its pale, but beautiful, glow on the interior of the church. Mr. Nash was not moved by this sentiment, however. George B. De Revere, the landlord of the Revere House, is also much concerned about the new structures, but he has settled down to taking solace in the idea that "what can't be cured must be endured." And all he can do is to hope for the best.

Meanwhile Mr. Nash's workmen are cutting down the three apple trees that graced the triangular lot and the work of building the stores and bill board goes on.

Lot Him Fall in the Street.

A son-in-law of George Demler of Washingtonville, drove a party of friends to the North Avenue station at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday, and on the way home, while passing through Park avenue near Front street, the king bolt on his wagon broke, allowing the body to fall to the roadbed. The driver was thrown into the road way, but he escaped with a few slight bruises.

Salvationists Anniversary.

On Thursday night, January 7th, the officers, soldiers and friends of the Salvation Army will celebrate their seventh anniversary. The meeting will be conducted by the famous Adjutant March of New York. She is also well-known in this city as she was Captain of this corps for over ten months, and no doubt her many friends will be pleased to meet her once again. The Army has done good work since it came to this place.

Red Men Elect.

The foll owing officers were elected by Paugh-Caugh-Naugh Sinque to be of Red Men Friday: Prophet, Chas. Stephens; sachem, W. Kline; senior sagamore, Lewis DeCamp; junior sagamore, Theo. Mason; chief of records, J. H. Carney; collector of wampum, Thos. Osmun; keeper of wampum, P. A. VanFleet; trustee, Andrew Saffron; representative to great council, Chas. Conover.

Edward Dooly, of Watchung avenue, spent New Year's Day with relatives in Poughkeepsie.

COMMUTER RAN AMUCK

TRIED TO TRAVEL WITH PACKAGES ON THE JERSEY CENTRAL.

Railroad Detectives Insisted That He Was Trying to Help Out a Package Expressman—Wouldn't Let Him Ride.

In the endeavor to suppress the package expressmen between the towns along the line of the Jersey Central railroad and New York, the railroad corporation is having a hot time in encounters with commuters who are in sympathy with the expressmen. Especially pugnacious have been the commuters from Elizabeth in their intention to outwit the railroad detectives in trying to stop the local messengers, and every day this week there has been a lively time in the Jersey City depot between the two forces. Monday night the commuters won by sheer force of numbers, and enjoyed a laugh on the railroad people; Tuesday night they tried the same trick again but were met by a detail of police and one of their number arrested, and then the railroad officials smiled grimly. Last night the example of the night before had had a salutary effect and only one defiant commuter tried to run the gauntlet, and he met with an effectual the squelching. This man was E. Runyon, of Elizabeth, and though he gave the detectives, all of whom live in Plainfield, a good deal of trouble, they finally compelled him to desist in his purpose.

On the boat that left New York at 4:45 was Mr. Runyon and Joseph Sheppard, fifteen years old, of Elizabeth, a messenger said to be employed by Mr. Stoddard, of Stoddard's New York and Elizabeth Express. Mr. Runyon told newspaper men that he stopped in Stoddard's office in Cortlandt street, and engaged a messenger to carry his parcels. When Mr. Runyon entered the ferry station in Jersey City he was carrying a handsatchel and two packages. A big crowd of commuters were in the train ahed expecting fun. The passengers who preceded Runyon went through the aisle of policemen to their train. But when Mr. Runyon was within a few feet of the gate, Railroad Detectives Large, Bitterbusch and Blackford, who all reside in this city, got in his way and refused to move. They told Mr. Runyon they had orders not to let him through. Mr. Runyon protested that he was a private citizen and wanted to take the train for his home. He tried to dodge by the three detectives, but failed.

After two or three minutes of argument Mr. Runyon turned and went through the waiting room to the restaurant. The boy Sheppard and the detectives followed.

Mr. Runyon, while he ate, said: "I am a florist and live in Elizabeth. I thought I had a right to employ a boy to carry packages. I have a ticket for Elizabeth. I am not a commuter, and, therefore, not bound by commuter's condition. These are my parcels. I have a ticket without conditions as to parcels. What right had they to stop me?"

The railroad detectives said they believed Runyon did not own the parcels; that he took them from the boy to carry through the depot so as to aid the messenger and Mr. Stoddard.

When Mr. Runyon finished his steak, he started for the ferry slip. Detectives followed. At the Communipaw station Mr. Runyon bought a ticket for Newark. A local train started at 5:45. Mr. Runyon picked up his parcels. Large, Bitterbusch and Blackford got between him and the track. Mr. Runyon made a most determined effort to board the train but was landed on the platform and had his head nearly on the platform, when Large got hold of the tail of his overcoat and yanked him off. When the railroad employes comprehended the situation the train went on.

Runyon then checked his satchel for Newark, and leaving it at the depot, took his departure, and later boarded a Pennsylvania train from Jersey City.

Whitfield Frazee, of this city, does one of the largest package-express businesses along the line of the road, but somehow or other he has evaded any direct trouble with the railroad people as yet, and is carrying packages, though not in the same old manner of openly boarding trains with a pack on his back.

Independent Fife and Drum Corps Elects.

A meeting of the Independent Fife and Drum Corps was held Tuesday evening at the club rooms. One new member was elected. The business of the evening was the annual election of officers, which resulted as follows: Major, F. L. Manchester, president, J. E. Vail; vice-president, J. H. Adams; secretary, L. B. Bodine; financial secretary, David Bodine; treasurer, Frank J. Blatz; fife sergeant, F. Carver; fife corporal, Joseph Bolsterli, drum sergeant, J. H. Adams; drum corporal, Daniel Force; business manager, E. E. Vail; sergeant-at-arms, J. Stryker.

WANT CLEAN CROSSINGS

BOROUGH COUNCIL HEAR COMPLAINT ABOUT STREET COMMISSIONER.

Prominent Citizens Allege That the Crosswalks Are Not Passable in Wet Weather. —Lively Meeting All the Way Through.

The rain or something else had a deteriorating effect upon the members of the North Plainfield Council, last Monday, for when Mayor Hegeman called that august body together in regular adjourned session only Councilmen McLaughlin, Valiant and Woolston responded to the roll call.

The financial statement of the clerk showing recent collections to be $203.50, and a total deficit of $544.94, was read, received and ordered on file.

Tax Collector H. H. Spencer submitted his usual report and it was filed. A recapitulation showed that of the 1896 taxes, $25,894.73 had been collected and of the levy of 1894, $1,301.91 had been gathered in. The 1895 taxes had been previously acknowledged.

John Harman, claiming to own land fronting on what is known as the east end of Regent street, petitioned council to have that section of the thoroughfare vacated. The matter was referred to the street committee.

George Townsend and others petitioned the council for a crosswalk at Myrtle and Sycamore avenues.

Mr. Valiant, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, reported the location of three additional electric lights on Coddington avenue; nine on Mountain avenue and one on Leland avenue, the same to begin burning from Jan. 1. The report was filed.

The Street and Public Health Committee, through its chairman, Mr. Woolston, reported verbally that the Watchung avenue extension was nearing completion and the only drawback at present was the scarcity of stone.

Mr. Valiant presented a petition asking for street lights on Wilson avenue, between Cedar street and the "Stone House."

Mr. McLaughlin raised a point by asking whether or not the avenue had ever been accepted by the borough, and he was told that it had not.

Mr. Woolston favored giving the petitioners the required light, and Mr. McLaughlin considered that by so doing would only be to establish a poor precedent.

Mr. Valliant wanted the matter referred to the Street Committee with power. Finally the opinion of Corporation Council Chas. A. Reed was asked, and he replied that if the people living on that thoroughfare wanted light they should be willing to have the avenue accepted by the borough. In short the borough had no right to order it lighted. A resolution accompanied the petition, but the resolution was lost.

The action of Warren Engine Company in electing William Debele a member was confirmed.

Mr. Valiant asked for information concerning the tax receipts and the disposition of the same, and Clerk Arnold replied that the borough's share of the $25,000 would amount to about $3,000 in round numbers. The same Councilman also offered resolutions, which prevailed, substantially as follows: That the note for $1,025.25 be renewed for 30 days and the same be charged to the light account; that the note for $1,108.40 be renewed for 30 days and charged to the fire department account; and that the Mayor and Clerk draw a warrant for $800, due on account of work done on the Watchung avenue extension.

Mr. MacLaughlin offered a resolution to the effect that those objecting to the vacating of Wilson avenue make known their objections early this month, when a special meeting of the Council will probably be called to take final action in the matter. The resolution was adopted.

A street light at the corner of Chatham street and Watchung avenue was authorized.

Mayor Hegeman appointed, and the Council unanimously confirmed, Rev. W. E. Honeyman as a member of the Board of Health for five years, his term of office to begin on January 15, 1897.

Contractor Dowd called attention to the gross walk at Duer street and Lincoln place, also the walk in front of the Wooden property, which he said had not been cleared of snow and ice this winter. "For the last six years," said he, "we waded through snow and slush in the winter, but the Lord has been good and melted off the recent snow."

Mr. Woolston thought it eminently proper for people living adjacent to crosswalks to keep the walks clear.

Mayor Hegeman scored the street commissioner by declaring it to be a disgrace the way some of the walks are allowed to remain. He said: "There is absolutely no excuse for the street commissioner not doing his duty, and if he don't, we'll get some one who will. The condition of many of our walks is a disgrace to the borough."

There being no further business the Council then adjourned.

ENTER COUNCIL OF 1897.

City Fathers Organize for the Present Year.

COUNCILMAN DUMONT CHOSEN PRESIDENT.

The Streets and Sewers Put Under One Committee With Mr. Frost as the Chairman—Councilman Baker to be the Watch-Dog of the Treasury—A Committee Appointed to Work With the Mayor For a City Hall—Other Business of the First Session.

The first meeting of the new City Council for 1897 was held last Monday and the members took their seats as follows:—Messrs. Barrows, Baker, Stebbins, Frost, Runyon, Randolph, Serrell and Westphal. Mr. Tolles was the only member absent.

City Clerk MacMurray called the meeting to order, and Mr. Barrows nominated J. B. Dumont for president. Mr. Westphal seconded the nomination and by motion the clerk cast the ballot for Mr. Dumont.

The latter, on being escorted to the chair by Messrs. Barrows and Westphal, thanked the members for the honor bestowed. He said that there were few cities as clean in municipal government as Plainfield, and he hoped it would be kept so. He thought that inasmuch as the delinquent tax list is large and money is needed, it would be wise to have a permanent committee on assessment and collection of taxes. He also thought it wise to elect a clerk from year to year, though some legislation in an attempt to lengthen the term had been tried.

J. T. MacMurray was then re-elected clerk, and W. V. Mandy as janitor.

Mr. Barrows moved that Daily Press and Courier-News be designated as official papers of the city. Mr. Barrows also moved that the rules of 1896 govern the council for 1897, and that the street and sewer committee be consolidated, that there be a committee on assessment and collection of taxes, and that the clerk be authorized to secure the necessary stationery for the council and committees. All of the above motions were adopted.

President Dumont then announced the following standing committees:

Finance—John T. Baker, Harold Serrell, Ralph I. Tolles.

Street and Sewers—George H. Frost, Ralph I. Tolles, Elliot T. Barrows.

Police—Elliot T. Barrows, William N. Runyon, William A. Westphal.

Fire and Buildings—Albert C. Stebbins, Charles J. Newman, William N. Runyon.

Aims—William A. Westphal, George H. Frost, Albert C. Stebbins.

Lights and Trees—Ralph I. Tolles, William A. Westphal, John T. Baker.

Licenses—Isaac S. Randolph, Elliot T. Barrows, Charles J. Newman.

Laws and Ordinances—William N. Runyon, Isaac S. Randolph, Harold Serrell.

Assessments and Collection of Taxes—Harold Serrell, John T. Baker, George H. Frost.

Auditing—Charles J. Newman, Albert A. Stebbins, Isaac S. Randolph.

An application from W. H. Wyckoff for the position was received and filed.

Ex-Collector Johnson reported a check of $300 received from the Street Railway Company as fees to the city. A letter was also received from Mr. Johnson, in which he asked for extra pay for collecting the sewer interest taxes, and he asked the Council to fix the amount of compensation. The matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

J. B. Coward stated in a communication that he had had a fire proof vault erected in the collector's office as recommended, at a cost of $300, and he felt obliged to ask the city an additional rent of $100 per year in consequence. This matter was referred to the Finance Committee. The bonds of Constable J. C. Kirkner and Wm. C. Mattox were received, approved and ordered filed and W. Odam applied to the Council for the position of a special policeman and the matter was filed. At this point the first message of Mayor C. J. Fisk was presented and read. It will be found in another column. After it was read Mr. Barrows moved that a copy of it be furnished every member.

Mr. Barrows offered a resolution that a committee of three be appointed to act with the Mayor, President and Council, in taking up at once the city hall matter. Messrs. Barrows, Baker and Westphal was the committee appointed.

A similar resolution was offered by Mr. Barrows regarding the collection of back taxes under the Martin act, and the present committee on Assessments and Collection of Taxes was named, to confer with the Mayor, President and Council.

The matters brought up at the meeting of the old council last Saturday evening, that were referred to the incoming Council, were brought up in due form and referred to the proper committees, to be reported upon later.

Mr. Baker offered a resolution that the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to secure bids for an amount of money not to exceed $24,000, in sewer bonds, the same to be opened at the first meeting of the Council in February. Mr. Barrows thought that two weeks time would be sufficient to receive the bids, as it was a small matter and it was not necessary to wait a month. Mr. Westphal was of a different mind and he thought that plenty of time should be given and that February 1st was soon enough. By a vote Mr. Westphal's motion that the time for opening the bids be February 1st was adopted.

Another resolution was offered by Mr. Baker that the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to have $124,000 sewer bonds engraved and printed by the American Bank Note Company, at a cost not to exceed $300, and the form of the bond to be prepared by the Corporation Counsel. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Serrell asked that all ordinances be referred to the committee on laws and ordinances, and it was so ordered.

Mr. Frost reported on the petition of the Plainfield Sanitary Company for permission to erect a garbage disposal plant. In his judgment he thought that the Board of Health should appoint a committee of three to confer with a similar committee from the Council, in the consideration of the matter. He then moved that the Board of Health be requested to appoint a committee of three to confer with a committee from the Council. President Dumont appointed the committee on streets and sewers from the Council.

Mr. Baker offered a resolution that a sewer note for $3,000 now due be renewed for three months, which was so ordered.

The Council then adjourned for two weeks.

A SATURDAY EVENING FIRE.

An Upset Lamp Made a Lively Blaze for the Firemen to Squelch.

A fire broke out about 6:30 Saturday evening in the house on Arlington avenue adjoining the railroad, occupied by a colored family name Lewis. It was the result of a lamp being upset. An alarm was sent in from Box 13 at the corner of Park and North avenues by Patrolman McCue. The department were quickly on the scene and hard work resulted in the saving of the house, though everything on the first floor was destroyed except a feather bed, a pair of springs and a few other things. The house is a small one, making it difficult for the firemen to work.

Those who saw the blaze at first thought the lumber yard of Boice, Runyon & Co., was on fire, and a great crowd gathered. The firemen, however, did great work in saving the house and the contents of the upper rooms.

During the fire the fire rope was used to good advantage.

Along Legal Lines.

So far, the new year has been a busy one for Justice Nash and Monday he issued summons in a number of suits. Summons were issued in the following contract cases returnable on the 14th: Werner against Johnson, Werner against Moran, Werner against Lalleau, Werner against Wood, Werner against Stevens, Force against Hudson, Thorn against Harold, Thorn against Myers, Tubbs against Martin, Thorn against Bower, Rugg against Pond. Summons were also issued in the case of Delaney against Smith, on contract.

Mr. and Mrs. Nightingale Entertain the Saturday Evening Club.

The Saturday Evening Whist Club was charmingly entertained by Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Nightingale, of Sandford avenue, Saturday evening. The house being tastefully decorated for the holiday season, still retained its beauty.

Eight tables were provided and those who were guests of the club were Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt V. Weed, of Washington Heights, N. Y., Miss Herring, of Baltimore; Miss Holton, of Philadelphia; Mr. Pratt and H. O. Nightingale, of Harvard University, and Edgar I. Serrell, of this city. The first ladies' prize, a brocaded silk couch pillow, was awarded the hostess, Mrs. Nightingale, and a cut glass olive dish, as second ladies' prize was awarded Mrs. Peter Schultz. The first prize for the gentlemen, a pair of sterling silver mounted suspenders, was awarded Peter Schultz, while Assemblyman W. R. Codington, secured second honors, a gold wreath scarf pin, set with pearls. Dainty refreshments were served by Stephenson, the caterer, in his usual pleasing manner, thus making the evening a thoroughly delightful one to all present.

Mr. and Mrs. Schultz, of East Second street, will entertain the club Saturday evening, January 16th.

A HAPPY PEOPLE.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck Returns to Trinity Reformed Congregation.

A large congregation greeted Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., Sunday morning in Trinity Reformed church, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by the pastor, previous to which nine persons were received into membership of the church, four on confession and five by letter.

The singing by the male quartette, Messrs. Robert and Edward Clark, A. Cornish and F. S. Cutter, at the morning service, was thoroughly enjoyed by the large congregation.

At the evening service the Christmas music of the preceding Sunday was repeated by the choir, Mrs. H. E. Rider, soprano; Miss L. Dunn, contralto; Robert Clark, tenor, and Fred. S. Cutter, bass, and was thoroughly enjoyed.

The pastor then delivered an able sermon from Rev. 3, part of the eighth verse—"Behold, I Have Set Before Thee an Open Door."

Primary Teachers.

Mrs. VanName led the devotional exercises at the meeting of the Primary Teachers Union Sunday afternoon, and Miss Shinn, city missionary from the First Baptist church, taught the lesson. Mrs. Dunning, of Bound Brook, who is a member of the Somerville Union, was present, and gave an interesting report of her union. A short business meeting followed, when the treasurer reported 90 cents on hand. It was also stated that the union has at present 32 members.

ARM CAUGHT IN A BELT.

Narrow Escape From Death of a Bound Brook Young Man.

Marley King, a young machinist, employed in the factory of the Graphite Lubricating Company, at Bound Brook, had a narrow escape from serious death Monday morning while adjusting a belt. His arm was caught by another belt and he was carried to the shafting near the ceiling, where hung until the machinery could be stopped. He was taken immediately to the office of Dr. Fisher, where upon examination it was found that his arm was broken in two places and that there was also a fracture of the wrist. These injuries were attended to, and he was taken to his home where he is now doing well.

Sunday-school Officers.

The annual meeting of the executive board of the Sundays-school of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, was held Sunday afternoon and the election of officers took place. The election resulted as follows: Superintendent, Miss Alice B. Spangenberg; assistant superintendent, George Poole; secretary, Thomas U. Cuming; treasurer, J. M. Hawkins; librarian, E. Frank Vail. The reports of the different committees for the year were read and showed the school to be in a prosperous condition. An increase in membership and amount of the offering was shown.

THE JUDGE WILTED HIM

A DEFIANT NEGRO SUDDENLY BECOMES MEEK-MANNERED ENOUGH.

Had Boarded a Central Passenger Train and Refused to Pay His Fare Beyond Fanwood—Took Judge Moore's Warning.

What portended to be a serious affair on train 35, leaving New York at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, while running between Elizabeth and this city, Tuesday, was nipped in the bud by the timely appearance of Judge Charles K. Moore, of Fanwood.

At Elizabeth the train was boarded by a six-foot burly negro who presented a seat in the smoking coach. He had a ticket to Fanwood which Conductor George Terrell took up immediately after leaving Elizabeth. But it was evident that the negro wanted to ride further than Fanwood, and he did not get off at that station.

When Conductor Terrell started on his trip through the cars, after leaving the latter station, he noticed that the negro was still on the train and insisted on his payment of additional fare to whatever place he intended to go.

The negro assumed an insolent demeanor and cocking his feet up on an adjoining seat, defiantly asked the conductor what he was going to do about it if he didn't pay, intimating by his manner that it was his intention of beating the railroad company for passage beyond Fanwood.

Conductor Terrell immediately saw that he had a hard case to deal with in a man who thought that his overpowering brute force would phase the railroad employes and impel them to let him ride rather than to have a scrimmage in ejecting him from a car.

Judge Moore had been an interested witness of the proceedings up to this point and here was where he stepped in and rapidly convinced the negro that he had better pay his fare or else get off the car peaceably.

The Judge got up and went over to the seat the negro was defiantly occupying.

"Make that man pay his fare or get off the train, conductor," exclaimed the Judge, as he carelessly sat down on the arm of the seat in which the recalcitrant man was seated.

This came in the nature of a surprise to the negro and he was just goose to spit out another challenge to hit him off if they could, when the Judge interposed with the remark:

"You know me, don't you?"

Up to this time it was evident that the negro had not recognized him' but at this interrogation he scanned the face of the Judge more closely and his spirit of defiance wilted like the starched bosom of a shirt doused with water.

"Yis, sah," answered the negro in an apologetic tone. "I knows you; youse de gemmen dat sent me to jail for sixty days once. I'll pay, sah."

And the darkey paid his fare.

He got off the train at the North Avenue station in this city casting furtive glances at Judge Moore, as if he feared at any moment he might be cast into a bastile.

A SITE FOR THE NEW CHAPEL.

East Third Street Mission to Have a New Home by June 1st.

A few weeks ago The Daily Press gave the exclusive announcement that a chapel is to be erected on East Third street, under the auspices of the First Baptist church.

Since that time progress has been made in matters of arrangement. The last step taken was to purchase a lot, which is located on East Third street, a short distance above the property now used for the mission.

In a short time ground will be broken and the work of construction will begin.

It is expected to have the new chapel completed and ready for occupancy by June 1, 1897.

CHANGE OF CITY OFFICES.

City Clerk and Street Commissioner Take Those Formerly Occupied by Mayor.

A great change has taken place in the offices leased by the city, in the Coward building, on Park avenue, and it all happened last Tuesday. The City Clerk, Treasurer and Street Commissioner now occupy the large front room formerly used by the Chief of Police and the Mayor, and the two latter officers have taken the offices previously used by the City Clerk and Treasurer. The change was a most sensible one as the City Clerk should have more room.

Street Railway Employes' Dance.

MODERN HISTORY FORCES

DR. RIGGS LECTURES IN THE UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES.

Five Mighty Agencies Are Concerned in Civilization of the World Which Dr. Riggs Interestingly Described Last Night.

The first of the second series of the University Extension lectures given this season was delivered Tuesday by Dr. James F. Riggs, in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church, before a large and appreciative audience. The subject of the course is "Vital Forces in Modern History," and the topic of the firs. lecture was "History as a Moral Science." It would be necessary, in order to do the lecture justice, to give it in in full, as it was so entertaining and delightful in style and so full of bright, fresh thoughts, Dr. Riggs said in part as follows:

"What are the vital forces now felt in modern life? Obviously, it is impossible to present all truth at once, and judgment differs as to relative importance of the various factors. But in this outline five mighty forces are selected and briefly defined as a hint toward a fuller study. It is not our purpose to deny the reality of other agencies, only to emphasize those here named. Modern civilization owes its being and its nature to five living forces; the idea of imperial government, the idea of municipal society and charter privileges, the religious sense and ecclesiastical thought and feeling, scientific progress, inventions and discoveries of all sorts, and education and the intellectual evolution of humanity. I omit war altogether from the vital forces, because it is reactionary, destructive, ominous. I prefer to give time and thought to the agencies which are constructive and beneficent.

"All history is sacred history, i.e., it may be studied and ought to be studied in the light of the highest kind of truth. The acts of God are no less sacred than His words. History as a fine art is no better and no worse than any other fine art. It may be made merely a source of pleasure, like music, painting or architecture. But history as a moral science is a totally different matter. It is not an optional study, but a vital part of the education given us of God.

"We have outgrown one error in method, the folly of an exclusive reliance on narratives, by any writers whatsoever. Many other facts are to be considered; customs, languages, and, above all, institutions. Napoleon said: "History is only a fable agreed upon;" and some persist in taking that view of it. This is absurd. Results argue a cause. Fruit argues a tree. History is a tracing back to their cause the effects which we now see.

"The mind that is burdened to the uttermost with the mere details of history will not be the one to make the most satisfactory analysis of the laws governing those facts. Niagara cannot be appreciated by him who merely examines samples of the water brought to him in bottles. History is a very Niagara of truth, and must be seen in bulk; it must be known and felt as a sublime unit.

"The student is warned to be on his guard in regard to certain points where it is natural to wander in the wrong direction. One allowance should be made for natural vanity in reading any author, as a sea captain makes allowance for the compass. The writer is perfectly fair in considering the rivalry of his own state with others. Arbitrary championship of any pet theory or individual, too, will go far toward destroying the historic value of any document. Power to discern between small and great is needed in a historian. Some writers are apparently incapable of distinguishing the matterhorn from a four-leaf clover, so far as the required space is concerned.

"In history we shall not be lost if we keep in mind certain great elementary moral principles. But these fundamental notions must be fearlessly applied and conscientiously worked out, otherwise they are worthless. The mind must supply an element which neither the facts nor the moral law can ever give. Facts do not make a historian, just as horns and fiddles cannot make a musician. All statements of specific facts must be tested, or modified by a two-fold rule to wit, agreement with the testimony of other writers and of other forms of truth and visible results, or fruit given to the world."

At the close of the lecture Dr. Biggs announced that the conversation hour following the lectures would be held during this course as during the preceding ones, and at the end of the course a written examination would be given to those who desired it. The subject of the next lecture, one week from last night, will be "The Holy Roman Empire."

NIPPING COLD IT IS.

AND AS A CONSEQUENCE ICE SKATING IS SPLENDID.

Ponds in This Vicinity Daily Thronged With Many Young People Who Glide Gracefully About on Steel Runners.

The recent cold wave that has visited this section has put the ponds in the neighborhood in condition for excellent skating and the young people of the city and borough have not failed to take advantage of the situation. The bright moon, which has made the last few evenings almost as bright as day, has added materially to the pleasure by making the evening skating delightful.

New Market pond is in good condition again and it was thronged with skaters Tuesday afternoon and evening. Hyde's pond had its devotees and the mill pond and the meadows, which have been flooded, were both crowded. Smalley's pond was the scene of lots of enjoyment by the large number of skaters present there.

The cold was continued this morning, the mercury falling to 10 degrees above zero in the night. There was no wind, however, but the cold was very biting and the skaters who were out in the evening had to look carefully after their ears to prevent their being frozen.

TIED DOWN IN THE COURT ROOM.

The Case of Johan Johansen Shows the Need of a New Police Station.

The needs of a city hall with a suitable jail attached were made more evident than ever during the last few days. It has been necessary to keep Johan Johanson strapped to his cot for most of the time as he has been very violent when left alone in the cell. Johanson is the insane man who attempted to beat out his brains against the cell door, as was told in yesterday's Press. The only place that his cot could be put was in the little court room as the rest of the building was too small to accommodate it. There he has been kept until Monday when he was released from his confinement and taken over to Morris Plains to be placed in the New Jersey State Hospital there. He was taken over in a two-horse carriage under the care of Sergeant Kiely.

SINGING STUDENTS.

The High School Boys Organizing a Glee Club.

The movement on foot among the young men of the Plainfield High School to form a glee club, as was exclusively stated in The Press some time ago, has at last taken definite shape and a meeting of those interested in the new musical association was held at the High School building Tuesday afternoon. Before organizing it was decided that it would be better to see if there was enough material in the school and so most of the time was spent in trying the voices of the candidates for the club and in singing several short and easy selections. Principal Travell met with the boys and acted as leader. There were eight who expressed a desire to go into the new club and several more who, though not present, are in favor of the forming of such an association in the school. The principal trouble is in securing the necessary tenors.

THE PARK CLUB WHIST TROPHY.

The Ridgewood Club Now Leads All Other Contestors.

The Park Club challenge trophy, which is being contested for by the clubs in the New Jersey Whist Association, changed hands again on Monday evening. The team from the Ridgewood club has been successful for the last three weeks and held the trophy in three contests with other clubs of the association. Monday evening, the team from the Roseville Whist Club played the Ridgewood four and finally defeated them by one point after a very close game.

The only other club in the association, which has not played for the trophy, is the Park Club, the donators of the trophy. The Park four will go to Roseville on next Monday evening to try their hand at the game and play the present holders of the trophy.

Long Time Between Visits.

Edwin Totton, who has been spending several days with his sister, Mrs. Ira G. Hurlburt, of West Front street, left for his home at Nevida, Ia., Tuesday. He left his home three weeks ago last Sunday especially to visit his sister, whom he had not seen before in over twenty years. Mr. Totton likes Plainfield very much as a residence place, but he says the towns in the West are now growing rapidly, and in many instances the style of architecture far excels the eastern cities.

—The officers of Martha Washington Council, daughters of America, will be installed on Tuesday evening next.

GROWTH OF VOLUNTEERS

PROSPERITY HAS BEEN THEIR LOT SINCE THE ORGANIZATION.

Fred Gardner Takes the Place of Commander Booth Who Was Billed to Speak But Unable to Fill Engagement.

Reform Hall was filled to its utmost capacity last evening with a large audience which had assembled to hear an address from the commander and founder of the American Volunteers. Almost a year ago Commander Ballington Booth addressed a large audience in this city and those who heard him at that time were greatly disappointed as were all others present at the meeting Tuesday when it was announced from the platform that the commander could not be with the Plainfield people as he had just returned from a two thousand mile trip through the west and had received notice that he was needed in the north. The commander is somewhat tired out and it was thought best to post pone his Plainfield visit for a time.

In place of Commander Booth, Fred Gardner, of Montclair, and H. G. Smyth, of New York, were present. The principal address of the evening was made by Mr. Gardner and was substantially as follows:

"We are only about eight months old, but during that time we have organized 157 posts with 400 commissioned officers, and 55 staff officers at headquarters. Already we have established three institutions for the convicts of our land. One in New York, one in Chicago and another in San Francisco, with the view of forming another in New York in the very near future.

"One of the great works of the Volunteers is the prison work which is being carried on by Mrs. Ballington Booth. This work is the first of its kind which has been carried on in America by any body of Christian workers and is moving onward by the grace of God with amazing rapidity. The prison work is still only in its infancy, it is growing strong and a work is being held up before the American people such as they have never seen. We are working very hard to give employment to the convicts of our prisons. Nearly 75 per cent. of our long-term prisoners die an untimely death, which is due to the lack of employment.

"The Volunteers of America are deserving of your sympathy. We are purely American and are incorporated under the laws of the state of New York. You can feel assured that any money you may give to us will stay in this country and will be used to help your fellow citizens.

"Perhaps you have heard it said that we are a high toned organization and neglect the work in the slums of our cities, but we are not made of that material, thank God. I will tell you of what material we are made; we are composed of that which prompts us to speak the love of Christ wherever we are, in the palace or in the hovel.

"God is prospering us and we are growing stronger every day. We shall go on with our shoulders to the wheel and shall hasten on the triumphal march which is advancing onward to the kingdom of God."

Captain Merryman, who is to have charge of the post for the next term, was then introduced and spoke a few words, after which a few brief ceremonies brought the meeting to an end.

Run a Nail in His Foot.

Health Inspector P. V. Weaver, of West End Park, met with a painful accident Tuesday afternoon, which confines him to the house. He was in the cellar at his home clearing away a pile of wood when he stepped on a long wire nail, which penetrated his foot. With difficulty he reached the upper part of the house, and his daughter, Mrs. V. L. Frazee, sent at once for Dr. Simpson. An examination proved that the nail had caused an ugly wound, which would need the best of care to heal properly. Mr. Weaver is able to get around the house with a crutch.

Had No License for the City.

A man who gave his name as James Clancey was caught peddling without a license on Somerset, this side of the brook, last Tuesday, by Patrolman Totten. He was locked up and arraigned before the City Judge, this morning, and pleaded guilty to the charge of peddling without a license. He explained that he did not know there was any ordinance against it and agreed to leave town at once. The Judge decided to suspend sentence.

Mr. Boehm Branching Out.

The store formerly occupied by Hallock, the hatter, is being altered by the owner, I. H. Boehm, and in a short time the latter will use the store for his house furnishing goods department. Arches will be cut through the partition so that the two stores will practically be one.

POMP OF INSTALLATION.

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICERS JOYFULLY DON THEIR REGALIA.

Winfield Scott Post and Its Auxiliaries Had a Big Time Last Night—Sociability Followed the Official Installation.

One of the best joint installations ever held under the auspices of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., took place Tuesday when their officers, together with those of the Woman's Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans, donned their regalia for the ensuing year, with the pomp and display of the finest.

The rooms were filled with members of the organizations and their friends who were deeply impressed with the ceremonies. A large delegation from Post 109, G. A. R., with Commander S. C. Baker in charge, was present and they were enthused with the exercises.

The presence of the Schubert Club Ladies' Orchestra, under the leadership of Mrs. Buckley, was a signal success and during the evening the orchestra played several pleasing selections, which added greatly to the exercises. The Post officers were installed by Past Department Judge Advocate Emil Sands, of Post 3, Jersey City, and a more impressive installation has never been witnessed. The officers went through the ceremonies without a ritual, which is quite unusual.

At the close Commander McVoy made a few well-selected remarks in which he thanked all for the courtesy extended and the co-operation given. The commander appointed E. C. Morse as adjutant, while the latter selected W. Day as sergeant major, and C. R. Finck, as quartermaster. Following the above, the officers of the Relief Corps were installed by Past President Mrs. James Atwood, of Trenton.

These ceremonies were equally impressive with those preceding, and the excellent manner in which the work was performed was highly praised by all. The president-elect, Mrs. Stephens, appointed Mrs. Cox as secretary; Mrs. Rogert, guard, and Mrs. Devine assistant guard.

The officers of John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., were then installed by Past Post Commander James Atwood, of Trenton, assisted by Brother Reiger, of Camp No. 4, of Trenton. The work was performed in a highly creditable manner.

Captain-elect H. C. McVoy offered a few remarks in which he thanked all for the harmony and excellent support given during the past and he hoped it would continue.

The appointive officers of the camp were installed as follows:

Quartermaster, Fred Sutton; chaplain, Raymond McVoy; sergeant of guard, H. J. Martin; color guard, Charles Graves; principal musician, James Stryker; corporal of guard, John C. Hafner; camp guard, E. E. Connor; picket guard, John Naylor; camp council, W. C. Dobbins, W. E. Sutton and Charles Willis. The elective officers of the above organizations were published at the time of election, and only the appointive officers are given at this time.

After the installation ceremonies, Past Commander L. V. F. Randolph, of Post 73, was introduced and made a soul stirring speech, in which he said he considered it a great honor to be called upon. His words were filled with patriotism and love for country and he laid great emphasis on the fact that the future of the country depended on the present generation. At the close he read an impressive poem entitled "One Hundred Years Ago."

The next speaker was Rev. L. E. Livermore, of Post 109. This interesting speaker only occupied a few minutes, but he urged greater unity and progressiveness on the part of all. He said that his address was at 203 West Front street, and he could be found there. After another selection by the orchestra the exercises came to a close.

There were several visitors present from Trenton, Elizabeth and Somerville.

Cyclers to Have a Dance.

The Cleveland Cyclers, a new organization formed in this city about six weeks ago, with twenty members, will hold a reception and dance in the Gesang Hall on the evening of Thursday, Jan. 21. The committee of arrangements consists of Bert Suthen, W. J. Keilly, Jas. Smith, Edward Sowden and Peter C. Blimm. The cyclers have fitted up cosy and comfortable rooms on North avenue as their headquarters.

—It is a little early to talk about a new wheel for this year, but the Plainfield Cycle and Sporting Goods Company, of North avenue, are already doing a good business in this line. Yesterday this company sent several wheels to purchasers in Florida.

UNION GOT HER SHARE.

REPUBLICANS OF THIS BAILIWICK FARED WELL WITH PLUMS.

Senator Reed Assigned to Several Important Committees and Immediately Introduced Two Bills of a Novel Nature.

Union and Somerset counties fared pretty well at the opening of the 121st State Legislature at Trenton, Tuesday, and in the proceedings of the session her representatives will figure prominently. Senator Williams, of Passaic, was chosen president of the Senate, and George W. MacPherson, of Mercer, was elected speaker of the House of the Assembly. The other places were filled by the caucus nominees already published in The Press.

Assemblyman W. R. Codington was seen by a Press reporter this morning regarding the indications of the Legislative work. He said: "While everything may appear harmonious and pleasant on the exterior, yet in my opinion, it will be one of the liveliest sessions that we have seen in a number of years."

Senator Charles A. Reed told a Press reporter that it was hard to tell, at present, what kind of a session it would be but he thought that it would be about the same as usual.

Union county received her share of the appointments. In the Assembly, William Hulskamper, of Elizabeth, was appointed journal clerk, while in the Senate, Henry Bollinson, editor of the Rahway Advocate, was made secretary. Assemblyman Codington had the appointment of one page and re-appointed William Sebring, of this city, to the position.

Senator Reed had the appointment of a doorkeeper and a page for the Senate. Theodore F. Stevens, of Bernardsville, was appointed doorkeeper and Alvak Noll, of Somerville, received the appointment as page.

The committees in the Assembly have not been appointed as yet but that will be done on Monday when the Legislature meets again. The Senate committees have been appointed and Senator Reed was made chairman of the Joint Printing committee and Senate Borough and Borough Commissioners besides being appointed on Revision of Laws, Riparian Rights of the Senate, and the joint committee of Treasurers Accounts.

Senator Reed has introduced two bills already. One provides for the changing of the colors of the official envelopes in the elections. The bill changes the color from white, as it is now used, to blue. The object of this change is twofold. In the last elections, there has been a number of votes cast out as the voters forgot to put them in the official envelope. The judges of election were unable to tell if this had been done as the envelopes and tickets were both white. With the envelope blue, a glance would tell if the voter had neglected to place the ballot in the envelope. The other reason is that it is often hard for the voter, in the dimly lighted booth, to find an envelope in the mass of ballots on account of their similarity in color. The proposed change would do away with all that. The bill was referred to the committee on elections. Mr. Reed introduced a similar bill a year ago except that the proposed color was yellow.

The other bill postpones the time when taxes become delinquent from December 20th to February 20th. This was referred to the committee on finance.

The reasons for the introduction of this bill are many, the Senator said. Money is always scarce at the last of the year, right after the holidays, and by this bill the people are given a chance to recover their financial balance. It will be of special advantage to farmers, who are now forced to hurry the sale of their crops so as to get the money to pay their taxes, while the delay would give them time in which to complete the sale without undue haste, and besides would give them an opportunity often times to secure better terms. Another reason is in the case of the people who have money in savings banks and are compelled to withdraw the money to pay their taxes. Heretofore they have been compelled to withdraw the money just before the interest comes due and the change would give them a chance to leave the money in until the interest due January 1st, has been paid.

There were several familiar faces at the opening of the Legislature besides the regular members from Plainfield and North Plainfield. Sheriff Kirk was there and so was Roger Murray, of this city, besides several others from here.

Promised to Leave Town.

James Baker was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza Tuesday on complaint of M. C. Dobbins for being disorderly. He promised to leave the town at once and the Judge suspended sentence on him.

WITH HOPE THEY GO ON.

SALVATION ARMY CELEBRATE THEIR SIXTH YEAR IN THIS CITY.

Adjutant Emily March Inspires the Lads and Lassies to Renewed Effort for Next Year by a Short and Interesting Address.

It is now six years since the Salvation Army established a post in this city and the anniversary of that event was celebrated at the meeting in Salvation Hall last Thursday. Adjutant Emily March, who was formerly commander of the corps in this city and now stationed in New York, was in charge of the meeting and led with her customary enthusiasm. There was a good attendance at the meeting at the start and the seats continued to fill all the evening.

All of the local corps, including their commander, Ensign Edith Berger, were present and in their places on the platform where they assisted the meeting with song and testimony. The first part of the meeting was devoted to the singing of rousing Salvation Army songs and to prayer. While the audience was rather slow to respond to the invitation to sing at first, their hesitation faded away as the meeting grew in interest and everyone joined in the familiar choruses. There was testimony by the soldiers on the platform and then some of those in the audience told of their experiences in the Christian life.

Then came the collection which was taken up by the adjutant while Ensign Berger sang the solo, "The Name of This Friend," with an accompaniment on her guitar. The collection finally amounted to $6. After that the leader made a short address in which she told of the watch meeting which was held at her present station in New York and the great work that was done there. She told of the motto that she had chosen for the new year which consisted of the first four words in the Bible: "In the Beginning God," and she said that during the year she hoped to have God in the beginning of everything that she did. Then some of her own experiences before her conversion were told and how she was attracted first by the Salvation Army. She related several stories, full of pathos and sorrow, which she told with great feeling so that her hearers were touched by them, and she closed with an appeal to the weary ones to come to the fold.

After more singing and testimony, the meeting closed and the seventh year of the Salvation Army in Plainfield had begun.

DONNING THE REGALIA

INSTALLATIONS IN RED MEN'S LODGE AND THEIR AUXILIARY.

The Work of Conducting the Officers Into Their New Positions Made by Ceremonies That Aroused New Interest

The members of Pauqh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe, No. 193, I. O. R. M., had a big time last Thursday when the following officers-elect were installed: Prophet, Charles F. Stephens; sachem, J. W. Klein; senior sagamore, Lewis DeCamp; junior sagamore, Theodore Mason; chief of records, J. H. Carney; collector of wampum, Theodore Osment; keeper of wampum, Peter A. Van Fleet; first sannap, W. Young; second sannap, Aug. Weber; first warrior, Peter Blimm; second warrior, S. H. Lounger; first brave, V. W. Nash; second brave, L. S. Pocock; guard of wigwam, Edward Smith.

The work of installing was performed by District Deputy Great Sachem William Newcorn and his staff, as follows: Great prophet, N. C. Magee; great senior sagamore, D. C. Allen; great junior sagamore, J. Newman; great sannap, J. Karet; great keeper of wampum, G. W. Thompson; great keeper of records, A. J. Stiglitz; great guard of wigwam, G. S. McGinnis.

District Deputy Great Chief Mrs. Eliza Radin, of Degree of Pocohontas, and her staff, installed the following officers-elect of Iona Council, last week: Prophetess, Mrs. Weigman; Pocohontas, Miss Izzie Dunlap; wenona, Miss Anna Schlein; keeper of records, Mrs. Holstein; collector of wampum, Mrs. Anna Klein; keeper of wampum, Mrs. Allen; first scout, Mrs. A. J. Stiglitz; second scout, Mrs. Canfield; first runner, Miss Frazee; first warrior, Miss Florence Pullin; second warrior, Mrs. Fred Westphal; guard of wigwam, Mrs. Bowman; guard of forest, Mrs. Fahn; powhaton, D. C. Allen.

The members decided to hold a dance in the near future and the following were appointed as a committee of arrangements: Mrs. Stiglitz, Mrs. Holstein, Mrs. Westphal, Mrs. Bowman, Miss Florence Pullin.

Among the visitors present was a large delegation from Pauqh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque-Council No. 34, of this city.

A bountiful supper was served after the business of the evening was transacted.

Wm. C. Stanbery, of Scotch Plains, has been appointed by Surrogate Parrott as Administrator of the estate of the late James A. Baker.

LOOKING FOR HUSBAND.

A BROOKLYN WOMAN'S STORY OF POVERTY AND DESERTION.

Mrs. Kaufman Left With Three Children by the Faithless Husband She Could Not Find in This City—Police Aid Her.

A deserted wife, left penniless by a faithless husband to support her three little children by her own labors, came to Plainfield Thursday in search of her husband. A friend had told her that he had seen the missing man in this city and the wife, driven by desperation to invoke the assistance of the law in compelling him to give her some aid, came to this city, accompanied by her brother, and tried to locate the faithless one.

She gave her name as Henrietta Kaufman and said that she came from Brooklyn where she was deserted two years ago, at about Christmas time, by her husband and left to care for her self and the three little children, the oldest of which was only eleven years and the youngest but four.

It was a sorrowful story that she told Overseer of the Poor Marx, to whom she was directed to make her complaint. Mr. Marx brought the matter before City Judge DeMeza and stated that Mrs. Kaufmann wished to arrest her husband on the charge of nonsupport. He was living here, she had been told, under an assumed name and was employed by an insurance company. Mrs. Kaufman had brought a photograph of the missing man with her and from it proceeded to identify him. He was a German with a dark brown beard and hair of the same color.

An investigation followed, but the missing individual was not to be found in the city limits. There was a man that, it was thought, resembled the description of the lost Mr. Kaufman, but on comparing him with the picture it was easy to see that they were not the same people.

When it was found that her mission had been fruitless, Mrs. Kaufman and her brother departed for New York. It has not been learned whether she has obtained any other clue to the missing man.

URGING THE TROLLEY TO COME.

Washington Valley People Up and Doing for the Improvement.

The meeting held at Washingtonville, last week, was largely represented by the taxpayers and those interested in having the trolley road go up to Mountain Park Inn by way of Washingtonville.

Robert Clark, Jr., was chosen chairman of the meeting, and P. E. Blume, secretary.

The chairman in a few well chosen remarks told of the long felt need of having the trolley come to Washingtonville and the benefits it would be in bringing a desirable class of people who would become residents of this beautiful valley. John French then told of his interview he had with Chandler Riker, the president of the railway company.

It was stated that the railway company were willing to have one-half of the $500 raised by the citizens, expended by a committee in widening the road at some places where it is too narrow to permit the tracks to be laid. The fare is to be five cents from any terminal point in Plainfield, and all cars run on Somerset street would be run over the new branch, making just as excellent service as the city or borough could have.

The following committee were appointed to investigate and determine the cost of widening the road and report at the next public meeting to be held next Wednesday evening: Robert Clark, Jr., F. E. Blume, John French, Robert Fountain and William Demler.

The Trolley Pole Broken.

There was delay on the street railway late one day last week caused by an accident to one of the cars on the Netherwood branch. The car was moving along Richmond street when the trolley pole slipped from the wire and, striking against one of the supporting wires with considerable force, was broken. The car was finally towed to the shop by one of the cars which finally came up. The conductor on the car was new to the line and did not know at what places the trolley was likely to slip off.

Resented an Insult.

Some of the young people of this city are greatly excited over some trouble that occured between two well-known young men of this city a few days ago. One of them, in a moment of forgetfulness, addressed some insulting remarks to the other in the presence of several young lady friends of the latter. When they met again, the insulted one proceeded to wipe up the sidewalk with his old friend. Threats of arrest and prosecution followed but now both parties have decided to let the matter drop.

Industry for Westfield.

G. A. Reuther and J. A. Wallace of Brooklyn and W. S. Morrow of Westfield incorporated there last week the Reuther Clothing Company. The company will manufacture clothing at Westfield and sell it to retailers. The capital stock is $100,000.

NOT HELD RESPONSIBLE

VICTIM OF ACCIDENT LOSES HIS SECOND SUIT FOR DAMAGES.

Jacob Sacher Was Injured by a Horse Driven by Bradford Smalley, but Jury Decided it Was His Own Carelessness.

Last week, at Elizabeth, Bradford Smalley, of Netherwood, was successful in the Supreme Court case brought against him by Jacob Sacher. The suit was for $5,000 damages, and grew out of an accident whereby Mr. Sacher had his leg broken just above the ankle.

He was in the act of crossing Watchung avenue, near East Fourth street, on February 26th, 1895, where he was run into by the horse and buggy driven by Mr. Smalley. The disputed question of fact was whether the accident was due to carelessness of Mr. Smalley in driving too fast or without proper caution in looking out for pedestrians crossing the street, or was due to carelessness of Mr. Sacher in crossing the street without due care to avoid vehicles carefully driven along the street.

The evidence was very conflicting as usual in such cases. The witnesses for the plaintiff outnumbered Mr. Smalley's witnesses, but disinterested persons present at the trial seemed to think, as the jury did, that the plaintiff's witnesses for the most part did not stand the test of cross-examination.

Craig A. Marsh was counsel for Mr. Smalley, and secured a verdict in favor of his client. Mr. Sacher was represented by Mr. Hood, of Newark, the assistant prosecutor of Essex county. The horse and buggy belonged, it will be remembered, to Dan Roberts, and suit was first brought against him. This suit was tried several terms ago, and was won by Mr. Roberts.

THEIR BOWLING TOGS ON

PARK CLUB TEAM EASILY DEFEATS THE BAYONNE BOWLERS.

The Rooters Were Noticeably Absent, But Charlie Lyman Made Up For That By Two Solos—Scores in Detail.

The invincible Park Club bowling team, which is making such a fine record in the Central Journal League, met the Bayonne team in this city last week for the first time this year. There was not a very large attendance of club rooters, but those who were there made up for the absent ones. It was exceedingly hard luck, but the visitors were doomed to defeat, and the Parks added two more victories to their long list. The features of the games was the score of 214 made by Worth, and the very steady bowling by Thiers. The latter only broke twice during the evening, which is doing remarkably well.

As a soloist Charlie Lyman is making quite a hit, and during the evening he rendered several effective solos, such as "My Old Kentucky Home" and "Down on the Farm." With each song followed long and hearty applause. Mr. Lyman was very ably assisted by Laurens Van-Buren, the club's mascot, who sang a very fine tenor, and one had to be present to appreciate the harmony.

Some of the members of the home team were evidently rattled by the presence of ladies, but the majority of them put up good scores and their supporters feel happy.

As for the visitors, great credit is due them. They put up two good games and it was by close margins that they were beaten. At the close of the game three hearty cheers were given by both sides. Below will be found the full scores:

POLICE COMMITTEE ORGANIZE.

Councilman Barrows to be Continued as Chairman.

The police committee of the Common Council met at the residence of Mayor Charles J. Fisk, of West Seventh street, last week, and organized. Elliot T. Barrows was chosen president and William N. Runyon was elected to the position of secretary. There was a general discussion of the different matters of interest to the committee, but no action was taken on any of the subjects.

Jackson Day in Rahway.

Prosecutor Frederick C. Marsh, of Elizabeth, and James E. Connolly, of Elizabeth, spoke last Friday in Rahway on the eighty-second anniversary of General Jackson's victory over the British. After the addresses supper was served in the club rooms.

DIED IN A DISTANT LAND.

H. A STREULI'S LIFE-LIGHT FLICKERED OUT IN SWITZERLAND.

He Had Gone to the Land of His Birth to Renew His Health But Was Unsuccessful—Well Known Silk Manufacturer

A large number of people in this city will be shocked to learn of the death of H. Alfred Streuli, of Prospect avenue, which occurred last week at the home of his son, Ferdinand Streuli, Rheinfelden, Switzerland, which is also his birthplace.

Mr. Streuli had been ill since last June, and he has for sometime been abroad. Death resulted from blood poisoning.

As stated above Mr. Streuli was born in Switzerland, and he came to this country in 1863, and at once engaged in the manufacture of silks in Philadelphia.

About twenty years ago he moved to Plainfield, where he still maintained his interest in the silk business. He and his son, A. F. H. Streuli, of this city, were the owners of the silk mills at Stirling which burned down some time ago and are now being rebuilt. About three years ago Mr. Streuli retired from active business, but his interest remained in the mills at Stirling.

He was a widower, his wife having died a number of years ago. He leaves three children, A. F. H. Streuli and Mrs. Evarts Tracy, of this city, and Ferdinand Streuli, Rheinfelden, Switzerland. Mr. Streuli was well and favorably known in this city and was a member of the Union County Country Club. He was also a member of the Lutheran church at the place where he died.

Mark Morris, of Federalsburg, Md., has leased for a term of six years the Patrick Keenan farm on Clinton avenue. Mr. Morris is a nephew of Eugene Laine, the Park avenue barber.

PYTHIANS PROSPEROUS.

ENCOURAGING REPORTS AT THE DISTRICT MEETING LAST WEEK.

Every Lodge in the District Represented—Grand Chancellor Hitchcock Talked on the Work of the Order—Banquet Given.

A district meeting of Knights of Pythias was held last week in Unity Lodge rooms, Babcock building, and every lodge in the district was represented, including Raritan Lodge, of Sayreville. Grand Chancellor W. E. Hitchcock, of Newark, was present and gave the members a fine talk on the work of the order. The reports from the various lodges showed that all were in a healthy and prosperous condition.

The following officers-elect of Unity Lodge were installed by District Deputy Bowman:—Chancellor commander, F. Green; vice chancellor, George Radford; keeper of records and seals, Alfred Dunavan; master of finance Jerry Van Winkle, Jr.; master of exchequer, Amos Andrews; master of work, J. D. Anderson; master at arms, Fred Humpstone; prelate, I. N. Wyckoff; inside guard, W. Johnson; outside guard, T. C. Smith.

After the installation, J. W. A. Bauersachs was elected district deputy in place of Edward Bowman, whose term expired.

This concluded the business and the members all adjourned to the banquet hall where a sumptuous repast was served.

TWOMBLY FARM CLOSED.

Rumor That the Great Estate May Be Abandoned.

H. McK. Twombly, after having expended over $1,500,000 on his big farm of 700 acres near Madison, has decided to close it for an indefinite period.

The greater part of the land where the large farm buildings now stand was a swamp when Mr. Twombly bought it. He has ditched the place thoroughly and it is now one of the finest farms in New Jersey. The buildings upon it alone cost a fortune. The stable is furnished with electric lights throughout and has accommodations for 200 horses. It is rumored that Mr. Twombly may entirely abandon the place.

MAYOR FISK'S LIBERAL GIFT.

Presents a Check for $1,000 to the Muhlenberg Hospital Nurses' Home.

The treasurer of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital recently received two handsome donations toward the building of the Nurses' Home. One was a check for $1,000 from Mayor Fisk and the other one was for $100 from S. L. Schoonmaker. The above amounts, together with $3,000 donated by the Woman's Auxiliary Board, as the profits of the Kirmess held some time ago, leaves a deficiency of about $700 to complete the new building now in course of construction.

Church Affairs Quiet.

The consistory of the German Reformed church held their regular monthly meeting last week and transacted the regular business of that body. There were no matters of importance brought up at the meeting and a general discussion of the affairs of the church followed the meeting.

STOCKTON MAY STAY IN.

DEMOCRAT LIKELY TO HOLD THE STATE ATTORNEY GENERALSHIP.

He is a Warm Personal Friend of the Governor and Has Held Office For Many Years—Endorsed by Some Republicans.

Many prominent Republicans believe that Attorney-General Stockton, whose term expires next March, is to be either appointed or allowed to hold his office for several years longer. Gossip has changed materially in the last few days, and little is heard now about giving the Attorney-Generalship to the well-known corporation lawyer, Samuel H. Gray, who a short time ago was regarded as almost as good as appointed to the place.

The Attorney General is the last of the great family of Stocktons, who have figured conspicuously in the history of the State for a century and a half. He is now seventy years old, and is still vigorous, physically and mentally. Republicans admit he has made an efficient State officer, excluding his part in the Senate controversy. He has many Republican admirers, and they are willing to excuse his course in the perilous times of the rump Senate on the ground that he took a lawyer's view, based on the evidence that was submitted, and that morally he was not in sympathy with obstructionists.

The Governor is a friend of the Attorney General, and all the prominent Republicans of the State are also his warm personal friends. The Attorney General's term of office is four years. He has been a "good liver," and has provided magnificently for his large family. There is much sympathy for him, because it would greatly annoy him if he should be turned out, like an old horse, to end his days in idleness.

The argument is gaining ground that this Republican administration is under obligation to sound money Democrats of the State, for at least 50,000 Democratic votes were cast for McKinley and Hobart, and that the administration is bound to give a good citizen to a representative of that large body of voters.

General Stockton is well indorsed by Republicans, and this would be the Governor's warrant, should he decide to reappoint him.

DANCED IN DISGUISE.

An Enjoyable Masquerade Ball Given by the Rathbone Sisters.

A pleasing masquerade ball was given in Skandia hall, last Thursday, under the auspices of Minerva Temple, No. 14, Rathbone Sisters. There were about two hundred guests present, most of whom wore novel costumes. The grand march was led by Mrs. I. H. Boehm, gowned as "Aunt Jemima," and Eli Odam, in a natty suit representing the president of a tennis club. Otto Keller, imitating a Jew, and Charley Shantz, a girl weighing about three hundred pounds, caused amusement for all.

Among the others present were clowns, dancing girls, princesses and princesses.

Refreshments were served about midnight and dancing was continued until early this morning.

Samuel Robinson was the efficient floor manager, and he was assisted by A. D. Pope.

The music was furnished by Gutt man.

SINGERBUND ELECT OFFICERS.

The German Society Now in a Flourishing Condition.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Gesang and Turn Verein was held in the hall of that organization last Thursday. The financial committee made its report which showed the society to be in a flourishing condition with a good balance in the treasury.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Henry Haurand; vice president, Henry Vogel; corresponding secretary, Charles Dewier; financial secretary, Maxs Otto; treasurer, Lui Moraller; financial committee, Charles Dressell, Carl Felber, Jos Hamrand.

It was decided to give a masquerade on the evening of Monday, March 1st. The committee in charge of it was appointed as follows: Charles Myer, August Wolff, Lui Moraller, Henry Schaerhon, Charles Keller and others.

Mrs. Haviland's Third Tea.

There was a large attendance of society people at the third tea in the series given by Mrs. A. W. Haviland at her residence on Rockview avenue, Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Haviland and her two daughters were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Frederick Mead and Mrs. J. G. Foster. Mrs. C. W. Scrutchen and Miss Truslow, of New York, presided at the table and were assisted by Misses Holt and Hyde, of New York, and the Misses Clark, Wood, Shreve and Henderson, of Plainfield.

Will Not Consider It.

Strong efforts are being made in Somerset county to have Clausen's sentence commuted to imprisonment for life, owing to his youth and the peculiar circumstances surrounding the murder. An application has been made to the Court of Pardons, but the case will not be considered there while pending in the other court. No application was made for Johnson.

GOOD WORK BEING DONE

W. C. T. U. PROGRESSING IN THEIR EFFORTS AT UPLIFTING ALL.

The Sick and Maimed Presented With Flowers and Several Poor Families Given Dinner—Articles Distributed to Others.

The progress made in the several departments of the W. C. T. U. during the past few months has been marked, as was shown at the regular business meeting of the Union held Thursday afternoon, when the reports were made by the various superintendents.

The general work of the Union is in a far better condition than ever, and harmony exists in all departments. A gratifying report was received regarding the "Festival of Days" held recently, and it was stated that $105 had been received therefrom.

Mrs. Ramsey Blair, of the evangelistic work, gave an encouraging report of the increased attendance at the meetings and the excellent leaders provided. Mrs. Thomas Minford, the superintendent of the flower and missionary work, presented one of the best reports for the month. This department sent twenty bouquets to the hospital, and during the months of October, November and December forty-seven dinners were served to poor families. There was a barrel of potatoes and four bunches of celery also given to others.

The soldiers and sailor work was reported by Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, the superintendent. On December 30th, this department sent a box of useful articles to the life saving station located at Avon-by-the-Sea, and a very interesting letter of acknowledgment from J. H. Pearce, the keeper was read. It was also reported that 300 pages of literature had been distributed to the street car employes. Miss Beekman reported the work of the Loyal Temperance Legion, and an increased interest is shown in this department. The members of the Union feel highly gratified with the reports presented, and efforts are constantly being made to increase the efficiency of each department.

Going to Foreign Climes.

Among the Plainfield people who are planning a trip to Europe this month and the coming month are: Ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, of East Front street, and Mr. and Mrs. Walton McGee, of Rockview avenue. Ex-Mayor Alexander Gilbert and wife will take the Mediterranean trip, sailing in the Fuerst Bismarck, January 24th.

WEDDED IN A SYNAGOGUE

HAPPY NUPTIAL EVENT IN HEBREW CIRCLES LAST THURSDAY.

Civil Marriage Preceded the Religious One —Miss Fannie Mintz and Mr. Mayrowitz, the Principals—Groom From Morristown.

A very happy event in Hebrew circles took place, last Thursday, when Miss Fannie Mintz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Mintz, of 206 Grove street, and Morris Mayrowitz, a merchant of Morristown, were united in marriage.

The civil ceremony was performed by Justice Newcorn, in his office at 5 o'clock, and the religious ceremony took place at 7 o'clock in the Hebrew synagogue, Rev. Jacob Marcus, officiating.

At the latter place there were fully two hundred relatives and friends present from New York, Morristown and Plainfield.

At each ceremony the parents of both the bride and groom stood up with the happy couple, and the bride was given away by her parents.

The bride was richly gowned in white satin, trimmed with white silk ribbons.

Congratulations followed the ceremony, after which a sumptuous wedding supper was served at the hall, 206 West Front street. After supper dancing was indulged in and it was early this morning when the festivities came to an end.

The bride and groom were the recipients of a large collection of costly and useful presents. They will reside at Morristown, where the groom is engaged in business.

EUCHRE WINNER.

Thursday Night Club Entertained by Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Clifton.

The members of the Thursday Night Euchre Club were entertained last Thursday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Clifton, of West Second street, and passed a very enjoyable evening. There were four tables and all the prizes consisted of hand painted china, the work of the hostess of the evening.

After an exciting game, the prizes were awarded. The first prizes were won by Miss Clara Williams and Mr. Angleman, the latter being tie with one of the other members but winning on the cut. There were several tied for each of the second prizes which finally went to Miss Becker and Robert M. Clark. Dainty refreshments were served after the game was concluded. The club will be entertained in two week's from last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Tier.

WENT TO JAIL THIS TIME.

A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE FINALLY CAPTURED THIS MORNING.

Will am Brown Taken by Surprise by Patrolman Totten Whom the Former Once Outwitted in an Exciting Hurdle Chase.

Patrolman Totten has not forgotten his long and unsuccessful chase after an offending negro, who had been fighting up in the dump on Watchung avenue. The colored man's name was William Brown. Brown was finally enabled to escape through the assistance of his brother who opportunely came along with a horse and wagon and gave the fleeing brother a lift. The pursuing officer set such a lively clip that the offender had to jump from the wagon and run, and the rest was of sufficient length to enable him to get his wind and he finally left the representative of the law behind after a hurdle race over fences. The story was told at the time in The Press.

It is not often that an offender gets away from Totten and the latter felt on the night that the colored man had put on him and waited until he should appear in this city again.

The time for retribution came last evening. Patrolman Totten learned that the long-expected time had arrived and the missing Mr. Brown had slipped in the back way and was preparing to become a resident of Plainfield again. He had thought that the little affair in which he had played such a prominent part had blown over and everybody had forgotten all about it, but they hadn't. Early this morning before Totten had gone off duty, which happens at 6 o'clock, he went to the home of the "wanted" man and found him there. The visit of the officer was an unpleasant surprise for Mr. Brown and he did not have time to try another flight before the firm grasp of the law had settled on his shoulder with an unrelenting grip.

Then Brown took another walk with the officer in the direction of the rookery where he was left to consider the matter until City Judge DeMeza was ready to see him. Brown was arraigned before the Judge this morning and pleaded not guilty to the charge of fighting, which has been hanging over his head for the last six months, and of trying to evade arrest. He was held in $50 bail to appear for trial on next Saturday morning.

COST OF BREAKING A HEART.

A Newark Swain Pays Dearly for Trifling with Miss Carrie.

It is not often that Somerset county is treated to a real, genuine breach of promise case in which a love-sick maiden and lots of effusive love letters are the principal features. The "villain" in the case was not present, and of course, the fair plaintiff, Miss Carrie Sorter, daughter of George Sorter, of Millstone, had everything her own way. On the stand she stated that a young man by the name of John S. Conover, of Newark, had, late in the year 1894, commenced to pay her attention and finally had stolen her affections. Everything had a rosy hue for a time but finally, one cruel day in March, 1895, a letter came, stating that everything was over between them and that he had married another girl. Her hopes were instantly dashed to the ground and a broken heart was the result. Then James J. Meehan, of counsel for the plaintiff, put the letters written by Conover in evidence and they proved to be couched in very endearing terms, which occasioned some amusement. This Miss Sorter did not seem to enjoy. There was no defense made and it did not take the jury long to bring in a verdict of $1,433.

POISONED BY CANNED BEANS.

John Naylor Taken Suddenly and Violently Ill.

John Naylor, an insurance agent having business in Somerville and living on East Third street, this city, was taken suddenly and violently ill about 5 o'clock Saturday a m. He was first attacked with cramps and later by vomiting. Dr. Clawson was hastily summoned and prescribed for the suffering man. The cause of the trouble is said to be from making a hearty meal last evening of canned beans, which, it is thought, poisoned him. No other cause is assigned for his sudden and unexpected illness. This morning the patient was pronounced out of danger, but he is yet quite weak.

Death of Isaac Brokaw.

The death of Isaac Brokaw, of West Fourth and Liberty streets, occurred Thursday p. m. at 1 o'clock. He was an old and respected citizen of Plainfield. His death was caused by nervous prostration and old age, being seventy-five years old. He leaves a widow but no children.

A Place to Drill In.

The Cadet Corps of the North Plainfield High School has rented Saenger and Turner hall for one evening in the week for the winter, as the space in the basement of the school building is too small in which to do any effective work. The corps will meet there first on Thursday evening.

HIS COAT TAIL MISSING.

SUPPOSED TO HAVE GONE WITH A ROYAL BLUE LINER.

William Somerset's Exciting Escapade in Climbing Over a Coal Train and Narrowly Escaping Being Struck By a Flyer.

William Somerset, colored, of Sycamore street, learned a lesson on Thursday last which will keep him off of the Central Railroad tracks hereafter. It was between 5 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon when William sauntered up East Fourth street, toward Paradise Alley, for the purpose of calling on a friend. Many thoughts were passing through his mind as to what he may say when he met his friend.

In order to reach the house he was obliged to cross the railroad, and at the time there a coal train was passing. As William is an athlete, he had no difficulty in climbing over the train, though it was moving pretty lively.

His mind being on his friend, he paid no attention to the approaching Royal Blue Line flyer, and he had just cleared the main west-bound track when the train whizzed by.

For a moment William was paralyzed with fear and fright. His knees were weak and he could scarcely move. Presently he managed to get off the railroad and reach his friend's house.

The people at the house at once noticed that something was wrong with William, as he was shaking all over. Closer examination proved that the tail of his coat was missing, and that the flying train was responsible for its absence.

A search for the missing coat tail failed to reveal its whereabouts, and it was sometime before William recovered his usual composure. He declares that he will never go on the railroad track again.

WAS HE MADE A SCAPEGOAT?

J. W. Reinhart's Acquittal May Result in Further Developments.

A dispatch from Chicago to the Wall Street Journal has the following to say about a Plainfielder:

"It is believed here that ex-President Reinhart has been made a scapegoat in connection with charges against the Atchison management. It has been known that Mr. Reinhart's indictment by the grand jury was procured without reasonable evidence against him, and this is now emphasized by the fact that after two days of trial, involving the examination of many witnesses, books, records and papers, not an item of evidence has been found connecting Mr. Reinhart's name with any rebate or irregular transaction.

"The situation was so clear that Judge Grosscup summarily threw the case out of court, and the Judge reprimanded counsel for an attack on Mr. Reinhart, saying that it appeared to be wholly unjustified. Some of Mr. Reinhart's friends believe that his prompt acquittal in this case will be followed by developments."

WILL HAVE AN UP-TO-DATE STORE.

Isaac Lederer to Make Extensive Improvements to His Store.

By the latter part of this week Lederer, the dry goods merchant, will have disposed of the goods which were in the store at the time of the fire. Work will be started at once to remodel the entire store, including a modern up-to-date front.

While the improvements are being made, which will take about one month, Mr. Lederer will not continue his business, but will wait until his store is completed. He will then put an entirely new spring and summer stock of goods, and the store will be one of the best in the state. Every convenience will be provided and the store will be arranged for the rapidly increasing business of this house.

Oakley, the architect of Elizabeth, is drawing the plans for the work and they will be submitted early next week.

The Blue Liner Whizzed By.

Harry Baglin, of Watchung avenue, had a narrow escape from losing his life Saturday a.m. at the North avenue station. He was attempting to catch the 8.48 train to New York, an in doing so ran in front of the Royal Blue Line train going the other way. His foot slipped, and he rolled over several times, just in time to escape the passing train. He missed his train to New York and disappeared very quickly, as soon as he picked himself up. As far as could be learned he received no injuries.

Hack Horse Took a Sprint.

A horse owned by William Drake, the hackman, ran away from the North avenue station, Friday afternoon about 5 o'clock, and was caught a few minutes later on Park avenue by A. Gibby Spencer, a Prudential Insurance Company agent. There was not the slightest damage.

A Plainfield Inventor.

A recent number of the Official Gazette of the Patent Office at Washington devotes over a page to the description of a patent fire alarm system invented by Albert C. Rogers, of this city.

A FIERCE COCKING MAIN

SCOTCH PLAINS BIRDS DO UP NORTH PLAINFIELD FAVORITES.

The Event Took Place Just Over the Borough Line Thursday Night and Was Witnessed by Many Local Sportsmen.

Only the initiated ones knew that it was coming off and so it was a very select crowd of sports that assembled in a sequestered nook not far from the borough line on Green Brook road on Thursday evening. There were many familiar faces from this side of the brook as well as from the borough, while Scotch Plains sent down a delegation of her best known sporting enthusiasts. It was a cocking main between the birds from North Plainfield and Scotch Plains and had been planned for some time.

The pit had been carefully prepared unknown to the authorities and the usual watch was set to announce the arrival of any outsider. The main was a success from one to the other. Mr. White was concerned for their birds fought with unusual strength and many exciting contests resulted. There was little need for artificial light as the new moon shed its rays on the scene and dimmed the light of the lanterns that were placed about the pit. The North Plainfield birds did well but the other birds did better and the Scotch Plains favorites came out ahead, winning eleven matches to the six of the North Plainfield representatives. There were several birds from the city that were brought to the pit by the visitors and they won their share of the victories.

One of the rounds was particularly exciting and it took the Scotch Plains bird twenty-five minutes to better his opponent. The birds fought with remarkable fierceness and feathers flew so that the spectators could hardly see the combatants. Another main is being arranged to take place shortly but the location has not yet been announced, even to the favored ones.

Played Euchre.

The West End Euchre Club were entertained Friday night by Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Loughlin, of East Front street. The guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Connett, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Pope, Jr., and Mrs. Charles Bellahunt, Miss Nettie Kriesling, Alva Carey, Harry Carey, of Plainfield, and Miss Nellie Chappell, of Kingston, N. Y. The first and second prizes for the ladies were awarded to Mrs. Harry Connett and Miss Chappell, while Alva Carey and R. H. Loughlin were awarded first and second prizes for the men. Refreshments were served at midnight, after which the event terminated.

Lectures on Literary Lights.

The North Plainfield Circle of the Daughters of the Cross have arranged for three public lectures by Leon H. Vincent, of Philadelphia, on the afternoon of January 28, and the following Thursday afternoons, beginning at 4 o'clock, at the Y. M. C. A. hall. The subjects are "Carlyle and His Wife," "George Elliot" and "Charles Dickens." Mr. Vincent is one of the most interesting and instructive speakers now on the lecture platform. He is well-known in Plainfield.

Died After a Long Illness.

After a long illness, Mrs. Robert Rushton died at her home on La-Grande avenue, Saturday a. m. She was thirty years of age and leaves a husband and two little daughters. The funeral will be held from Hope Chapel next Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Mrs. Rushton was one of the original members of the Sunday-school of the chapel, and was an active worker in the cause of Christianity when her health permitted it.

Board of Agriculture Meets.

The Union County Board of Agriculture, at its annual meeting Thursday, elected the following officers: President, Emerson P. Beebe; vice-president, Dennis C. Crane; secretary, F. E. Woodruff; treasurer, Gideon E. Ludlow; advisory board, E. P. Beebe, Gideon E. Ludlow, John O. Magie, D. L. Magee, Ogden Woodruff. The annual report of the treasurer showed that there were no debts and a surplus of $10.48 in the treasury.

Died at the Hospital.

The death of Rymer Chamberlain, of East Fourth street, occurred Thursday at the hospital, after a confinement of two weeks. Death was the result of paralysis. Mr. Chamberlain was a well-known citizen, having lived here many years. He leaves two sons, Herbert Chamberlain, of this city, and Arthur Chamberlain, of Chicago.

Hurt at Scott's Press Work.

Robert Gray, an employe of the Walter Scott Printing Press Works, sustained a slight inside wound of the forehead Saturday a.m. while at work The man was taken to the hospital in a carriage, and the wound was quickly dressed, so that he was able to return to work soon afterward.

William P. Frazee, of New York city, Superintendent of the Metropolitan Storage Warehouse and Van Company, spent Sunday in this city, the guest of his brother, ex-Councilman Vincent L. Frazee, of West End Park.

SHOT AT THE PROWLER.

A BURGLAR ATTEMPTS TO GAIN ENTRANCE TO ED. WHITE'S HOME.

Footsteps Heard by Mr. White, Who Frightened the Burglar Away—Seen Hiding Behind a Tree and Shot At.

The residents in the vicinity of Myrtle avenue were awakened Saturday at about 3 o'clock by the sharp report of a pistol shot, but after that there was no disturbance, and those that heard the report went to sleep unconscious of what the trouble was.

This morning it was learned that the shot was fired by Edward White, the big dry goods dealer, at a man hiding behind a tree in his dooryard, whom it was believed attempted to effect an entrance into his house.

Mr. White was awakened out of a sound sleep at about three o'clock by the noise of some walking on his front porch and apparently tampering with the lock on the door. Mr. White arose and taking a revolver proceeded cautiously to the front of the house, but it was evident that the prowler became aware of this and ran off the porch. When Mr. White peered out of the front door he discovered the outline of a man hiding behind a tree about twenty feet from the house.

Mr. White discharged his revolver and the man disappeared in the darkness. The one man was the only one that Mr. White saw, but there may have been others concerned in the attempted entrance to his house.

ONE EYE LOST AND ONE SAVED.

Frank Splane Loses Sight in an Injured Eye and Miss Clark Retains Hers.

Frank Splane, of the borough, who recently sustained a severe injury to his eye while at work in Sharkey's blacksmith shop, was obliged to lose the eye. The operation was performed at the hospital last Sunday by Mr. Ard, assisted by the hospital staff. The work of removing the eye was very successfully accomplished and the patient is doing nicely.

Miss Clark, of Second avenue, who received a bullet wound in the eye a few days ago, was discharged from the hospital this morning. The sight of her eye is not impaired in the least.

More "At Homes" to be Held.

The great success of the recent "at home" of the Boys' Club was very gratifying to the officers of the club and it has been decided to give something of that kind once a month. The entertainment is entirely arranged by the members of the club who show a great interest in it and a new programme will be arranged for the next entertainment, whenever it is decided it shall be held.

A Methodist Change.

The official board of the First M. E. church of this city has extended an invitation to Rev. W. C. Snodgrass, now pastor of the Centenary M. E. church, of Newark, to take charge of their church after Dr. C. R. Barnes term ends. Rev. Mr. Snodgrass has signified his willingness to accept the charge providing Bishop Andrews approves of the change at the April conference in Newark.

Visited Another Lodge.

A number of the members of the Trinity Commandery, Knights Templar, went over to Morristown Friday evening to be present at the annual inspection of the commandery in that city by the grand officers, who made it an occasion of their annual visit to that commandery. The visitors were treated most sumptuously and spent a delightful evening.

Rescued From Death.

The number of deaths from the effort to catch trains in motion is alarmingly on the increase. The other day this practice would have numbered another victim but for the fact that the commuter saw his danger in time to avert the penalty. His eyes had been fitted with a pair of Collier's matchless glasses, a certain insurer against misjudgment of speed and distances.

Bitten By a Dog.

George Pope, young son of A. D. Pope, of Lincoln place, was quite severely bitten Saturday afternoon by a dog, which is owned by a resident of the street. The wound, which is in the fleshy part of the hip, was cauterized by Dr. Mattison and no bad results are anticipated.

Horse Thieves Convicted.

Edward Leer and John Murphy were convicted in the Court of Quarter Sessions at New Brunswick Friday of stealing a horse from Farmer Dalton, near Woodbridge. The men occupied a hut in the woods and, it is alleged, made raids upon stables and henneries.

Entertained at Euchre.

A progressive euchre party was held Friday night at the residence of Chas. W. Smith on Willow avenue, in honor of Miss Longford, a visiting friend from Brooklyn. It was a very enjoyable evening.

Burglars Invade a Cellar

Burglars effected an entrance in the cellar of the house occupied by Mrs. Case on Church street, Sunday night and carried away with them several cans of fruit. As far as can be learned nothing else was taken.

THE KIDS BEATEN AGAIN

THE REGULARS OF THE PARK CLUB CHALK UP A BIG SCORE

Borough Statesmen Are Not as Successful in Winning at Bowling as With Votes as the Record of the Yellow Kids Shows.

As a parent would favor a child, so the Yellow Kids favored the Regulars in the bowling game at the Park Club last Saturday evening. The former had the interest of the latter so much at heart that they could not bear to see them beaten, and thus the hard-earned reputation of the Regulars was at stake as they will meet the Westfield team this evening in a scheduled match. With these facts in view it can easily be seen that there was no good reason why the Yellow Kids should win.

In the days of old, the Park Club was glad to have such people as His Honor, the Senator, and the rest of the members that composed the Yellow Kid team represent them in their bowling games, and at this late stage of the game it is anything but fair to cast insinuating remarks about their bowling. They are men tried and true, and as the score below will show they can do a good turn yet. The presence of the fair sex had a good effect upon the bowlers, and every ball was thrown with grace and beauty. Especially was this true of Laureus VanBuren, the club's mascot. Mayor Regeman, with the strength and skill of an athlete, led the forces on the side of the Yellow Kids, and the deceptive movements of the Senator made the "Tall Sycamore of Somerset" a close second to His Honor. Of Douglas, Ball and Lyman, who were on the same side, much can be said, but we refrain from saying very much at present.

With a score of 192, George C. Worth very properly led the Regulars on to victory, while VanBuren followed closely after the leader. Matthews was low man, but Pete could not help that he had not bowled much of late. Dr. Thiers, the old reliable, was on hand as usual, and though he did not put up his best game he let everybody know that he was in the swim. F. O. Ball, who is trying to make a record this year, did remarkably well, and it is quite likely that he will be kept on the regular team, although there are several after his place.

Then there is nothing like getting everything into consideration the game was a fine one, and as this makes two victories for the Regulars, they will probably be satisfied for a while at least. Below will be found the score of the battle:

Yellow Kids.		Regulars.
Regeman	129	VanBuren	171
Ward	119	Worth, C.	192
Douglas	110	Matthews	148
Ball, F. H.	110	Ball, E. A.	153
Lyman	127	Thiers	156

ASSUMED THEIR POSITIONS

New Officers of Major Anderson Post Installed Saturday Night.

The officers of Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., were installed Saturday evening by Past Commander Elmore D. Moffett. There were present several comrades from Post 73, of this city, including Chief of Department Staff W. C. Smith; Aide-de-Camp E. C. Morse; W. W. Coriell, member of the Council of Administration, and Commander McVoy. The officers installed are as follows: Commander, S. C. Baker; Senior Vice-Commander, E. J. Dissen; Junior Vice-Commander, C. H. Randolph; Adjutant, N. C. Magee; Quartermaster, J. R. Naylor; Surgeon, J. H. Berg; Chaplain, Rev. L. E. Livingston; Officer of the Day, N. C. Pennington; Officer of the Guard, John N. Anderson.

After the ceremonies the Post was thrown open and a large delegation of women, wives and sisters of the comrades were admitted to the room, and the balance of the evening was devoted to sociability and the serving of refreshments by the women. Altogether it was one of the best installations this Post has ever had and it will long be remembered with pleasure.

A Trial Postponed.

Carminico Colluclo, the Italian who was charged with selling beer from a wagon without a license, was brought up for trial Monday a m., before City Judge DeMeza but the trial was adjourned for a week at the request of the lawyer for the plaintiff, Fred Marsh, of Elizabeth. Colluclo was charged with furnishing beer to the Italian settlements in Netherwood and the West End as has already been told in the Press.

A Pastor Receives a Call.

Rev. G. A. Luckenbill, formerly of this city, has received and accepted a call to the Reformed church located at Round Hill, Saratoga county, N. Y., and he will enter upon his duties Sunday, January 17th. At present Mr. Luckenbill is stopping at Albany with friends. His many friends in this city will be pleased to learn of his success and will wish him God-speed in his work.

Will Go on the Stage.

Oscar Vaughn and Charles Clark, of the borough, have secured positions with the Maude Hillman Company which appears in this city this week. They will appear in a vocal quartette

TO BE A THROUGH LINE.

DUNNELLEN MAY BE CONNECTED WITH ELIZABETH BY TROLLEY.

A Company to be Organized to Build the Road From Elizabeth to Westfield and Connect With the Plainfield System.

Another effort is about to be made to build a trolley line between Elizabeth and Westfield, says the Journal, and a company is organizing for the purpose with a capital of $200,000. The papers of incorporation are being prepared and will be filed next week. A number of prominent men are interested in the movement, and claim that the plan will be a success. The new corporation will be known as the Elizabeth and Westfield Railroad Company.

The plan is to build a trolley line along Westfield avenue between Westfield and Elizabeth, which will connect with the line from Plainfield that is about to be built from the "Colorado of the East" to Westfield. The line is planned to leave Westfield avenue at Chilton street in Elizabeth, and the route will be through Sayre street and down Morris avenue to the Central Railroad station.

It is also the intention of the new company to acquire the control of the East Jersey street line of horse cars in Elizabeth and to equip it with trolley wires. Then the two roads will be connected, and when the system is completed will give continuous communication between the water front in Elizabeth and Dunnellen.

As soon as the company completes its incorporation it will begin an active canvass of the property owners along the proposed route and ask for the necessary legal consent of those persons to build the road. If they succeed in obtaining the necessary two-thirds of the total frontage along the route, the company will then apply to the Board of Freeholders and the Elizabeth Council for franchises.

The route proposed would place the trolley line along the most important thoroughfare in Union county, and one that was meadsmized at no small expense to the property owners. It is understood that the new trolley company will not ask for permission to build its tracks in the middle of the macadam, but at the sides of the road where there is no pavement. In this way the members of the new organization hope to overcome the great objection that has prevented the use of the avenue heretofore by a trolley line, for all of the farmers and a very large number of the property owners object to having their fine pavement torn up for trolley tracks.

If the proposed line is built it will pass through Lorraine, Roselle, Cranford, Aldene and Garwood.

PRESENTED WITH A CHAIR.

Little Endeavorers Show Their Appreciation of Mrs. Schenck.

Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, superintendent of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church, was presented with a beautiful solid oak chair by her little followers, Saturday afternoon, as a token of their esteem and appreciation of her services. The presentation was made by Miss Bessie Randall in a neat little speech. Mrs. Schenck responded feelingly. Preceding the presentation a programme was rendered as follows:

THROWN FROM A TROLLEY CAR.

Jacob Mintz Receives a Scalp Wound and Dislocated a Joint.

Jacob Mintz, of Grove street, in attempting to alight from a trolley car at Greenbrook road, Sunday night, was thrown from the car and besides receiving a deep cut on the forehead the thumb on his left hand was dislocated. He was picked up by the motorman and conductor and in a few minutes was able to walk home. Dr. Zigler was called and dressed the man's wounds and he is now getting along well as can be expected.

Sociable at Euchre.

A progressive euchre party was given at the home of Charles W. Smith, of Willow avenue, on Friday evening in honor of Miss Longford, of Brooklyn, who is visiting Mrs. Smith. The first prizes were won by Miss Josie Hall and Arthur E. Holmes, while the winners of the second prizes were Miss Fannie Weed and Clarence Murphy. The affair was a most enjoyable one.

A WEAK POINT.

Mayor Fisk's idea of having forty paid call firemen at $30 each per year, according to the News, is based on the proposition that it would not cost the city in reality any more than to have one hundred volunteer firemen enjoying an exemption of $500 on tax able property, because if that exemption was obviated by payment of a nominal salary the city would have $80,000 more assessed valuation to tax, and at the present rate this sum would produce almost the $1,200 necessary to pay the call men. This contention can only be made on the presumption that all or nearly all the volunteer firemen are property owners. We have not the exact per centage of property owners in the department at hand, but it has been stated that they are in a minority. If such is the case, and the present status of the department is the only index of what the future might be, it would mean an additional expense of a few hundred dollars for the taxpayers to raise. Admittedly, it would be small, but still the disposition of property owners at the present time is not to countenance even small additional expenses.

When we mentioned this point in our review of the Mayor's message it was not done in the light of criticism, but simply to impress on Mr. Fisk the one principal weak point of his message as reflecting against his professed intentions of giving the people the most economical administration that is possible.

THE WHY OF THE WHEREFOR

The Elizabeth Journal gives utterance to the opinion that "Plainfield doesn't want to be a new county all unto herself, after all," because there is no pronounced sentiment in favor of such a scheme. What we want and what we can get are things that are distantly related, we hasten to inform the Journal. It can be safely ventured that a great majority—a very great—of Plainfielders would delight in seeing the Colonade of the East elevated to the position of a county seat, but knowing the animosity of the political dogs of Elizabeth towards losing Plainfield—of course, you can't blame them—and through what trials and tribulations we would have to pass to take leave, the people are rather slow to dash into a political tug-of-war that the Legislature would have to referee.

SERVES A TWO-FOLD PURPOSE.

Suggested by Plainfield's complimentary dinner to Mayor Gilbert, the Home News advises that a similar event be tendered to Mayor Williamson, of New Brunswick, at the completion of his term of service. Such a dinner, it has been demonstrated in Plainfield, serves a two-fold purpose. First, in expressing the gratitude of citizens for an efficient administration; and second, in offering an incentive to the succeeding officials to provide an equally as good government and thus meriting a similar honor at the completion of their term.

THE NEW TROLLEY PROJECT.

Spasmodically for the past two or three years there has been efforts made to build an electric railway between Elizabeth and this city, and when the rumor of another company taking hold of the project was announced a few days ago, it was received by many as mere talk. But it seems there is money back of this talk, as reported in the news columns of today's issue. The backers of the new project are the same capitalists who are owners of the street railway system in this city, and whatever they say they will do can be pretty nearly depended upon.

A CONCEPTION OF DUTY.

Councilman Barrows, of Plainfield, performs his duties as a member of the license committe, after lines laid down by President Roosevelt, of New York. He has been making a personal inspection of the various saloons, with the idea of getting first hand information as to how they are conducted. Having ascertained this he will be able to vote intelligently when the matter of license applications comes up. The same method would bring about good results if applied by our local aldermen—New Brunswick Home News.

A BRIGHT MIND ST.LLED.

The legal and newspaper fraternity lose a bright and active member in the death of J. Newton Voorhees, which occurred at his home in Flemington, Saturday. He was the proprietor of the Flemington Democrat Advertiser and a senior member of the firm of Voorhees and Cotter, of Newark.

THE MESSAGE.

Governor Griggs first annual message is a singularly well-prepared State paper, and in his treatment of the various phases of government evinces a practical and fair conception of what the needs of the commonwealth are. One of the most salient points of the document is his reference to the inclination of the last Legislature to enact only the most needful legislation, since the statute books are now filled with acts that no lawyer or judge can fully comprehend owing to their conflicting with one another, and his hope that the present Legislature will advance still further in this reform finds a sympathetic response in the minds of all of good citizens.

EASE THE BURDENS.

There are those who will doubtless pooh-pooh at Senator Reed's bill changing the date on which taxes become delinquent as sentimental legislation whose only course should be to the committee where many a bill enters to be smothered by being pigeon-holed. Sentiment or no sentiment, we rise to say that the "Tall Sycamore of Somerset" was filled with an acute regard for the eternal fitness of things when he framed that bill. Let the Legislature pass it and the people of moderate means will say, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

CHEESE-PARING.

No one will question the desirability of economy being practiced in expenses of this city, but when the street committee fixes the salary of the Street Commissioner at $75 a month, we believe that such an action comes under the head of "cheese-paring." We do not believe that the Street Commisioner of Plainfield should be a mere figurehead; it is an office in which very responsible duties are centered, and practical experience is necessary for satisfactory performance to the people.

FOR A NORMAL SCHOOL

PLAN FOR A NEW INSTITUTION IN THIS PART OF THE STATE.

The Need of Another Training Place For Teachers is Urgent at the Present Normal School is Filled to Its Capacity Now.

The scheme of school teachers and educators for the erection of a normal school in the upper part of the State has taken a tangible shape by decided action on the part of the special committee of the New Jersey Teacher's Association in Trenton. The scheme for the second normal and teachers' training school was considered on November 18, when the council of the State Teachers' Association in Newark discussed the matters at great length and passed a resolution setting forth the reasons why such an institution is needed in the populous section of the State.

There is a positive need in New Jersey for more teachers who have been specifically trained for the work. A committee was appointed, consisting of Charles J. Baxter, of Plainfield, the State Superintendent; Henry Snyder, of Jersey City; John Enright, Freehold; S. R. Morse, of Atlantic City; V. S. Davey, East Orange; S.E. Mannes, president of the State Teachers' Association; George S. Regan, New Brunswick, and W. L. R. Haven, Morristown.

At the present time the State has only one normal school, located at Trenton. This is now filled to its capacity with pupils from all of the twenty-one counties, and it is thought best not to expend any large sums on this school, because a new institution, located in the city of Newark, would fill a long felt want. There is much good material in the Newark Jersey City, Newark, Plainfield and Paterson Pupils could afford to attend a school located within easy reach, while they could not afford the expense of attending school at Trenton At the present time there are now attending the State Model and Normal School more than one thousand pupils. The new school is intended to draw from the counties above Mercer, and the present institution at Trenton to draw from the counties below Trenton.

Not Fitted For the Work.

The old gray horse recently purchased for the fire department is not giving satisfaction and a change will be made soon. Dr. Hoecck, the department veterinary, has made a thorough examination of the horse and finds that he has heart trouble On two different occasions the team was given a trial, and in each instance the gray was not able to run over two blocks. The matter has been reported to the man from whom the horse was purchased, and the difficulty will be adjusted satisfactorily to all parties concerned. The other horse is all right and doing good work.

A Vicious Canine.

Harry Bolmer, of this city, had both hands bitten while at Hyde's pond, Saturday afternoon. He was leading his dog by a rope when the dog was attacked by another one, and in attempting to release his dog from the rope the strange canine bit the lad on both hands. Neither of the wounds were serious, however.

shake it off

The general belief among doctors is that consumption itself is very rarely inherited. But the belief is becoming stronger that the tendency to consumption is very generally transmitted from parent to child. If there has been consumption in the family, each member should take special care to prepare the system against it. Live out doors; keep the body well nourished; and treat the first indication of failing health.

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is a fat-producing food and nervetonic. Its use is followed by improved nutrition, richer blood, stronger nerves and a more healthy action of all the organs. It strengthens the power of the body to resist disease. If you have inherited a tendency to weak lungs, shake it off.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been indorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50c. and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby. All druggists.

W. C. T. U. WILL PROTEST AGAINST GRANTING LIQUOR LICENSES.

Petitions Will be Circulated Among the Church People for Signatures—A Special Protest by the Mt. Olive Church.

It has been the custom of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city for several years past, to circulate petitions the first of each year soliciting signatures of citizens protesting against the granting of liquor licenses by the Common Council. The officers of that organization are now preparing to prosecute this endeavor again. They have had a printed petition prepared and several will be placed in the hands of the members of the various churches, who will present them to the temperance people for signatures. The petition reads as follows:

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is an organization of "Mother Love," seeking to protect the home against the enemy that has intrenched behind the legalized saloons. Young men who should be strong in their young manhood, for there by the votes "Our City Fathers" cast. Husbands and fathers are spending their wages in the gin shops that should be spent in stores for the comforts and necessaries of life.

Will you, Christian friends, appeal to the new Council by signing your names to this petition.

We, the men and women of Plainfield, entreat the Common Council to vote for the license applications for hotels and saloons, that our cities may be free from the curse of God.

The licenses are granted at the March meeting of the Common Council, and already the liquor dealers are arranging to file their applications by getting the signatures of the twelve freeholders that are necessary. There is an unwritten law against the granting of liquor licenses in the Second or Third wards, and no one has ever had the temerity to apply for one in these bailiwicks. It is comparatively easy to secure signatures in the Fourth ward, but in the First the liquor dealers have to do a good deal of hustling and figuring to get the necessary twelve names.

Besides the efforts of the W. C. T. U. as against the whole traffic, the members of Mt. Olive Baptist church will make a strong effort to have a license refused John Goff, whose saloon is opposite the church edifice on Liberty street.

A Lamp Exploded.

Sunday evening a lamp exploded at the home of Mrs. Mattison, on Church street. Harry Bush, of the fire department, happened to be near at the time and he threw the lamp out doors before any damage resulted.

DIVIDED THE SPOILS.

PLAINFIELD WON AT BASKET BALL AND SUMMIT AT BOWLING.

The Visitors Were Unaccustomed to the Gymnasium, But Put Up a Good Fight With the Pins—They Won Very Easy

The Summit Y. M. C. A. sent two teams over to this city on Saturday night for contests in basket ball and bowling with teams from the local association. The double contest resulted in a victory for each side. The home team winning at basket ball, while the visitors proved the better at bowling.

The basket ball game was played first, and was very exciting throughout. The Summit boys put up a rattling good game, but the strangeness of the gymnasium, where the game was played, rather handicapped them. They did not give in, however, but made the home team work to get every goal. At the end of the first half of the game the score stood 5 to 4 in favor of the home team. The second half was very hotly contested, but the local players seemed to play better than before, and the game finally ended with the score at 11 to 7 in favor of the Plainfield team. The teams lined up as follows:

SUMMIT Y. M. C. A.		PLAINFIELD Y. M. C. A.
Lawson	right forward	Jessop
Nicoll	centre	Smith, G

In the second half of the game Hoceston, of Summit, played left guard on his team, while Marcley took Smith's place as centre on the home team. Nicoll did the brilliant work for the visitors, while the Plainfield forwards threw most of the goals for the home team. C. E. A. Heywood acted as referee and William Jessop as umpire.

The bowling match that followed was exciting, even if the scores were not very high. The first game was close, but Crane, of the local team, had a streak of poor luck and fell way behind his frame. Morris Sutphen was high man with 185. The Summit boys won by the close margin of 11 pins. The second game was not as close, and 33 pins separated the victorious Summit team from their opponents. The Plainfield boys bowled more evenly, but not as well.

The individual scores were as follows:

SUMMIT Y. M. C. A.	1st game	2d game
Dean	116	142
Merriam	136	153
Butts	136	146
Johnson	159	110
Clayton	128	119
	675	772

PLAINFIELD Y. M. C. A.	1st game	2d game
Sutphen, M	185	151
Bristol	139	138
Smith	134	129
Crane	80	129

LOOKED OVER THE COPS

MAYOR FISK CONDUCTS AN EXAMINATION OF CITY GUARDIANS.

A Starter Towards Improving the Force Throughout to Make It Efficient and a Credit to the City.

It is no doubt true that during Mayor Fisk's term of office many new things will be introduced into the city government in an attempt to make it as high grade as possible, and the first step in this direction was taken last Saturday afternoon. At that time His Honor, together with Councilmen Barrows, Westphal and Runyon, had every member of the police department appear before them and undergo a rigid examination. This included every special officer in the department as well as the regulars. When the examination was concluded it was known precisely just what clothes each one has that belongs to the city, as well as the pedigree of each man. A photograph of the group of men in this department would certainly make an interesting study, and to the uninitiated it is not known what an efficient body of men there is in this branch of the city government.

After the examination the regulars were marched down the street in double file, and they certainly made a fine appearance.

It is confidently believed that strong efforts will be made this year to bring this department up to a high standard of efficiency.

Common Oatmeal

Sold from barrels or oftentimes in fancy packages (but still common oatmeal) is hard to cook, bitter in taste and overheating to the system. It overtaxes the digestive organs and the body derives no benefit from it—it injures rather than helps.

H-O

gets rid of all that is objectionable in oatmeal and preserves all that is valuable. It makes oatmeal a human food, palatable and easy of digestion, without taking away any of the elements needed for the building up of body, bone and brain. All other oatmeals—"steam-dried," "kiln-dried" and "partly cooked"—leave off just where H-O begins.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING ON TIER'S LAKE SATURDAY.

Young Woman Has the Ice Give Way on Which She Was Skating, Precipitating Her Into the Lake—Saved by Amos Stites

A narrow escape from drowning occurred last Saturday afternoon near the Elm street bridge which spans the upper part of Tier's lake. With several girl friends, Miss Helen Grapp was skating, when suddenly the ice gave way with her and she went down to a considerable depth. Her frantic aries for help attracted the attention of her young companions who, upon arrival, were powerless. They then ran back for Amos Stites, the watchman at the lake, and he hastened to the scene just in time to save the young girl's life, for in a few minutes she would undoubtedly have drowned. With great difficulty Mr. Stites succeeded in getting the girl on shore, where she almost fainted away. As soon as possible Mr. Stites carried her to the home of Mrs. Smith on Westervelt avenue, where dry clothes were provided and she was made comfortable. A little later the unfortunate girl was able to go home. Great credit is due Mr. Stites for his bravery in rescuing the girl.

While Miss Percy Emmons, of Prospect place, was skating on Smalley's mill pond, Saturday evening, the ice broke and Miss Emmons went into the water up to her waist. She was soon rescued from her unpleasant position by some of her friends.

James McGee Was the Leader.

The rooms of the W. C. T. U. were filled to overflowing Sunday afternoon when a most interesting meeting was held. James McGee was the leader and, after reading Scripture selections from the fourth chapter of Ephesians and the last chapter of Matthews, he made a few remarks, encouraging the members and their friends to press forward in the grand work of saving souls. A portion of the Grace M. E. church choir was present and sang "If Ye Love Me, Keep My Commandments," very acceptably.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

A summons was issued Monday in the case of Werner against Apzar, which is returnable in Justice Newcorn's court, January 18th. Executions have been issued in the following cases: Frank against Smith; McVey against Allen; Linke against Bolger; Kelly against Tobin and Collins.

USED HEAD FOR A RAM.

A CRAZY NORWEGIAN ATTEMPTS SUICIDE IN A STATION HOUSE CELL.

When Left Alone He Butted His Cranium Against the Iron Cell Grating Until it Was Fearfully Cut—Tied to a Cot.

Never in the annals of the Plainfield police department have the officers been called upon to subdue such a violent prisoner as was landed in the rookery on Saturday night by Patrolman Freleigh. He was a Norwegian and gave the name of John Johanson. Two of Plainfield's physicians confirmed the police in the opinion that the man was wildly insane.

Johanson has been employed on a farm near New Market and Saturday night came to Plainfield. He went to see Mr. Thompson, who lives on East Second street. Johanson acted in such a strange manner and grew so violent that Mr. Thompson became worried for the safety of his family and finally appealed to Patrolman Freleigh who was passing the house, and the officer took the man in charge. Johanson objected to the arrest and struggled in the grasp of the officer. He finally quieted down and was taken to the lock-up and placed in one of the cells.

Sergeant Kiely was on duty at the lock-up and kept his eye on the stranger but the latter apparently went to sleep. About two o'clock the sergeant went out on the street only to be called back by his wife, who, in the rooms above the station house, had a great disturbance down stairs. The Sergeant returned to find the man violently dashing his head into the iron door of the cell. The back of his head was cut and was bleeding freely. Kiely opened the door only to have the man rush madly at him and strike him with his head in the stomach. Patrolman Freleigh happened to be in the building at the time and he rushed to the scene and tried to hold the man. Johanson fought with demonic rage and it took the combined efforts of Kiely and Freleigh to fasten the struggling man to a chair. The shackles were placed on his hands and feet and he was finally quieted.

It was then about three o'clock in the morning and Dr. Simpson was called to dress the self-inflicted wounds of the maniac.

The Mayor was communicated with and it was decided to secure a cot and restraining apparatus to hold the man in. It was procured and Johanson was strapped to the cot.

Sunday morning he was examined by Drs. Simpson and Davis and they declared him insane. Johanson seemed to have recovered from the paroxysm in the morning and was perfectly quiet so he was released from the cot and locked up again. Sunday night he was again taken with a violent spell and Roundsman Mettor, who was in charge of him, had hard work to place him in the restraining apparatus. He was kept thus all night and seemed better in the morning. Chief Grant went to Elizabeth Monday a.m. after the commitment papers and in the afternoon Sergeant Kiely conveyed the insane man to Morris Plains where he will be placed in the New Jersey State Hospital.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Come put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

HONORED E. R. ACKERMAN

CHOSEN SECRETARY OF THE NEW JERSEY ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

The Member of the Eighth District Delivered the Official Vote to the Officers Prescribed by the Constitution.

The meeting of the New Jersey Electoral College was held in the Governor's room at the State House, Trenton, Monday, and Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city, elector in the Eighth Congressional District, was in attendance. A grand dinner, at the the residence of Colonel Robing, the elector from Trenton, preceded the meeting of the College. Vice-President-elect Garret A. Hobert and Senator W. J. Sewell were present at the dinner.

B. H. Grey, of Camden, was made president of the College and Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city, was elected secretary. It devolved on Mr. Ackerman to deliver the three envelopes containing the copy of the vote, one to the messenger appointed to go to Washington, another to be taken to the Post Office and registered to the President of the Senate, and the last to be delivered to Hon. Andrew Kilpatrick, the United States District Judge at Trenton, and or this latter errand Mr. Ackerman went this morning. Those who were at the North avenue station this morning when Mr. Ackerman went away had a chance to see a copy of the vote of New Jersey with the signatures of the electors attached.

As youngest member of the College, Mr. Ackerman had the chance to be made made messenger to deliver the copy to Washington but he preferred the position of secretary which was offered him.

ON A PERMANENT FOOTING.

Charity Organized Aid Association Work Now Recognized.

One of the three regular meetings of the Charity Organized Aid Association was held in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church Monday evening with President Tyler in the chair.

The report of the treasurer was read and showed that there is a balance of $117.49 in the treasury and all bills are paid up to January 1st.

Rev. G. Kennedy Newell reported for the district committee and the statement was very interesting. The printing committee was instructed to procure a proper record book for the use of the agent, together with blank forms required in the correspondence and office work of the agent.

The office committee was authorized to make suitable repairs, and to provide office fixtures and furniture to facilitate the work of the office.

The usefulness of the association is becoming more and more apparent to the churches and charitable organizations in town, and the disposition to use its information and general facilities is increasing. It is now felt that the association is on permanent footing and has the sympathy of all classes in Plainfield.

INFORMAL AND ENJOYABLE.

Miss Mary A. Luckey Entertained Young Friends at Cards.

An informal, but very enjoyable, progressive euchre party was given by Miss Mary A. Luckey on Saturday evening at her home on East Sixth street in honor of her guest, Miss Madeline Griffith, of New York. The first part of the evening passed pleasantly in an exciting game of euchre, in which Miss Griffith and Walter B. Rittenhouse were the winners. The consolation prizes were awarded to Miss Mary Collier and Charles Noble. The first prizes were very handsome, while the others were the cause of much laughter. The tally cards were decorated with little brownies, drawn by Miss Griffith. Refreshments were then served and the rest of the evening was spent in dancing.

Among those present were the Misses Grace Petrie, Ethel Holmes, Mary Collier, Bertha Thorn, Mary Buckle, Emma Buckle and Grace Crane, and Edward Petrie, Walter B. Rittenhouse, J. Vincent Rittenhouse, Wilbur F. Cornwell, Charles Noble, Henry B. Drake, Allan Taylor and Will Cortell.

Sheriff Kirk's New Order.

Sheriff Kirk has instituted one or two reforms since he came into office, and has well earned the gratitude of many people, especially of women, who have business in his office, the courtroom or in the other offices in the upper part of the building. He has issued an order announcing that on and after this date no loafing or smoking will be allowed in the approaches to the courtroom or to the sheriff's office. This is a move in the right direction, as in years past the assembling of idlers in the corridors of the court house has been very annoying to those who have business there.—Elizabeth Journal.

A Tin Wedding.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Luckey, of West Second street, Monday evening, was the scene of a tin wedding, it being their tenth wedding anniversary. About twenty-five of their friends were present. The evening was spent by playing games, singing and general sociability.

MONEY BEHIND THIS TALK

$25,000 DEPOSITED FOR THE NEW TROLLEY ROAD.

Chandler W. Riker, Who is Interested in the Plainfield System, Says the Road From Elizabeth to Westfield Will be Built

There was deposited with the State Treasurer Monday morning $25,000 by Chandler W. Riker, who has been made president of a company which has been incorporated to operate a trolley line from the Central Railroad Station in Elizabeth to Westfield. The other officers of the company are Adrian Riker, brother of C. W. Riker, treasurer, and Colonel E. W. Hine, of Orange, secretary.

It is understood that Bernard M. Shanley, of Newark and John D. Grimshaw, of New York, are also interested in the road. The capital stock is placed at $200,000.

The route of the new line will probably be as follows: From the Central Railroad arch up Morris avenue to Sayre street, to Chelton street, to Westfield avenue, thence along that thoroughfare to Westfield. The line will be about ten miles long, and will probably be double tracked. The overhead system will be used, and about fifteen cars will be run at first.

Chandler W. Riker was seen Monday by a New York News reporter. "Yes," said Mr. Riker, "I have been made president of the road, and we propose to push the affair along as quickly as possible. The matter of a road from Elizabeth to Westfield has been thought of for some years, but has never been fully projected until now. We are going there at the request of the property-owners and merchants who are clamoring for a line.

"We have had many assurances of good will. People have even offered to secure privileges for us in this line, and say they will bring over any opposition that there may be."

BICYCLISTS IN A SPILL.

Edward Voorhees' Nose Gashed and His Bicycle Wrecked.

Edward Voorhees, of the firm of VanZandt & Voorhees, of Park avenue, was in a bicycle wreck on Cole's hill, about 7 o'clock Monday night. He was on his way from Scotch Plains at the time and some careless rider crossed the road directly in front of him, and Mr. Voorhees' wheel struck the other one directly in the centre. Mr. Voorhees was thrown head foremost against the other wheel and received a bad cut on the bridge of his nose, from which blood flowed profusely. The wheels came together with such force that the tire on Mr. Voorhees' machine was punctured and the wooden rim on the front wheel was almost completely torn off.

The rider who caused the wreck, it is said, works at Scott's, and he, too, was thrown off, but he did not wait to exchange wheel cards or address, and mounting his wheel rode away. Mr. Voorhees was obliged to hail Newman's stage, and thus convey his disabled wheel back to Plainfield.

HOW TO BE SAVED.

Primary Teachers' Make Inspiring and Impressive Answers.

There were thirty-seven members present at the meeting of the Primary Teachers' Union held Monday afternoon. The lesson, "The Multitude Converted," was taught by Miss Shreve. The chief thought advanced was the effect of Peter's sermon on the multitude. To illustrate the lesson six members of the Union were placed side by side with their faces turned toward the wall. Each one was then asked the question "What Shall I Do to be Saved?" They then turned about and made a suitable reply to the question. This part of the meeting was very impressive.

The topic of the meeting was "Prayer," and Miss Rocap led the discussion, which was exceedingly interesting. The question as to whether a child should be taught a set prayer, or whether it should be taught to talk to God in a simple child-like manner, was thoroughly discussed, and it was decided that both forms should be used.

Wants to Be Postmaster.

Ex-Postmaster Norman C. Dunn, who is looking after the postoffice affairs since the death of the late James A. Baker, has a petition in circulation for appointment to fill the unexpired term, and it is said to be generously signed, both by the merchants and townspeople. Mr. Dunn is well-qualified for the office, and his appointment seems quite likely for the Scotch Plains office.

To Occupy New Offices.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, who for a number of years has occupied rooms in the building at the corner of Front and Somerset streets, will at an early date move to the building soon to be occupied by the City National Bank. He will have a suite of rooms over the bank. They will be modernly furnished and up-to-date in every respect.

—Thus far at the present term of court, only civil cases have come up for trial, and there are still several other cases to be disposed of before the criminal cases are brought on.

HORSEBACK DRILLS.

With Keen Interest Horsemen Greet the Winter Campaign.

New Games for Exhibition—The Horse Show Obliged by Public Interest to Revive High Jumping—Trick Riding in Favor.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

New York.—When fine horses are concerned there is no such thing as economy, as will be abundantly demonstrated at the big horse show to begin here a week from Monday. Poor old horses that have outlived their usefulness may sell for a few dollars each, but the other day in New York, a show horse differing but little from the ordinary farm animal in the cost of raising, brought $2,000 at auction. It was not a racer, never won a purse on the track in its life, and never will, but by patient and loving training had been qualified to be man's companion and best friend among brutes, a show saddle horse.

The season for indoor trick and exhibition riding and horseback drills and evolutions begins, in all the northern cities, this week.

I have just had a talk with John E. Cowdin, one of the judges of hunters and jumpers at the show, upon the new features of the exhibition. The most significant thing in the arrangements is the revival of the high jumping contest, which has been for several years omitted, but is now restored in direct answer to a strong demand from the box offices. The contest is, however limited to six feet six inches. At that height, all the horses that remain in competition will be judged upon form and action. Horses have taken a height of seven feet two inches.

I asked Mr. Cowdin, who is a member of the Rockaway hunt, and an experienced cross-country man, if jumping competitions over barriers that fall down if kicked by the horse as he goes over, do not tend to make the jumper a lobber in their work over more solid fences, and thus endanger their riders.

"No," he replied, "because in the field one rarely comes across a fence higher than four feet six inches, which a qualified competition jumper should clean with ease. You'll notice that the jumping contests are strong along through the entire week, at least one taking place each afternoon and evening, because riding contests of all kinds are unquestionably popular. There is no sight during the week finer to a horseman's eyes than the judging of the four-in-hands—five or six of them in the ring at the same time—an exhibition at once of skill in the driver and beauty and action in the animal. But it is the riding that brings the crowd, and particularly the jumping contests. The riding of the mounted policemen, particularly the squadron evolutions of the park policemen, are always well liked.

Coaching is much more strongly represented on the board of directors of the show than riding by such famous whips as Frederic Bronson, F. A. Schermerhorn and Lawrence Kip; but it is the mounted horseman who wins the sympathy of the crowd; the young fellow not yet too big in the girth to take a hurdle with remote danger of a broken bone or so.

Herr A. Stoelzer, the veteran rider, has had a unique experience. Coming to this country in 1869, fresh from the famous Rittmeisters of Germany, he was one day stopped by a policeman and finally arrested for riding a horse up Fifth avenue during the hours of church service. Mr. Stoelzer lived to take his revenge by leading a cavalcade of 16 riders clattering up the avenue just at the time of "chirdly"—which was perhaps excusable under the circumstances.

It is hardly necessary to add that Mr. Stoelzer has seen a wonderful growth, for which the wealthy Germans of the country have perhaps been quite as much responsible as the American descendants of British fox-hunting squires. Along with it has come the evolution of trick, fancy and high school riding, which is certain to be in much favor this year.

In the lead for exhibition purposes will come the contests known as "gymkhana" races, and rough riding sports generally. Horse football played by from three to ten riders on a side, upon a modification of the ordinary football rules, is to be a favorite game in academies. Tent-pegging contests with the lance, sword contests on horseback and hurdle jumping on the bare-back horse are being put in practice by riding clubs. A pretty game for boys who do not mind an occasional fall is horseback wrestling, wherein each of two, three or four riders attempts to dismount the others from the frisky little polo ponies ridden in such games. The "Turk's head" exercise, or slashing with a sword at a swinging ball about as big as a man's head, is a sport long practiced in British cavalry contests and now introduced in the schools for exhibition purposes.

When larger numbers of horsemen and horsewomen come upon the scene it is for the purpose of drills and evolutions.

These grow more complicated every year. The riders circle, they waltz, they wheel by twos and fours, they oblique in single file and align by platoon, they go through the most intricate quadrille figures. Perhaps the highest degree of skill is shown in tandem riding, where evolutions have been perfected until from four riders with eight horses the number has been raised to 12 riders with 24 horses. Tandem riding with 16 riders will probably be practiced this winter for the first time in New York. It was two years ago that a tandem ride by 12 ladies was performed for the first time. The favorite arrangement is, of course, an exhibition by six lady riders and six gentlemen, the former upon white horses, the latter upon bay, or vice versa.

Riding clubs are mounted on well-trained saddle horses, and such animals are quite sufficient for evolution riding. The "high school" mount is quite another matter. A high school horse trained to the pirouette, to the "passage" or Spanish trot, to the Spanish walk, wherein each foot is lifted high and then thrust forward horizontally before being allowed to rest upon the earth, and to the galop a tempo, all in strict time with simple march or waltz music, is about as well educated as a horse can ever hope to become, is worth a good deal of money and is sincerely mourned by the kindest of masters when he dies. He is an equine aristocrat.

OWEN LANGDON.

PHILADELPHIANS LIKE CATFISH.

Is Chowdered Form They Are Almost as Popular as Scrapple.

"Philadelphia is the greatest catfish market in the world," said Mr. L. H. Cogswell at the Eleventh street wharf the other day. Two colored men were busily engaged beheading and skinning a big pile of big catfish. They were remarkably adept in the operation. While one, armed with a sharp knife, would cut off the head of a fish and slit its belly, the other would pick up the fish so treated and with a pair of nippers catch the skin deftly and pull it off. A Star reporter was watching the interesting operation and asked Mr. Cogswell where he found the demand for such a lot of catfish.

"We dispose of a very large number of the fish in this city, but when we have a surplus supply we ship it direct to Philadelphia. Philadelphia is the greatest catfish market in the world. In the districts inhabited largely by the poor venders go about the streets with buckets on their heads selling the fish, and their cry is somewhat similar to the familiar 'eo-a!' which we hear so frequently in Washington in neighborhoods similarly populated. Catfish are cooked in a variety of ways, but made into a chowder is the most popular form in which they are served. Nothing is more palatable than a well-prepared catfish chowder, and a great many people prefer a chowder made from the heads alone. You will notice that these two colored men who are cleaning the fish preserve a number of the largest heads. They have regular customers for the heads, which they will string in bunches and sell for probably as much as the same number of fish would bring.

"Yes," continued Mr. Cogswell, "those two fellows are very expert at skinning catfish. The best points in the vicinity of Washington for catching catfish are at Colonial beach and Marshall's point. The fall season in the fishing business is now open. The varieties that will be handled are rock fish and white perch, both of which are very large and very plentiful this year. Any surplus that we may have during the season in these varieties is shipped in ice to New York and Philadelphia, but catfish are only shipped to the latter city."—Washington Star.

Grateful for a Royal Peppering.

Details of an accident which happened while the prince of Wales was the guest of the earl of Derby at Tyrstone hall, near Pontefract, during the Doncaster week, are just to hand. The prince, Hon. Sir H. Keppel, Lord Londonderry and other members of the house party were rabbiting in the park when one of his royal highness' shots struck some iron railings and rebounded with great force into the faces of five of the beaters, who were ranging bushes near by. Fortunately nothing very serious resulted. The prince was evidently cognizant of the mishap, but one of the beaters, quite a typical Yorkshireman, who had received a portion of the shot in his face, shouted: "Hey! Don't send any more like that this way!" The fire became so hot that they has escaped further injury, speak of being shot by the heir apparent to the English throne with a considerable degree of pleasure, and retain the small pellets taken from various parts of their persons as interesting relics of the incident.—London Standard.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS

Senator Jones Says the Lines Should Be Made Toll Roads.

Will Push His Plan This Winter—He Explains His Plan for Government Control in an Authorized Interview.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

As is well known, Senator J. P. Jones, of Nevada, is an ardent advocate of the ownership of the railroads by the federal government, though he is not wholly in sympathy with the schemes for their actual operation by Uncle Sam. He has, however, formulated a plan of his own, to which he will devote almost his entire energies during the coming session of congress, and the details of this plan, which have not before been made public, become of interest, therefore, to those who disagree with his views, as well as those who are in sympathy with them.

"I believe that the people of the United States are ready to insist on the government assuming control of the railroads of the country," said Senator Jones to me the other day. "I am myself heartily in favor of it on general principles, but I do not approve of the plans thus far presented for bringing it about. Neither do I regard as wise the proposition to have the roads operated by the government, as that would be to place in the hands of a few men a dangerous political power that would be a menace to the public."

"How would you have the roads operated if not by the government?" I asked.

"By the people," replied Senator Jones. "My plan, which I worked out when the agitation for government ownership of the railroads was first advocated, is to have the government acquire the roads by purchase and foreclosure of the mortgages and indebtedness overdue, and throw them open to the public as in the case of toll roads.

"In the early days out west, when a toll road was built through a section of the mountains, the transporter of freight or passengers with his own vehicles, could pass over the road by the payment of a certain fee. That is precisely the system I propose for freight and passenger traffic on the railroads after the lines are acquired by the government.

"The tolls," continued the senator, "should be fixed at so low a rate as to produce just enough revenue for the expenses of direction and the keeping of the roadbed, tracks, stations, and other property pertaining to the roads, in a perfect state of repair and efficiency. Of course, there should be a sufficient surplus over operating expenses to maintain a fund for new bridges or stations on roads already built, and some provision might also be made for the construction of new lines.

"The railroad system of the entire country should be cut up into zones and divisions. The best qualified men should be employed by the government as managers and superintendents, at fixed salaries, and their tenure should be during good behavior. Promotion should be made in the order of merit and achievement only, and there should be special rewards in the way of promotions for those who have succeeded in avoiding accidents. The force required to keep the roads in order, to collect the tolls, and to dispatch the trains, would be comparatively small, as the greatest demand for men is, in the train service, for engineers, firemen, brakemen, conductors, etc., and these men would not be in the government service at all.

"The train service, under this system, whether for passengers or freight, would be entirely in the hands of the people. Thus a first-class engineer, a conductor and a brakeman would be at liberty to run a train of their own over any line in the country, under the conditions laid down by the government. All they would have to do would be to arrange for running time with the railroad authorities, and pay the tolls fixed by law.

"The project opens up boundless possibilities that are absolutely bewildering to a man with a grain of imagination, or capacity for seeing beyond the horizon of established custom. As no request to run a train for lawful purposes could be denied, the farmers of a given locality, who are now shut out of the markets by high freight rates, could hire or buy a few cars and an engine, and go themselves with their cattle or grain to the best market. The manufacturer could do the same thing, while the pleasure seeker might visit every section of the continent, with every luxury, for what it now costs him to go from New York to San Francisco.

"But, would not the people who now own and control the cars and locomotives, mondpolize the traffic as at present?"

"There would be no danger of that first, because the skilled men would not run trains for others when they had the opportunity to conduct a more profitable business for themselves; and, second, because the great organic change affected in the whole business of carrying freight and passengers would not appeal to those now in control, as the present system does. There would be absolutely free competition.

"When you come to think of it, what is really known by the men who own the railroads about the actual operation of the many thousands of miles of railroad which they nominally control? What can they know of the time schedules, the dispatching and running of trains, the collection of freight and its delivery at its various destinations?

"All these departments are under the direct supervision of employes, who do the actual work of carrying on the business of the roads.

"If my plan is adopted, the common carriers of this country will be the men who actually do the work, and who would take a personal pride in making all classes of transportation as safe, as expeditious, as cheap and as comfortable as possible.

"It would be the duty of the government to maintain the integrity of the various roadbeds and bridges, regardless of the premium paid by any line; as there would be free and open competition, legislation would not be necessary to the establishment of decent and safe systems of braking, heating and lighting cars, and it would be an end to the [illegible] of men beyond their engagements.

"I believe, further, that free competition would bring about the introduction of sleeping cars on all night trains, so that passengers would no longer be obliged to sit or recline in cramped positions when they ought to be resting as comfortably as if they were at home. You see, the various carriers would vie with one another in giving the best possible accommodations, day and night, to all the patrons, and those who would not give sleeping accomodations without extra charge could not secure night passengers.

"Dining cars would be conducted also in such a manner as to enable people of moderate means to have their meals at reasonable hours, without being obliged to pay prices that only the rich can afford, and many other advantages will be secured by the patrons of railroads from which they are now debarred."

Mr. Jones feels sure that by the plans he has matured for the purchase of the roads no injustice will be done to those now holding stock in the lines, since it comprehends due compensation to all. More than that, he believes it will insure returns to many who have invested in roads, which are now unprofitable, and likely under present conditions to continue to be operated at a loss. He admits that what are commonly known as the "watered stock interests" may suffer some loss.

"It will take time, of course," he says, "to bring about the change I advocate. The first step will be the appointment of a commission to inquire into the whole subject, and report from time to time to the best methods of procedure. I advocate the policy of making the service of directing the railroads under the government as distinguished as the army or navy."

Better Than Position and Wealth.

See here, young people! Not all can gain high position, or great wealth, or social influence, or wide reputation. But all may have that which is better than position and wealth and social influence and reputation — all may possess a pure heart and a clean life. An upright, unselfish life spent amid poverty and obscurity is a larger life than that lived by a king or queen who knows not God and righteousness as

A FEMALE CREW.

BY ARDEN.

"Now which one?" asked Polly, as she stood on tiptoe that she might determine the point.

She was a plump Polly.

She was short Polly, and the mantelpiece was a high one, so that there was no other thing to do than to stand on tiptoe while she gazed at two faces and wondered: "Which one?"

They were not female faces, but Polly, though young, was old enough to take a very positive interest in masculine faces. She had already decided which one she would like to marry, and would she have been surprised if some day, out of that surface of paper on the mantel-piece, had broken a voice: "Polly, my dear, as I love you, will you marry me?"

But he had maintained a grave silence because only a picture, for which reason nobody could claim credit for unusual observation if I speak for a man. Yes, dumb, dumb, and that gave Polly a warm affection a chill. Then he was her "first cousin Joe," and a kind of a brother was he not? That gave her marrying fewer accidental chill. This young man was very handsome. His eyes were as expressive as Polly's, and that is saying a good deal. Her eyes were black, soft and loving. Anyone that had eyes as handsome as Polly Rickerl's could be excellent piece of property. His features were very regular. The lines of his mouth showed firmness, yet tenderness, and Polly, first looking round to see if Aunt Nabby were "peekin'," had kissed the picture for the space of our story. Aunt Nabby was not given, though, to "peekin'." That very moment she was frying doughnuts because Polly liked them. The other picture on the mantelpiece was that of an honest, reliable looking man, who had no affection for him. She was a visitor under the roof, and in the two weeks that her visit had stretched across, she had learned very much about the history of beings whose only presence was that of pictures. Had not Aunt Nabby said that this manly, sensible face belonged to a sailor, a young captain?

"Oh, the other is a seaman only; but I had rather marry a handsome sailor than a homely, stiff captain," was Polly's opinion.

She sighed.

She was thinking that the handsome sailor was only Cousin Joe. She hesitated a moment, kissed the photograph again, and then went downstairs to look out of a window fronting the sea and to pity sailors.

Everybody in the neighborhood had something to do with the sea, which was only a bit of a way off, and kept pounding night and day on the rocks, making all the fuss it could to attract as much attention as possible. To keep this unruly sea in any kind of subjection every one must do something. Uncle Ronald Rickerl was the keeper of the yellow life-saving station on the rim of the gray sands.

Uncle Ronald was a big, burly, good natured kind of a fellow. Aunt Nabby was a slim, slender woman, whose thoughts were quick moving, darting out like swallows' wings, and her eye sparkled like a run of brook water the day the spring has lifted the lid of ice covering it.

Said Uncle Ronald to Aunt Nabby, in the hearing of Polly at the window:

"I'd like to have you, Nabby, clean up at the station, if you will, sweep round and so on. Nothin' doin' there in summer, but I want to keep things sort of slicked up, and I'll low you the pay for it. You can't be far off to my father-patch t'other side of the black pasture."

"I will, Ronald."

"Polly, room as I have finished these here doughnuts—one more one!" cried Aunt Nabby. "We will run that life-savin' station this forenoon. They shall have a female crew to-day. You get the brooms ready. It is a worn-out thing blown at the station. We'll be lively and start a-sweepin'."

A small but sprightly broom-brigade soon charged upon the station and captured it without difficulty. Windows were thrown up, the brooms set to whisking, and the dust routed.

The living-room below, the men's sleeping quarters by day, speedily was swept. The boatroom, with its apparatus of surfboat and breeches-buoy, lifecar and Lyle gun, rockets and signals received prompt attention, and this floor also was thoroughly swept. Aunt Nabby remained to do some "cleaning out" behind the door where one of the other but less particular crew had left a heap of dirt. Polly, singing away, went up stairs hopping like a robin from step to step, landing on the threshold of the masculine crew's quarters by flight.

"The beds look all right," said Polly, eying six iron beds, neatly covered with bedding and set in two prim rows along the northern and southern walls of the room. "I'll just look at them, and know those men didn't sweep under the beds. N-o, before I sweep, I'll take a look-off from the look-out on the roof."

This was a platform on the roof, railed around and supporting a flagstaff. Here on clear days a lookout was kept by the surfmen. If need be, a signal could be run up to the top of the staff, and any needy craft on the water promptly instructed.

"Those women's eyes can see as quick as men's," murmured Polly, "and we will have it so to-day."

On her way up a short flight of steps to the lookout she halted in a little recess and examined the box of signals with interest. Since her arrival she had been very much interested in the signal department, and, instructed by Uncle Ronald, felt that she could now handle those signals as readily as the keeper himself.

"I don't I wish that Cousin Joe, whom I never saw only in his picture, were out on the water and needed some signaling from the shore!"

If she had followed the promptings of her heart and the signal vocabulary per-

...ticed, she would have at once signaled, "I love thee, Joseph." But he was not within Joe, and recognizing any demonstration of special interest, she lifted the scuttle in the roof, threw a leg and climbed upon the platform, and looked off.

Her heart started up and began to beat like a thresher's flail, for there was a schooner flying a signal. She knew what it meant. Was it Cousin Joe out there? Whoever it was, a signal of distress" was fluttering above the vessel. Should Polly run and get Uncle Ronald? When in the absence of the keeper during the season of closed doors and recumbent beds at the station, any disaster might happen on the water, the proper procedure was to run for the keeper and notify him. At the head of as many of the old crew as he could gather from the cornfields and fish-houses, the keeper hastened to the station, operating as might be advisable. Uncle Ronald, though, was off on a "sater-patch," a mile away, and the nearest member of the United States navy, dickling clams a mile further the other, could sink off this very minute.

"Wasn't a female crew running this station to-day?" soliloquized Polly. "I'll answer that signal myself!"

The schooner was so near the shore that if her sails had been set the appropriate signal would have been the JD of the international code of signals. Polly understood it to-day, for "this vessel had dropped her canvas, as if meaning to halt anyway, and there was had a suspicious look, as if sinking.

"I'll let them know they are recognized, and that they may expect help," said Polly, magnificently.

Turning away from the staff, at whose head now fluttered this signal like a tongue of cheering speech, Polly ran down the short stairway into the crew's sleeping quarters, then down the stairs, stopping to the kitchen, and cried, in jerks:

"Oh—oh!—zoundal—auntie—quick! Danger!"

"What?"

"Quick!"

She was now darting through the outer door.

"Git your uncle, Polly!"

"Too—too—far off! Come!"

And Nabby sprang after Polly.

"Let's—take—uncle's—boat, Aunt Nabby!"

"We go off?"

"Yes—yes! You can row; so can I."

"Good for girl!" cried Aunt Nabby. "I am with ye."

They rushed uncle's boat down to the firm, shelving sands. They pulled it through the low-running [illegible] and soon were alongside the schooner in distress.

"Quick—quick!" said a sailor, throwing a box to the vessel's rail. "I ran on the rock in the night, lost my boat, though we got off the rock, started a leak, and have been settlin' ever since there, I'll go back with ye. Then I'll pull off and get another load. Cap'n is in the cabin gettin' things up. You are good to come off—women, too. Ready? Hum—now? All together. Pull!"

The boat was rowed ashore, the most precious with papers and money, carried up the sands, and then the sailor said:

"Lemme go back alone. I will make more room for the next load, with cap'n or anyone that comes."

"I won't marry that captain, running on a rock," thought Polly. "He must be stupid and homely. Give me a handsome sailor."

She thought of Cousin Joe and the homely captain perched in state on the mantel-piece at the house.

As if looking behind and discovering her thoughts, the sailor remarked:

"It wan't the fault of our cap'n that we were run that close on anybody's. Things will happen, you know."

"I wouldn't marry him anyway," silently resolved Polly.

As the boat was rustling through the surf, the sailor said:

"Now, Polly, we are the crew to-day, you know, and must do just as the crew does to the shipwrecked. I'll start a fire in the kitchen stove in the station. I saw some coffee and sugar down there among the stores. I'll make some milk and cake and biskit. We'll fix 'em. You watch by the stuff, as it comes. Rest of the crew is agoin' to the station."

Load after load was safely brought from the schooner, and by the time it was settling. With the last boat-load came the captain. Polly started when she saw him step on the sands. Why hadn't she seen it while he was in the boat nearing the land? Cousin Joe's picture hung on the mantel-piece, and, signing up, had stepped out of the boat, she could not have been more surprised. This was Cousin Joe himself. She sprang forward.

"Cousin Joe, yes, is it you?" she cried, this short surfman flying up to him, reaching as high as she could and throwing her arms about him.

"I—I—I—" stammered the young man, blushing, though not displeased. "I—I—took you for my whole heart for helping us so nobly, but I am not your Cousin Joe, sorry to say!"

"Not Polly's Cousin Joe?

"Why, why!" she murmured, in confusion, starting back.

Another voice, though, was speaking somebody from the station—and laughing heartily. "Dick Warner, I do declare—ha, ha! Glad to see ye hunt Polly, Polly, dear, come here! This is Uncle Ronald."

"I thought it was Cousin Joe—that picture on the mantel-piece," said Polly, blushing and hanging low her head.

"No, no," screamed Aunt Nabby, "you made a mistake. Cousin Joe is t'other picture—ha, ha! He'll be hum soon!"

Yes, the real Cousin Joe came home soon, and just in time to hear of the engagement between a certain young female surfman and Capt. Richard Warner.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Talleyrand never was in love but once, and that was when he was about 70 years old. When Napoleon ordered him to marry and picked out a wife for him, he pleaded like youthful attachment, which was immediately scoffed at by the great matchmaker as a piece of nonsense.

IN THE BAHAMAS

BY WILFRED BENDALL.

Amongst the numerous British colonies there is none, perhaps, about which the average Englishman is more hazy than about the Bahamas—the isles of June—of the Pink Pearl—of the Flounder, as they have been variously styled. Several reasons may account for this. The islands lie apart from the other West Indian possessions, and out of the course of the great steamships; they are in no direct communication with England whatever, nor with the nearest British colony, Jamaica, except by means of an occasional sailing vessel—and from all local schooners may heaven preserve the unwary visitor!

Most of the export and import trade is with the United States, and the only regular communication with the islands is furnished by the American steamers leaving New York fortnightly, calling at Nassau, and proceeding to Cienfuego on the south coast of Cuba, and by the Plant Steamship company, which runs a steamer every three weeks between New York and Nassau.

The islands are largely patronized by American visitors during the winter months, who resort thither to enjoy the superb climate; and as a traveling Englishman is quite a rara avis, every stranger is assumed to be American until he proclaims his nationality.

The Bahama archipelago, a group of some 600 islands (only 20 inhabited), widely scattered, the extremes being something over 400 miles apart. Many of them are only partially explored, and some of the smaller ones scarcely known; the population is of consequence, very scanty, the last census giving only 44,000, of which about 90 per cent. are colored people.

Nassau, the capital (and indeed the only town worthy the name), is situated on New Providence, an island about the size and shape of Isle of Wight. The finest buildings the town possesses are the jail, the hospital and the Royal Victoria hotel, said to be the largest in the West Indies. It is only open from Christmas till the end of April, that being the times at which visitors come from the states; although as far as the climate is concerned, the rains are over by October and the winter is cool and delightful from the beginning of November. The thermometer during the winter varies between 70 and 80 degrees.

At other times of the year accommodations can be had at the Curry house and at various boarding establishments. The bank, post office and most of the shops are in Bay street—a long, wide street, planted with almond trees, running along the coast, east and west. The roads around the town and indeed for into the country are excellent. The island cannot boast of any special beauty of scenery; with the exception of a very low range of hills, the country is flat, in some places swampy. The cultivated portions are always covered with vegetation, sometimes by an almost impenetrable bush, sometimes by pine trees, and sometimes by many isles of beautiful palmettos—plantations which no London drawing-room is complete nowadays.

At the back of Nassau is a limestone rider through or over which are roads leading to the native towns. These lying sheltered from the dry north wind, and hence being somewhat damper and warmer than the capital, exhibit the most wonderful wealth of tropical vegetation. Each cabin stands in the midst of a garden where such utility trees as cocoanut palms, oranges, bananas, guavas, and sometimes breadfruit, are sure to be seen; the merely ornamental plants are also not forgotten; every species of rose seems to run wild in the gardens, and in this land of perpetual summer the trees keep blooming right along," as an American might express it. There are four of these native settlements at the back of Nassau, and to a botanist nothing can be more interesting than a ramble through the streets, or, more properly speaking, lanes.

The list of trees and plants flourishing on the island seems almost inexhaustible; besides those before mentioned, some of the best known are: silk cotton, banyan, mahogany, ebony, satin-wood, pine-apples, grape fruit, shaddocks, mangoes, yams, plantains, sugar cane, etc.

The chief and oldest industry of the place is sponging; an apparently endless supply of sponge is found on the reefs which surround the islands. The sponge boats are constantly returning to Nassau with their cargoes, and large heaps may be seen almost any morning in the exchange. Sponge is sold by auction, clipped and pressed, packed in bales, and dispatched to agents in New York and London. Several species are found, but none of them are of so fine quality as most of the sorts from the Mediterranean.

Vast quantities of live turtle are continually being shipped, which figure later at Delmonico's and the London restaurants. Another species (the nonpareil) is also abundant, and furnishes an important industry in Nassau; the shells are polished whole, and found very attractive ornaments, or are cut up to make combs and other small articles.

The two great prizes for which every fisherman is on the lookout are the pink pearls and amber gris. The former are found in the flesh of the large conch (strombus gigas), a very abundant shell which is dived for by the boys, who are most expert in this exercise. A pearl of unusually large size was purchased by a dealer in Nassau lately for $400; as, however, only one shell in a hundred contains a pearl, and then probably only a small one, pearl fishing is a decidedly precarious means of livelihood. The natives appear to relish the flesh of the conch, but it is somewhat an acquired taste.

Ambergris, which is formed by a disease in the whale, is occasionally found on the islands, and a piece of it is a small fortune to the lucky finder.

During the last ten years an industry has been started which bids fair to be of great importance; it is the cultivation of sisal, a species of aloe (agave americana), the fiber of which supplies the best material for rope making. There are several plantations of it in New Providence, Abaco, and other islands, but Andros is found most suitable for its growth. This is the largest of the Bahama isles, and the one lying nearest Nassau. It is 90 miles long and 40 miles across the middle, with a population of 3,400, of which only 20 or 30 are white people. It has a rocky soil and is covered almost everywhere with impenetrable bush. The few settlements are on the east coast, and the center of the island has never been explored. This furnishes food for the superstitious and fanciful minds of the negroes, who relate wonderful tales of a race of giants and various supernatural beings who are supposed to inhabit the interior and occasionally visit the coast at night. Almost all the settlers on this island are engaged in sisal cultivation, of which there are several large plantations; that of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P., being notable.

The long straggling island of Eleuthera has also sisal estates, though the local specialty is the cultivation of pineapples. The island is cooler in summer than Nassau, and many of the inhabitants are glad to escape from the metropolis to Governor's Harbor and other settlements, where decent accommodations may be found, which is more than can be said of most of the other islands.

Inagua, the most southerly of the group, lying close to Hayti, is somewhat different in character. It possesses extensive pasturages, and numerous wild horses. Mention must be made of San Salvador, which was the first land touched upon by Columbus. He subsequently visited New Providence, October 17, 1492, to which he named Fernandina after Ferdinand of Spain.

The island was chiefly celebrated in early days on account of the deeds of a daring set of pirates who had fixed on Nassau as their headquarters. The reefs and shoals which surround the harbor made a convenient retreat for those knowing the waters, but extremely dangerous for any unwary vessel that might be driven towards the shores. The pirates first attracted so much attention that, at the solicitation of British merchants George I. dispatched an armament to reduce the colony to obedience. During the early part of the American war of independence the island was taken by Commodore Hopkins, but abandoned as untenable. It was retaken in 1781 by the Spaniards and Americans, but afterwards restored to Great Britain.

Of course in the palmy days of the Bahamas (like the other West Indies) were before the abolition of slavery; still during the American civil war, money literally poured into Nassau. It was the principal bone for blockade running, and all provisions and stores were bought up at fabulous prices.

The sights of Nassau are certainly not numerous; there are two, however, which the visitor should not neglect. The first is the phosphorescent lake which lies two miles east of the town, and only about 50 yards from the sea, with which it is connected by a channel. It is said to be the most phosphorescent lake in the world, but the reason of the phosphorescence has never been satisfactorily explained. The lake, or pond, is artificial, having been cut many years ago, probably for storing purposes. When it is dark on any dark night the water presents a wonderful spectacle. A boat is there for the use of visitors, and plenty of small boys always on hand to dive under and around it. As soon as the water is disturbed, it appears simply transformed into liquid fire.

The other sight to be recommended is a visit to Grantstown (one of the native settlements) on a Saturday evening. Stalls covered with various comestibles line the streets, the whole brilliantly illuminated by a small bundle of candlewood, which forms a splendid natural torch. Then there are shanties where characteristic negro singing and dancing may be heard and seen.

Surely there never was such a place for psalm-singing as Nassau; it seems to be the only dissipation of the colored people. Almost every night there is a function in the various churches and chapels of the town—a service, in fact, choral practice. The negroes are notably a musical race, and here they have full opportunity of cultivating their tastes as far as psalmody is concerned.

The knowledge of the tonic sol-fa system which obtains in the part-singing of the people is really admirable; the quality of the voices often leaves much to be desired, but the singing is correct and always hearty, not to say boisterous. The sailors on the sponge boats, not otherwise, when their attention is not otherwise required, usually produce their tonic sol-fa books and begin deciphering new tunes, sometimes in two or three parts, in a really extraordinary manner. Moreover when the negroes are not talking or eating they are usually singing hymns. There are several races of negroes in the islands, successors of those originally brought by the Spaniards. Some of the African languages are still spoken by the older people amongst themselves, though English is the only language one hears, and remarkably pure English it is, for the most part, with but very little slang.

Mosquitoes are a terrible scourge to the island, still from November to May Nassau is practically free from them. Snakes are plentiful in the bush, but are perfectly harmless. Tarantulas and centipedes are numerous, but seldom take the trouble to look for them. The most brilliant humming birds and butterflies are always abundant.—Pall Mall Magazine.

Cost of Fertilizers.

The department of agriculture states that the average cost of fertilizers for an acre of wheat in New Hampshire is $5.29. In the newer states this item cuts little figure.

[illegible] OF NATURE.

Soldiers to Be Given Systematic Training in Athletics.

Highly Popular with the Men — Gen. Miles' Pet Plan in Operation—Football and Other Matches for Uncle Sam's Men.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

Uncle Sam has concluded that prolonged peace is making his soldiers altogether too fleshy. Hereafter they must be trained down; and among other things they must learn to run. It is not meant to insinuate that running is hereafter to be the favorite mode of warfare of our forces, unless in pursuit of a fleeing enemy; but it is essential for a soldier to be active and lithe-limbed. It is not sufficient that he is well versed in the manual of arms and can go through the bayonet exercise with the precision of machines; his calling is one which requires an athletic physique, and the army authorities propose to see that he gets it.

"An athletic team will immediately be formed at every post in the department of Colorado. In accordance with specified rules, to be commanded by a commissioned officer, selected by the post commander."

So reads the order issued by Gen. Wheaton, U. S. A., commanding the department in question. The order has been approved by the war department and by Maj. Gen. Miles, commander in chief of the army of the United States, and, in consequence, field athletics are to become just as much a recognized part of the soldiers' training as drill or target practice.

For a long time past Gen. Miles has been urging upon the department at Washington the importance of giving the rank and file of the army athletic instruction; and now that the department has at length approved of the suggestion, the different commanders are promptly acting upon it, and athletic teams are being formed at every fort and army post throughout the country. Matches between the teams of different posts are also to be arranged.

Athletic teams, as a rule, are made up of men who take a natural interest in field sports, and who join an athletic club of their own accord. They do things differently in the army, however; nothing is left to the option of the individual. But unlike some military orders, it is not simply from the fact that they are orders, the command to form athletic teams has been hailed by the men with delight; and now, between and after drill hours, the parade ground of post or fort is turned into an athletic ground, and men who otherwise might be in the guardhouse for some trivial infraction of military discipline, may be seen in regulation track costume, running, vaulting, jumping, and indulging in almost every variety of athletic exercise.

That the introduction of athletic training into the army is a good thing for the men, both physically and morally, is conceded by all. While the greater part of the United States army was busily engaged in chasing bands of hostile Indians all over the western portion of the country, the need of field athletics was not particularly felt, the men had exercise enough and to spare in endeavoring to keep within striking distance of their active foes. But when the savages were safely disposed of on the different reservations and the monotony of garrison life began, the once hardy soldiers lost their activity, and what, in their fighting days, was but a short jaunt, became, through the enervating influence of garrison life, a hard day's work.

It was while stationed in the west among these men that Gen. Miles, himself an old Indian campaigner, began to see the need of a thorough athletic training for the soldier. Other nations take pains to develop the physique of their soldiers as well as to drill them in tactics; why should not the United States do the same, he reasoned; and from that time until now Gen. Miles has been an enthusiast upon the subject of field athletics. To be sure, the troops were often taken on practice marches across country, or allowed to play an occasional game of football with some civilian team or a team from some neighboring army post; but there was no system, and the exercise was transitory in its effect.

Thus far the official introduction into the army of field sports is in its infancy, but the doubtful stage is passed, and army athletics are with the soldiers to stay.

A report has just been made to the war department by Col. Shafter, at present commanding the department of California, of a series of competitive athletic games held by the soldiers of the department, in which hand ball, tug-of-war, standing high jump, running, putting the hammer and shot, hurdle races, and baseball were the principal games indulged in; and some very good records were made.

Not only are the men instructed in ordinary field sports, but they have some novel sports of their own. A favorite one is a swimming match in light marching order, while another is a 100-yard race, or a 440-yard race, the contestants carrying their guns and being in heavy marching order.

All these tend to give the men an improved physique and to better fit them for the difficulties of long marches. The United States army, to quote the words of an officer stationed at New York, "is a fine body of men, and with thorough athletic training, they will make troops second to none in the world."

AN EYE TO BUSINESS.

A Philadelphia Chinaman Wanted to Dry Shirts on the City Hall Roof.

Three Chinamen were in the big elevator which carried the "Odd Bits" man to one of the upper offices in the city hall a day or two ago.

"What floor?" queried the elevator man.

Knowledge of the English language was evidently a scarce article with the Mongolians, for they looked at each other and at the elevator man. Then they chattered among themselves for a moment.

"No flool," one of them finally said. "Loof."

They were carried up as far as the elevator went and then directed to the stairway, which leads out upon the roof of the hall. The "Odd Bits" man followed them.

The Chinamen wandered over the top of the big hailing arm in awe, looking up and down and around, but never venturing very near the edge anywhere.

"No like fall," one of them explained. "Very much hurt."

The top floor held their attention most. They stood and gazed at it with wide open mouths for a long time.

"Him velly high," the talkative one of the three suggested to an attache of the building.

"Yes," the latter responded with a wink to a bystander, "4,000 feet."

The wonderful information was received without any comment by the Chinamen and the joke was lost. If the attache had said 20,000 it would have been all the same.

When they had satisfied their sight-seeing inclination the Mongolians started for the stairway.

"Him giate building," the spokesman confided to the watchman at the door. "We come some more."

"And they will," was the watchman's comment. "We have a batch of them every day. They're welcome, too, all except one fellow I know."

"Why isn't he welcome?"

"Because he suggested one day he was up here that the roof would be a 'giate place to dly shirts.' I gave him a line of talk that must have scared him, for he hasn't been back since."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

An Antiquarian Lunch.

Amaziah Dukes, a New York broker, recently said: "I have eaten apples that ripened more than 1,800 years ago, bread made from wheat grown before the children of Israel passed through the Red sea, spread it with butter that was made when Elizabeth was queen of England, and washed down the repast with wine that was sold when Columbus was playing barefoot with the boys of Genoa. The whole meal with the wine was given by an antiquary named Goebel, in the city of Brussels, in 1871. The apples were from an earthen jar taken from the ruins of Pompeii, the buried city to whose people we owe our knowledge of cooking fruit. The wheat was taken from a chamber in one of the pyramids, the butter from a stone shelf in an old well in Scotland, where for centuries it had laid in an earthen crock in icy water, and the wine was recovered from a cobble vault in the city of Cornith. There were six guests at the table, and each had a mouthful of the bread and a teaspoonful of wine, but was permitted to help himself liberally to the butter, there being several pounds on hand. The apple just held about two-thirds of a gallon, and the fruit was sweet and the flavor as fine as though put up yesterday."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

There Are Two Kinds.

"Do you consider him a good financier?"

"Which kind—public or private?"

"What's the difference?"

"All the difference in the world. Do you mean a government financier or just a plain, ordinary home financier?"

"I don't believe I grasp your meaning."

"Why, it's just this way: If you mean a man who knows all about the finances of the government and could give John Sherman cards and spades and beat him out on telling what ought to be done to keep the country prosperous he's a bird; but if you mean a man who's able to handle his own finances so's to make his business pay and keep his family clothed and happy he isn't in it."—Chicago Post.

SPORTS OFFICIALLY INTRODUCED INTO THE ARMY.

AN ASSAYING-ROOM PUZZLE.

One morning, early in June, I was sent for by my employer, the head of a detective agency, and found a visitor with him. The latter rose when I entered, and the chief formally introduced us.

"Mr. Vincent," he said, addressing the gentleman, "this is Mr. Borland, the detective whom I had been speaking to you about."

Mr. Vincent bowed and I returned the salutation. "That is my card, sir," he said, handing me the piece of pasteboard as he spoke.

I looked at the card; it bore the name: "Mr. Horace Vincent," and in the corner the name of Mr. Vincent's firm, "Leggit & Vincent, Assayers to the Bank of Great Britain."

"We are in great trouble," said Mr. Vincent, after a short pause; "we have reason to believe that one of our assistants is robbing us daily of the gold dust which passes through his hands."

"Indeed," I returned; "then why not have the gentleman arrested at the exit?"

"That is impossible," he said—"quite impossible."

"May I ask why?" I said, briskly.

"We cannot do so because there is not one jot of proof to justify such an arrest. Every man is searched nightly on leaving the premises, and this man whom we suspect has undergone the same treatment. Not a tenth of an ounce of the dust has been found on his person in any case."

"Then why suspect him?" I asked, somewhat impatiently.

"There is no one else to suspect. At our establishment we have some 20 assaying rooms, and each room has made up its account perfectly with the exception of the room in which young Renshaw is employed. Month after month a considerable deficit occurs there."

"If it is your wish that I should take the case in hand, I will come and have a look at your place and employes without delay."

Mr. Vincent shook hands with the chief, and I, having made a few necessary preparations, set out with the assayer for the scene of the trouble.

As we walked along, I said:

"How much of the dust has been missed altogether?" I asked, after a short pause.

"Close on 150 ounces. You see, the robberies have been extending over some time now, and we are determined to either find the thief or discharge every man in our employ."

"I hope that there will be no need for such an extreme measure," I remarked; "doubtless, we shall be able to bring home the crime to the culprit."

No more was said until we reached the assaying-room. Mr. Vincent opened the door, and, bidding me follow him, passed rapidly into the room. No. 15, where the robberies had been committed.

A young fellow was bending over a pair of hair scales as we entered.

"That is Renshaw," whispered Mr. Vincent; "quite a youngster, as you see."

Renshaw, becoming aware of my presence, looked up. I am something of a reader of physiognomy, and reading that face, I distrusted it at once.

Mr. Vincent was the first to speak.

"Renshaw," he said, in a low voice, "I am indeed grieved that I should have to speak to you as I am going to speak, but there is no alternative. This gentleman is a private detective. He has come to inquire into the mysterious disappearance of the gold dust from this room."

"Well," said Renshaw, sullkily, "what has that to do with me, sir?"

"I only hope for your sake and your dead father's sake that it has indeed nothing to do with you," returned Mr. Vincent, gravely; "but the facts are so black against you that I have determined to take up the matter now and pierce the heart of the mystery. Renshaw, it is not too late to confess. I will not be hard on you, nor will Mr. Leggret."

"I have nothing to confess," he returned, moodily; "I have never taken anything out of this room that was not my own property."

"If you are speaking the truth," said Mr. Vincent, not unkindly, "how do you explain that there is such a remarkable deficit at the end of each month in the accounts connected with Room 15? Moody bestows himself in, followed in here—to whom else can we look for an explanation?

"I cannot help you, sir," he said, quietly. "I am very sorry, of course, for what has occurred, but it is out of my power to do anything in the matter."

He paused, and then broke out, almost passionately:

"Haven't you searched me night after night, as if I were a dock laborer?" he cried. "Body and limbs, you will take a last chance, I offer it to you now. If you are connected with this business, speak out, and I promise you that the law shall not touch you. Lose this opportunity, and then the law shall go to work, and if it, indeed, can convict you then we shall have no mercy on you. What is your answer?"

"My answer is as before," he said, slowly. "I know nothing whatever of the affair. If I did I would say so; as I don't, I can't."

We left him alone, and I went to Mr. Vincent's private room, where we spent half an hour in earnest consultation.

"My opinion," I said, "is certainly that the youth is guilty, and that he has discovered some method of hiding his spoils from the searchers night after night."

"But what method could he possibly use?" asked Mr. Vincent, putting his hand to his forehead in despair; "nothing escapes the searchers—absolutely nothing."

"I am not so sure of that," I returned, slowly; "searchers are only human, after all, and possibly a most simple trick has deceived them. Is there any means by which Renshaw could have obtained from a room above?"

"Curiously enough," replied Mr. Vincent, "there appears to be a skylight in room 15. Perhaps you noticed it when you were there? Through that skylight you would have ample opportunity of seeing how he employs himself."

"Very well," I said, "it is no use of my watching him now, as he will, of course, be on his guard. In a week's time I will return. Meantime, you will, of course, keep your own counsel, and let no inkling, as to my visit leak out in the place."

He reassured me heartily on this point, and then we shook hands and parted.

A week later, I took up my position above the skylight, and watched the young assayer closely.

I must confess that he did nothing whatever of a suspicious nature. He pursued his work calmly and methodically, showing himself to be a very industrious workman.

He had a habit or mannerism which seemed to me rather strange in so young a man. It might be natural, or it might be affected, but every now and again he would pause in his work, and pass his long, nervous hands through his bushy, auburn hair, as though trying to collect his thoughts. It reminded me very forcibly of a mannerism of Henry Irving, and I thought it possible that Renshaw might be a bit stage-struck, and had consciously or unconsciously adopted the mannerism of the great actor.

Throughout the day I stood in my uncomfortable position, eliciting nothing. At five o'clock the establishment closed, and I came down from my perch, and went straight to Mr. Vincent's room.

"Mr. Vincent," I said, "my search has been useless so far. I am now going round to Renshaw's place of residence, and I want you to give me his address and leave to enter same in order to keep him here for, say, half an hour while I pursue my investigations."

"Very well," he replied, promptly; and then, ringing a bell, he told the messenger who answered it to detain Renshaw and not let him go until he had seen him. The messenger having departed, Mr. Vincent wrote the address of the young man on a slip of paper.

Jumping into a hansom, I drove as fast as the cab would take me to 22, Acacia Villas, Brixton, where Renshaw lodged. Arrived there I presented my card, and having sufficiently overawed the landlady by the display of my "detective," I was ushered up into Renshaw's room and left alone. I had, of course, cautioned the woman against giving him the slightest hint when he came in of my visit.

Then I examined the room closely. In one of the drawers I found a collection of tradesmen's bills, which proved clearly that my "bird" had been going it for some time past. One of the bills rather startled me, for it was for a bottle of aniline hair-dye.

"What on earth should he want to dye his hair for?" I pondered—and then it flashed upon me like a lightning stroke that Renshaw's hair had had never seemed to me to be quite genuine. But why should he desire to change its color?

I stood thinking, I heard his step on the stairs. In a moment I had stepped behind a screen, which, fortunately, happened to be standing in a corner of the room, and waited for his entry.

He came in hurriedly and sat down on the bed. Then he looked in his water can and found it empty.

He went to the door and called out: "Mrs. Martin. I wish you would send up some water at once. You know I always like to have a wash directly I get back."

"Funny thing, this desire for cleanliness," I thought. "I saw him wash his hands at five o'clock to-night before leaving the assaying-room. He is quite fanatical on the subject of soap and water."

Up came the servant in a moment, carrying with her a huge can. Renshaw thanked her, and having set the can down, he locked the door, and made preparations for washing.

He filled the basin, and then put his head under water for about 40 seconds, slowly raising it at the end of that time.

He repeated the process again and again, to my intense amazement and consternation. Of course, there was nothing strange in a man's bathing his head, but when the process was gone through a dozen times, surprise was perfectly natural.

But, feeling that if the secret was ever to be discovered, it must be discovered now, I seized the opportunity, when Renshaw's head was turned towards the window, of stealing out from my hiding-place behind the screen and examining the basin and bottle.

Good heavens! In an instant the truth flashed on me; the water was full of gold dust washed from his head. Our suspicions had been correct, and Renshaw was the thief!

In a moment I had him firmly in my grip.

"I arrest you, Mark Renshaw," I cried, "on a charge of theft. I've had a nice hunt to run you down, but I reckon I've done the trick at last."

He turned as white as death.

"The game's up," he said, hoarsely; "but it was a good game while it lasted. You can take me now whenever you like."

I could not help admiring his self-possession. I saw the reason for the hair-dye and the reason for his passing his hands frequently through his hair. The dye had been used to make his hair of similar color to the gold dust, and when he put his hands to his head, he quietly left a pinch of dust in the hair. It was a very clever device, but it was played out now.—The Era.

PROWLER AT THE PLAINS.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY AT EMORY'S HOTEL SUNDAY MORNING.

The Intruder Started a Dog to Barking and Mr. Emory Was Aroused and Shot at the Man as He Disappeared in the Dark.

An ever-watchful house dog probably kept Emory's Hotel at Scotch Plains from being robbed early Sunday morning. The family had retired at the usual time, leaving the dog in the lower part of the house, when at 12:30 o'clock the dog began to bark vigorously, and the occupants of the house were aroused. The night was not dark, and looking from his bedroom window Mr. Emory discovered a man who he describes as being either colored or wearing a mask, crouching under one of the rear sitting room windows. The fellow had evidently heard the inmates moving about, for he took to his heels and disappeared in the direction of Plainfield, closely followed by one or two well directed bullets.

An examination of the window showed that the thief had been working at the fastening, presumably with a putty knife or some other blunt instrument, and had he been left alone for a few minutes longer, would have undoubtedly gained admittance to the place.

BANK DIRECTORS ELECTED.

The Annual Election Held in Local Institutions Tuesday.

At the meeting of the directors of the First National Bank Tuesday afternoon the following officers were elected:—President, J. W. Johnson; vice-president, H. M. Estil; cashier, F. S. Runyon; assistant cashier, D. M. Runyon; directors, Charles Potter, Wm. McD. Corlell, P. M. French, Wm. M. Stillman, H. M. Estil, J. W. Johnson, I. W. Bushmore, W. R. Codington, F. S. Runyon.

The following directors were elected at the City National Bank yesterday afternoon:—Charles Hyde, J. Frank Hubbard, J. T. Closson, J. Fred MacDonald, H. G. Runkle, J. K. Myers, J. B. Coward, Walter Scott and W. F. Arnold. The board met this morning and elected the officers as follows:—President, Charles Hyde; vice-president, J. Frank Hubbard; cashier, W. F. Arnold.

THEATRICAL

"A Railroad Ticket," as presented by Freeman's Fun Makers at Music Hall next Monday, is worth seeing, for it is not only funny, but it is up to the times with a merry jingle of song, music and brisk dialogue. The company of singers and comedians is above the average. The joint star attraction is Marie Stuart and Louis Wesley. Miss Stuart, better known as the American "Fougere," has made a decided hit as the French maid, a part created by her in the first production of "A Railroad Ticket." She is introducing her specialties, which made her famous at Koster & Bial's, New York, and in both London and Paris. As "Chips," the office boy, Mr. Wesley has repeated his former success, he having created the part in the original production. The piece is thoroughly up to date with new music, songs and dances and medleys, and in stage parlance is full of ginger.

A breezy incident at Proctor's Pleasure Palace, New York, this week will be the production of Augustus Thomas' jolly farce, "The Man Upstairs." It will be played by Howell Hansel and his company, including Lizzie Evans, Lucille Lee, William Ranous and Maggie Fielding. The accomplishments of Myrtle Peck's trick saddle horse, Boston, will be displayed. European novelties in their last week are the Brothers Webb, the Hanlons and the six Glinserettis. Tom Lewis and Charles M. Ernest offer a new black-face ansurdity, and others in the big bill are Waterbury Brothers and Tenney, Edwin R. Lang, Alexandra Martens, Johnson and Mack, Higgins and Leslie, McLean and Hall, and Lottie Lonsdale, a new comedienne from the London halls.

Too Much For Bridget

Roundsman Frederickson found a woman last Monday who was considerably under the influence of an over dose of "applejack," and after a struggle landed her safely in one of the cells in the city lockup. She appeared to be a bad case and the Judge sentenced her to thirty days in the county jail this morning when she was brought before him. She gave her name as Bridget McCluskey.

ALL IN ONE G. A. R. POST

AN IMPORTANT ACTION TO BE TAKEN BY OLD SOLDIERS.

The Two Local G. A. R. Posts to Unite Under One Organization in Order That They May Work in Union and Strength.

One of the greatest events in G.A.R. circles in this city will probably take place in a short time when it is expected that the two organizations will unite under one head. This matter has been under advisement for sometime and it now looks as though it would become a fact. The majority of the comrades think that their work will be far more progressive if the two Posts are united and steps are now being taken to bring about that result.

At the meeting of Post No. 109 last Saturday evening it was practically decided to call a meeting of the two organizations at an early date for the purpose of consolidation. The objections to the union are so slight that it will probably be an easy matter to overcome them.

PASSING COMMENT.

A full grown grey and black mixed dog boarded a trolley car at the Clinton avenue "turn out" yesterday afternoon, and soon afterward the conductor summarily bounced the canine. The dog had followed a little girl into the car. Dogs are not allowed in street cars.

In reference to Senator Voorhees' alleged favoring the abolition of Boards of Freeholders, Director J. F. Hubbard said to a Press representative this morning that in some counties it may be a good thing, but in Union county it would be detrimental to the public interests.

About 30 volumes of standard novels, essays, etc., have been presented to the Public Library by a well known teacher in Plainfield, who desires that her name should not be mentioned. Donations of this kind, providing the Library with duplicate copies of popular works, are particularly acceptable, as the supply of standard novels is not equal to the demand.

"I am inclined to think," says a man who has had a great deal to do with the stage, "that three-quarters of a woman's chance of getting a start as an actress depends upon her personal beauty. It is not that alone, however. There are some women who will not attract in spite of their beauty. I have seen that frequently in the course of my life. A woman who has a large degree of beauty without the power of attracting makes a decided impression at first, but it is soon gone. I am not sure but it is a certain roundness of mental and physical development that makes a woman attractive. The feeling that she possesses it gives her an equilibrium which is pleasing in itself. That a good appearance is a benefit on the stage can be seen in many cases where there are both men and women holding prominent positions who cannot act, and who depend only on their looks."

There is a joint on Grant avenue where the proprietor and his friends sometimes meet and enjoy a quiet little game of poker. Such was the case on last Sunday evening and among the players was one who was not completely satisfied with his treatment by the rest. He was not backward in letting the fact be known and, at last, the rest of the party rose up en masse and proceeded to eject the discontented one from out the rear door. His reception by the back yard was rather hard and he lay still for awhile to ruminate on the injustice of the world. After a time he recovered his wits and returned to the scene of action. His former companions were willing to receive him back if he would keep quiet, but that wasn't what he was after. He picked up the nearest thing to him, which happened to be a chair, and whirled it around his head with remarkable dexterity. The others did not wait to see his skill exhibited on their craniums but fell suddenly called elsewhere. The proprietor tumbled over his guests in his hurry to get out and soon the solitary man had it all his own way. He took his revenge out on the windows and demolished them. So ended this little comedy and by and by the proprietor and his friends returned.

THE SIN OF NOT MINDING

EASY TO PASS OVER OUR OWN FAULTS AND CONDEMN OTHERS.

Thoughtfulness is a Noble Trait, Said Rev. C. E. Goodrich, But Too Many Christians Do Not Apply it to Themselves.

Owing probably to the extreme cold weather and the announcement that Ballington Booth would speak in this city, was the cause of not having the First Baptist church crowded at the union services, last Tuesday. But those who faced the chilling winds were amply repaid, and the meeting will doubtless result in much spiritual good.

A double quartette sang the opening piece and the balance of the musical part of the programme was of a congregational nature, Horace J. Martin acting as precentor. Rev. Dr. Barnes read the 11th Psalm and Rev. G. Kennedy Newell offered prayer. The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes presided and announced that on Thursday evening Rev. Mr. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, would conduct the service in this church.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church, who preached the sermon, took his text from Psalms 139-99 and 50th verses: "I thought on my way."

"Thoughtfulness," said Rev. Mr. Goodrich, "is a noble trait, and the power to think is one of God's gifts to man. Thoughtlessness about religious matters is one of the worst forms of Christianity, and often results in driving the gospel out of young people's minds. One of the main objects of revivals is to get people to think of that which most concerns us. It's far easier to see how others ways need mending than to see our own; likewise with the church member, its far easier for a church member to tell others they are not living as they ought to, than to take the responsibility upon themselves. The first and main duty of the Christian is to first think of themselves and their own ways and answer the questions 'What am I? and where am I?' On this earth things are very uncertain and we must go hence. But whither are we going and how important is it that we should be right, for straight is the gate which leads to the summit of heaven and the cross which we all hope to reach. We must turn unto the ways of Christ's testimonies. Thinking and not doing, knowing and not acting is ruinous to the souls of men. The way of peace for the unbliever is to make haste and delay not for the time is short."

Prayer and testimony were then given by several in the congregation and the meeting closed with the benediction.

Why Attempt to Cure.

catarrh by the use of so-called blood remedies? That catarrh is not caused by blood troubles is self-evident when you reflect that attacks are always due to sudden climatic changes or exposure, and occur most frequently during the winter and spring, though the blood is as pure then as in summer or fall. A remedy which quickly relieves and cures the catarrhal attacks has been found in Ely's Cream Balm.

Impressive Funeral Service.

The funeral services of the late Mrs Rushton were held Tuesday afternoon from Hope Chapel at 2 o'clock. There was a large attendence of relatives and friends, including the members of Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas, and Minerva Temple, No. 4, Rathbone Sisters, of which the departed was a member. The service at the chapel was conducted by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, who spoke lovingly of the great patience shown by Mrs. Rushton during her illness. The services at the grave, Hillside cemetery, were in charge of the members of Iona Council, and they were impressively rendered.

Anxious to Increase Their Fund.

A meeting of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association was held Tuesday afternoon. The question of holding an entertainment for the benefit of the association's treasury, which is rather low at the present time, was discussed. A committee composed of Charles Noble, Carroll R. Runyon, and Lindley Hillman, was appointed to arrange a programme which is to be presented at a meeting of the association to be held shortly when definite action will be taken. The entertainment will be of a musical character and a High School quartette will probably be selected to give several selections.

Change of Place of Worship.

On February first or possibly before, the congregation of the First Church of Christ will take full possession of the Grove street chapel and hold services in that place regularly. Rev. J. E. Thomas, of New York, has been chosen as the regular pastor of the church and will preach every Sunday. Notice of the meetings until that time will appear later.

A Will Probated.

The will of Mrs. Dency C. Horton, late of the borough of North Plainfield, was admitted to probate, today, before the Surrogate of Somerset county. Her property was bequeathed entirely to her relatives. The executors are Mrs. Emily Cory and ex-Mayor John H. Van Winkle.

SCOTCH PLAINS

Andrew Love Sr., and Andrew Love Jr., yesterday finished their work of appraising the goods in the late James A. Baker's store at Fanwood, and this morning they began the work of appraising at the Scotch Plains store. The total valuations of the two stores are not yet known, but the amount, it is said, will far exceed the expectations of the appraisers. Having been in business for so long a term of years, much stock has accumulated on the shelves and in the cellar, but most of it is in a good state of preservation.

WILLOW GROVE.

The service at the chapel last Sunday evening was in charge of Miss Anna Littell.

The engagement of Miss Adelaide Lambert and George Burt Clark is announced.

Master Clark Swezy has returned home after a two weeks visit with relatives in New York.

The boys and girls have enjoyed the fine skating on the lake during the past week and the ice is now very good.

Clarence Lambert is getting to be quite a shot. On Saturday last he killed nine birds out of a possible twelve. He is now getting ready for a match with John Benner, which takes place next Wednesday afternoon on the grounds of the Climax Gun Club.

The Sunday services are held at the chapel as follows: Junior Christian Endeavor, 2:30 p. m.; Sunday-school, 3 p. m.; Senior Christian Endeavor, 7:30. The weekly prayer meeting is held Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, and the meeting this week will be led by Prof. Edwards, of the Westfield High School.

A PASTOR INSTALLED.

REV. A. C. NICKERSON NOW IN CHARGE OF ALL SOULS.

Services Held Tuesday Evening in the Church—Principal Sermon Delivered by Rev. S. A. Eliot, of Brooklyn.

The installation of Rev. A. C. Nickerson, as pastor of All Souls' church, took place Tuesday night in the presence of a large and interested audience. The new pastor was installed and introduced to his people with all of the favorable omens one could desire, and he was received with kindly expressions of welcome.

The service was opened with an invocation by Rev. Frank S. C. Wicks, of Passaic, which was followed with Scripture reading by A. H. Howe, of Westfield. A hymn, composed by Rev. Robert Collyer, of New York, was then sung by the congregation, after which the sermon was preached by Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, pastor of the Church of Our Saviour, Brooklyn. The reverend read the thirteenth chapter of Second Kings, and his text was "The Arrow of the Lord's Deliverance."

His discourse was based on the words of Elisha, the prophet, in telling Josaih, King of Israel, to smite the arrows upon the ground, and the prophet was much displeased because the king did not smite them five or six times, instead of thrice, and thus consume the Syrians. Mr. Eliot then spoke in part as follows:

"Every healthy life has visions of great ambitions as it shoots forth the arrow of life purpose, but like the King of Israel we think that we can get along with half trying, and the result is failure when it might have been victory. The persistence of right purpose is lacking. How often people with lofty purposes and ambitions allow these ideals to become degraded, or yield to vain skepticism.

"There is very little value in a half-hearted religion. We are not Christians because we admire Christianity, nor we cannot become musicians by applauding some grand rendition of a selection of music.

"A woman will take a Sunday-school class, but because the hour is inconvenient or the work becomes tiresome, she wants to give it up. She smites thrice and the arrow is cast in vain. A man with the ambition of a preacher takes up that work, but he progresses he meets with little response and his energies slacken. He grows careless and omits a sentence from his sermon, then a paragraph, and finally a page, until he begins to write that which is not true. I pray that in this church the power to begin and continue may always be with you.

"Christ once said, 'Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business.' In that sentence is to be found the great secret of consecration and success. When a man is chosen to be a co-worker of the Most High, he has received a calling to a very high position, and the call must not be slighted."

After the singing of a hymn which was written for a former installation of Mr. Nickerson, prayer was offered by the Rev. D. W. Morehouse, secretary of the Unitarian Conference, of New York city. The right hand of fellowship was given by Rev. George H. Badger, of Rutherford, Essex county, who spoke somewhat as follows:

"My friend and brother, I extend to you a greeting on behalf of New Jersey, for I am glad that you have come among us. You will find that this State is not in all respects like New England. There are three good points on which I wish to speak. Firstly, there is a delightful discovery that the best things of New England are not confined within her borders, for the old continent is full of them. Secondly, the people of intelligence will be able to understand you when you answer their questions regarding Emerson or Browning. Lastly, there will be that delightful experience when you go back to visit New England and the mecca of our faith. It is then that you will have a home-sickness for New Jersey.

"I trust that before long this church will be crowded with liberal thinkers, but Unitarianism work in this locality is not of the rapid sort. You are not here to fight, but to stand. Be consecrated and dead in earnest. I extend to you the hand of fellowship in this your work which is ours also."

The charge to the new pastor was delivered by the Rev. Stephen H. Camp, of the Third Unitarian Society, of Brooklyn. A portion of his remarks were at follows:

"There is something solemn in charging another man. However, my charge is the chapter read this evening by Mr. Eliot. That chapter expresses just exactly what I have in my mind.

GOOD MANNERS A DUTY.

UNITARIAN LIBERAL WOMEN DISCUSS THE SUBJECT OF ETIQUETTE.

The Theme Considered in All Its Various Phases and Many Interesting and Terse Observations Were Developed.

The Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women met in the parlors of All Souls church Tuesday afternoon and discussed the subject of "Good Manners," with all of its various side issues. Mrs. Florence Howe Hall presided and led the discussion, which was very interesting to the goodly number present.

The first point introduced was "Courteous Manners a Christian Duty," and it was held that it was an absolute necessity. A person that was not courteous could hardly be called a true Christian. Unconscious insolence of conscious wealth was brought to be a good definition of some people's position who thought that they must gain position in an assertive manner.

One woman thought that English people of a high rank exhibited a greater degree of simplicity than was to be found in Americans. Along the line of good manners in the home several excellent suggestions were offered. One person thought that the golden rule was a good precept to follow, and to say the kindest things in the most polite and kind way. Another good point made was that it is very hard to practice good manners in the home, and especially was this true of boys.

The thought as to how far it was best for a parent to reason with a child was quite generally discussed. Mrs. Hall was of the opinion that nowadays there was a republic in the home instead of a monarchy. This she thought should not be so.

Under the head of good manners at church, Mrs. Hall said that grown-up people do not as a rule have to be called to account for their actions, while many children do. The question was asked if people should stop after church and talk, regardless of all church propriety, just as soon as the benediction was pronounced? The reply was that in some churches it was allowed while in others it was not, but at the same time it was considered rude if a person did not speak and was not cordial.

The next issue was good manners in the street and in public conveyances. It was remarked by one woman that of late she had been troubled a great deal by persons who persisted in taking two seats where they were only entitled to one and she thought that they must be foreigners. Another woman wanted to know if all the people who travel on the ferry boats were foreigners. The same person thought that someone should write to the railroad company and ask them to protect the rights of women.

The many excellent points regarding good manners in society was thoroughly discussed. It was held to be a rare talent to be able to say the right word in the right place, and it certainly required a great deal of tact.

Regarding the fact that some women are "not at home," when their friends call, it was stated, that it was not the right thing to do. A woman could very easily meet her friends and then be excused if she wanted to.

A person who would say that they were delighted to see anyone, when they were not, was considered to be very ill bred.

This about ended the discussion for the afternoon and the members all felt as though they had spent a most profitable time considering matters of great importance.

Annual Meeting of the Alliance.

The annual business meeting and election of officers of the Plainfield Branch of the Christian Alliance will take place this evening at 7:45 at the rooms of the W. C. T. U., Watchung avenue. Rev. James B. Morris, of Passaic, State superintendent of the Alliance, will preside at this meeting and deliver an address at 8:15. All are cordially invited.

The Great Contest Postponed.

The long expected contest between the Park Club and the Union County Country Club will not come off this week as was expected. It was to be held this evening, but has been postponed for a week.

Declared Off.

The suit of Caroline J. Obl, et als., against Joseph W. Reinhart, in tort, which was to come up at this term of the Union county circuit court at Elizabeth, has been declared off.

The Y. M. C. A. basket ball team will play its next game at the gymnasium on the 26th Ward Branch of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. on the evening of January 26th.

STATE OFFICERS STAY IN THE LEGISLATURE RE-ELECTS COMPTROLLER AND TREASURER.

The Bicyclists Will Have Great Influence in the House When Important Bills Favoring Wheelmen Come up.

The Legislature at noon Tuesday in joint meeting, re-elected William S. Hancock, of Trenton, as State Comptroller and George B. Swain, of Newark, as State Treasurer. The compliment was the greater because there was no caucus held to renominate them formally. The only opposition came from the three Democratic Senators and four Assemblymen, who voted for James Smith, the City Treasurer of Hoboken, for State Treasurer, and for Abel Herring, of Frenchtown, Hunterdon county, for Comptroller. After the joint meeting the Legislature adjourned for the week, and Comptroller Hancock and Treasurer Swain entertained the Senators and Members at luncheon.

Mr. Righter of Morris county introduced in the House resolutions of sympathy with the Cuban insurgents, and they were referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

Mr. Scovel of Camden offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the New Jersey Congressmen to vote for the bill increasing the pay of letter carriers.

The Senate passed Ketcham's bill permitting Supreme Court Justices to sit alone at the trial of murder cases in first-class counties. It was amended so as to apply to all counties.

In the House Mr. Wildes of Burlington introduced a bill providing that the salary of every State officer, excepting the Governor, Supreme Court Justices, and the Chancellor, who receives a salary of over $2,500 a year, shall be reduced one-half, providing that no such salary shall be reduced below $2,500 a year.

Mr. Schlenker of Hudson has introduced an amendment to the Ballot Reform law. It provides for a blanket ballot, that no more than two ballots be given to each voter, for absolute personal registration, that voters must reside for thirty days before election within the precinct in which they claim a right to vote, and that the polls shall close at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and it permits no distribution of ballots outside the polling booth.

The Gledhill bill, requiring railroad companies to transport bicycles for passengers as personal baggage and without charge, is giving the companies great concern. There are said to be thirty-two members of the League of American Wheelmen in the house, and the league and its officers and members will push the bill. Petitions are to be circulated in every county urging the Senators and members to vote for the bill, and the representatives of the companies realize that sentiment will favor its passage. They are casting about in an effort to secure a modification that will not be so burdensome to the companies as the measure now before the House. The companies don't want to carry bicycles free under all circumstances, and they do not think that they should be answerable for damages in cases of accidents, particularly as the bill provides that the owner may not be compelled to remove the lantern and fixtures attachments before checking his machine.

Tuesday afternoon ten Republican Senators called upon Gov. Griggs in the interest of Senator Stokes of Cumberland, whom they want to succeed Henry C. Kelsey as Secretary of State. The Governor was non-committal, but the Senators were led to believe that Senator Stokes would not be appointed. None of them would talk about the interview.

Against the Liquor Traffic.

The petitions being circulated by the W. C. T. U. for the purpose of getting signers who are against the granting of liquor licenses by the City Council, are meeting with good success. A large number of business men have placed their names to the papers. At the Mt. Olive Baptist church last Sunday there were a great many signers.

THE HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE

ITS POSITION AS A VITAL FORCE IN MODERN HISTORY.

James F. Riggs Delivers the Second of His University Extension Lectures, and is Filled With Instructive Points.

"The Holy Roman Empire" was the subject of the university extension lecture Tuesday night by Dr. James F. Riggs in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. This lecture was the second in the course on "Vital Forces in Modern History," and was very largely attended.

A dream may possess a mighty potency for good or for evil, said Dr. Riggs in beginning his lecture. A force that no longer exists may be a strong factor, it men imagine that it is so still. The true Roman Empire died a violent death, at the end of the classical period, but its ghost haunted Europe for centuries.

In modern Europe the enormous living power of Imperialism, of the notion of an imperial government as distinguished from the regal, is due to the strange romance known as the "Holy Roman Empire." This is a subject which has been much misunderstood. It does not mean the German Empire, which was not organized until 1871, and is an entirely different affair, and one which ought to be wholly disconnected with mediaeval history.

The Roman Republic, threatened with danger from three sources, the Goths, the demagogues and the servile population, in despair of saving the state by their united efforts, chose one man, the Imperator, to be their representative, and stand at the helm of the distracted nation. The success of the experiment was wonderful, one of the results being peace, prosperity, commerce, arts, education, Christianity. Even after the corruption at the centre became atrocious the extremities of the empire felt the same beneficent influences. The Emperor was not the representative of the aristocracy, or ruling by divine right; he was the people's appointed representative, and carried a new idea of responsibility.

Troubles came, the framework of civilization broke down in part, yet men mourned as a necessity of truth that there must be an Emperor somewhere. Hence for centuries the problem of political life was merely "which of the claimants is really our chosen Lord and ruler?" The Byzantine Empire, and the claims represented in Constantinople were very largely acknowledged from the fall of Rome to the accession of the Empress Irene (476-792). But the putting of imperial power into the hands of a woman occasioned discontent in the West, and there was trouble from that time. Ecclesiastical controversy arose; the claims of the Papacy were such that the Greek leaders could not submit, and there was a gap that grew wider with each century of progress.

There was room for a great civil and military leader in the west, and such a champion soon appeared in Charlemagne. His military exploits extended the boundaries of the Empire, but his dream of making it universal, putting an end to all wars, jealousies, and other hurtful forms of rivalry, would have required an unbroken line of genius, a succession of men each of whom should be a giant of intellectual and moral vigor.

From the time of Charlemagne to our own times, the history of the "Holy Roman Empire" is a very complex and difficult subject. But some few salient facts may be noted. First, there was a large and deadly struggle with the Popes, in which the Papal Power gained steadily, and the Empire was stripped of a large part of its glory. Second, there was a long struggle with the newly-organized kingdoms of modern Europe, in which the National idea grew stronger and the Imperial idea weaker. In 1804 the last trace of the old theory was wiped out by the act of Francis II, who, being compelled by Napoleon, relinquished the venerable shadow of the Roman claim, and assumed an entirely different title. But while this act terminated the old legend, yet the prime notion of imperialism, of a power quite different from kingship, and carrying a new sense of responsibility before God and man, has taken firm root in the statecraft of Europe, as one of the vital forces of modern history.

—The Women's Home Missionary Society of the Crescent Avenue church will hold a meeting on Friday afternoon in the church parlors. Preparations for a new box are being made.

Thomas A. Cuming, of Putnam avenue, a student at the New York Conservatory of Music, will sing a selection from Reidtner, at a concert to be given at the above institution this evening.

WAS DIVORCED BY DEATH

A HIGHER POWER SETTLED THE CASE OF MRS. JENNIE WELLS.

She Came East to the Final Taking of Testimony Only to Learn That Her Husband Had Accidentally Killed.

A divorce suit in which the principal persons interested were former residents of this city was brought to a sudden ending several weeks ago, and the plaintiff in the case secured her divorce, but in a way that she did not expect.

About six months ago proceedings were begun by Mrs. Jennie V. Wells, formerly of this place, through her counsel, City Judge DeMeza, before Chancellor McGill, at Jersey City, to obtain an absolute divorce from her husband, Robert C. Wells. The grounds for the divorce were stated to be be desertion. According to the story of the plaintiff in the case, her husband had suddenly left her and never returned. He had made no effort to support her, and was heard from in various parts of the country where he was supposed to be leading a fast life. Both husband and wife were wealthy in their own names.

Chancellor McGill referred the taking of the testimony in regard to the matter to Judge Atwater, of Elizabeth.

Mrs. Wells, who travels considerably, came east on being notified by her counsel that the final testimony in the matter would be taken. When she arrived at City Judge DeMeza's office, two weeks ago, she learned that all cause for divorce had been removed and that her husband had met his death only a few days before. He was going to Atlantic City and was passing from one car to another while the train was in motion, when he fell or was blown off the platform and dashed to pieces on the stones of the roadbed. He was horribly mutilated in the accident. On learning of the death of her husband, Mrs. Wells returned to the west and is now stopping at Los Angeles.

Of course, this put an end to all attempt to get a divorce but the legal forms must be gone through with and, on Monday, City Judge DeMeza will make application to Chancellor McGill for a dismissal of the suit of his client.

THE POWER TO LIFT ONE UP.

REV. NEWELL'S REVIVAL THOUGHTS.

David's Experience in the Cave of Adullam Commented On.

The union revival service held at the First Baptist church Tuesday was one of the best of the series. The sermon was delivered by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, who took for his text a portion of the thirteenth verse of the ninth chapter of Matthew which reads "For I Came Not to Call the Righteous, but Sinness to Repentance." The main thoughts of the discourse were expressed as follows:

"Scripture tells us that when David was in the Cave of Adullam he was sought by slaves, debtors and other fugitives from justice. The fact that he did not descend to their level, but raised them to his own standing, was a fine tribute to David's greatness and goodness. The result of this was that the coward became brave, the ignorant in war became a skillful soldier, and the dishonest became honest, so that the people among whose flocks and herds he lived and roamed declared that he was a rock and defense to them.

"How much more striking an example to help is that afforded by our Lord. If you notice the parables you will see that particular stress is laid on the one sheep that went astray, the one piece of money that was lost, and the one son that wandered away. This is illustrated by showing how good a shepherd it was that went after the one sheep, how good a housekeeper it was that searched until the piece of money was found, and what a loving father it was that sought his son. So Christ when he comes to you seems not so much interested in the ninety-nine good qualities as he does in the fact of saving you from your one weakness. You cannot truly recognize Christ as your Savior unless you see Him as coming to help you wherein you are deficient."

A Cold Tumble.

Arthur Murphy, of Washington avenue, came to grief while skating on Hyde's mill pond, Tuesday afternoon. He was following the hockey punk over the thin ice when the ice gave way beneath him and he fell into the ice cold water up to his neck.

SEANCE OVER TWO DESKS

JUDGE MOORE AND LAWYER HETFIELD HAVE A HOT TIME.

The Lawyer Was Aggravated Because Mr. Moore Would Not Give Up the Desks—More Legal Action to Follow.

For over two hours Tuesday afternoon, from 4 to 6 o'clock, the business office in the factory of the Climax Stopper Works on East Fourth street was the scene of pleasance in which Judge Chas. K. Moore, formerly deputy commissioner of the street cleaning department of New York, under Col. Waring, and now the manager of the Climax Company, and Counselor Walter Hetfield, of this city, were the principal mediums, although there were many incidental spirits concerned in the manifestations that were exciting in the extreme.

The things that caused words, gestures, witnesses, policeman, and involved details yet to develop, were two harmless roller top desks. The desks were brought to the factory by Geo. H. Cobb when he took possession of the business a year ago, and when he retired some months ago they remained in the building for the want of a place to take them. Then the owner of the factory, C. T. Nightingale, commenced its operation under the direction of Judge Moore. The desks were put to use by Mr. Moore and his stenographer, when a short time afterwards Lawyer Hetfield made a demand for them in the name of the George B. Cobb Company.

Mr. Moore declined to give up the desks, claiming that no legal papers had been served upon him. Just as emphatically Mr. Hetfield claims to the contrary.

The dallying about the matter has served to aggravate Lawyer Hetfield and Tuesday afternoon the climax, or rather one of them, for more are to follow, came.

Lawyer Hetfield engaged Al. Hoagland, the cartman, to go to the factory and cart away the desks. Mr. Hetfield sent his son, Walter, Jr., to act as his representative in the proceedings and make the demand of Judge Moore. About 3 o'clock the Hoagland dray, with seven men aboard, backed up in front of the Climax factory and young Hetfield notified Mr. Moore that he had come to cart the desks away and would be please facilitate matters by taking therefrom his papers and other articles.

But the Judge failed to facilitate, and instead quietly but forcibly informed the young man that he had no authority to remove the desks.

The son notified Lawyer Hetfield of Judge Moore's action and immediately the lawyer wended his way to the factory, accompanied by the son. Lawyer Hetfield's dander was up and when he greeted the Judge he was in no mood to be trifled with. Of course, the latter was not aware of the exact state of Mr. Hetfield's mind and he did trifle with the lawyer.

Mr. Moore avers that the lawyer made his appearance with altogether too much gusto to exactly suit his ideas of what were proper, and peremptorily demanded the desks. The Judge gave him very much the same reply as he had given his son a short time before—to effect that unless he displayed the papers and documents to verify his statement that he had a replevin, he could not have the desks. This statement seemed to roil the lawyer still more and then Mr. Moore says that the former used words more expressive than they were elegant. This, the Judge says, was followed by more abuse and the lawyer grabbing a handful of papers from one of the desks and throwing them promiscuously about with the remark that the desks did not belong there and that they were being used against the authority of the owners.

Then, Mr. Moore says, Hetfield ordered his son to pull down the tops of the desks. Mr. Moore says that he put an arm on each desk in such a manner as the tops could not be closed without using physical force against him, but the tops were pulled down just as far as the Judge's arms would permit.

One word followed another from the lawyer and when a full ensued the Judge chimed in in a most suave manner and aggravated the lawyer still more by his apparent good nature and refusal to take Mr. Hetfield seriously.

Finally, the Judge ordered Mr. Hetfield and his son from the building, but they refused to budge. Then Mr. Moore sent for a policeman and called John C. Noe and C. H. Wilcox, two employes of the factory, to act as witnesses of further proceedings. Here is a statement that these two men signed this morning as bearing Lawyer Hetfield address to Mr. Moore:

"You are a blackguard and are

WEALTH IN WELLS.

The Nile's Wonders to Be Excelled in the Dakotas.

A Vast Body of Underground Water That Affords an Inexhaustible Supply for Artesian Wells and Irrigation.

The agricultural miracles of the Nile will fade in comparison with the crops that will be taken from the valley of the James river in the Dakotas and the Saskatchewan in the far north when the new system of artesian wells has reached its full development. There are now about 1,100 wells in South Dakota, and about half as many in North Dakota. These are the result of experiments covering three or four years in the one state and half as long in the other. They are divided into what are called shallow wells, varying in depth from 50 to 300 feet, and taking moisture from an upper stratum of water, and deep wells, varying in depth from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, and taking water from the great Dakota sandstone basin. Brule county alone has 30 of the latter class, with a flow on an average of 2,000 gallons a minute. Had it not been for the difficulty of placing bonds under the new artesian well act during the past season there would now be nearly 2,000 wells in South Dakota, insuring magnificent crops over a wide area.

These great wells stand unrivaled in the height of their pressure, and the copiousness of their flow has already given rise to fears that they might not last long, and that by the time the farmer had dug his well and constructed his farm for the use of irrigation, they might fail him. There is power in these underground waters to grind at the harvest fields every bushel of wheat that is raised in the fertile prairies of the Dakotas.

The immediate sources of the waters are the sandstone layers in the so-called Dakota geological formation, which average 300 feet in thickness. The water comes up often with immense pressure, from 175 to 200 pounds to the inch, and at some wells is lifted in a solid eight or ten inch stream scores of feet above the ground. Why should it not ere this have burst forth and spent itself? is often asked. From 400 to 1,000 feet of thick and heavy clay resting above the sandstone has been sufficient to hold it down till tapped. This sandstone of the Dakota basin extends indefinitely north and south under the great plains in a huge shallow trough. Its western edge, of very irregular form, lies exposed along the eastern foothills of the Rocky mountains, the ridges around the Black Hills, and in other upheavals east of the Rockies. These exposures lie at a height of from 3,500 to 6,500 feet above the sea. Its eastern edge thins out to a narrow ledge and is almost completely lost under the drift of later ages. It lies at an altitude of from 800 to 1,000 feet. It is obvious that if water is turned into the porous sandstone of this Dakota and Jurassic formation at its upper and western edge till it is filled to the brim, and then if the sandstone is tapped at a level of about 1,300 feet above the sea, the altitude of the James river basin, water will burst forth with immense force. The efficient head may be more than 500 feet.

Because of the unavoidable leakage along its eastern edge the presence of water in the sandstone grows less toward the east, till it barely reaches the surface. This decline of pressure has been found in the four feet a mile from Highmore to Huron, S. D., and a similar grade appears to extend from Sheridan, Wyo., to Marshall, Minn., where are the easternmost of the artesian wells of the basin. This leakage and the opening of wells with their vast waste of water, must in time exhaust the supply of it if it were not constantly replenished. Water is supplied to the formation or reservoir in three ways. First, by the rainfall on its western upturned edge, where the annual rains are 24 inches a year. As there are 3,000 square miles of this upturned edge, and half this fall goes into the porous strata, there is the enormous total of at least 84,000,000,000 cubic feet a year from this source alone. The second source is the water that may seep into the basin from streams flowing over it. The Missouri river loses 7,000,000,000 cubic feet daily as it flows along the sandstone near Great Falls alone, and it is fair to reason that the Yellowstone, Big Horn, North Platte and other streams that are now more closely allied to the Dakota basin add twice as much more, making about 10,000,000,000 cubic feet from this second source. Then there are vast quantities of water that come to the sponge-like stone from older formations below and from above. The first two sources will supply more than ten times the water now received from the artesian wells combined. It is calculated that the stored supplies of water in the sandstone represent a lake 20 feet deep over an area of 150,000 square miles.

A first-class well on any farm in the valley will supply nearly 1,000 gallons a minute, and will cost about $2,500. It will supply water to 2,000 acres. The practical value of the water has been fully demonstrated in the last two seasons, and all who have used wells are enthusiastic. There has not been one failure in South Dakota except through ignorance. Farms in Dakota can be bought, wells ample to supply them by reservoirs built, and handsome homes erected at about $13 an acre, and these farms will return their owners a profit on an investment of not less than $20 per acre.

Scores of cities and villages in the Dakotas use direct pressure from wells for running their electric light plants, their flour mills, waterworks and the smaller factories. They have an engineer always at his post, a supply that never needs coal or any new machinery, and a tireless servant demanding no wages.—N. Y. Sun.

THE COZIEST TIME.

Oh, the five-o'clock chime brings the coziest time
That is found in the whole of the day,
When Larry and Gus and the others of us
Come in from our study or play;
When we push the big chair to the hearth over there,
And pile the wood higher and higher,
And we make her a space in the very best place—
And mother sits down by the fire.

There's a great deal to say at the close of the day,
And so much to talk over with mother;
There's a comical sight or a horrible fright,
Or a ball game, or something or other;
And she'll laugh with Larry, and sigh with Harry,
And smile to our heart's desire
At a triumph won or a task well done—
When mother sits down there by the fire.

Then little she'll care for the clothes that we tear,
Or the havoc we make on her larder;
For she 'toil and the strife of our every-day life
She will love us a little bit harder.
Then only let us, and her knights we would be,
And her trust doughty deeds will inspire;
For we long then anew to be generous and true,
When mother sits down by the fire.

THEY ABDUCTED THE BAND.

And Spoiled the Dance Given by the Rival Set.

The returned Cow Puncher set down his cup of black coffee after he had taken the first sip, and pursed up his mouth into an expression of scorn.

"Slop," he said, briefly.

The Poet made a gesture of protest.

"Oh, I dare say it's strong enough for you!" said the Cow Puncher.

"What?"

"The coffee."

"It was your expression to which I objected."

"When I said the stuff was—"

"Spare us a repetition!" interrupted the Poet.

"Well, I suppose my imagery is rather too epic for you. So would the coffee be that I had in mind—I wish I had it in this cup as well!—when I spoke. U-m-m!" And the Cow Puncher closed his eyes with the look of a satisfied epicure. "They call this stuff 'black coffee,' he went on, rousing himself. "About black enough for the second or third year of widowhood, I should say. You ought to taste the coffee we used to have down in Texas. It was so strong that it ate the enamel off the cups."

"That's some more of your epic imagery," laughed the Boys' Own Story Writer.

"Pretty strong coffee, evidently," remarked the Poet, "but it doesn't seem to have been able to affect brass."

The Cow Puncher carelessly knocked the ashes from the end of his cigarette and regarded the Poet out of the tail of his eye, but "Texas is a great state" was all that he said.

"It was two years ago," he resumed, after a pause, "that we gave our famous dance, upon which glorious occasion we everlastingly scooped the rival cowboys at the other end of the town."

"I thought you lived on a ranch," interposed the Poet, with deep suspicion.

"Did you think I spent three years out there and saw only one view? But then you don't understand the lives of men of action, I suppose, and I mustn't be too hard on you."

"About that dance?" asked the Boys' Own.

"Ah, that was a great event!" exclaimed the Cow Puncher, lighting a fresh cigarette. "You see, the idea originated with our end of the town, and naturally we felt that we had a right to it. Anybody would have felt so. Anybody, that is, except our deadly rivals. No sooner had the news of our scheme got out than they began to lay their plans for a howdy-do, and on the same night as ours, mind you!"

"What difference did that make?" growled the Poet.

"Well, a great deal just this difference: There wasn't room in that town for two balls, and everybody knew it. It lay between us to get the crowd. We couldn't both get it, and neither of us could get half a crowd. Things don't like that, you know. Everybody goes to the place that puts up the best show and the other one doesn't see a corporal's guard. We knew this, so we had taken care to engage the only music in the town before we let a word of our plans get out. This music consisted of a fiddle (cracked) played by a fiddler (who was also cracked), seconded by a wheezy melodeon which had a way of going off into a fit of gasps when you were most depending on it.

"It was a great thing for us to have secured the music, because that, we knew, would prove a terrible handicap to our rivals. They wouldn't be able to put up anything better than one of their saloon pianos, played by the usual organ, and didn't amount to much even at that, inasmuch as he had only one long. We felt pretty jubilant, I tell you; and the other fellows looked correspondingly blue. But that didn't last long. One day we heard a startling rumor. We could scarcely believe our senses, but ample proof was soon furnished us that the dreadful tale was true. Our rivals had hired a Mexican band from Las Lomas about 50 miles away!

"That settled our cake! We held a consultation at once and canvassed the possibilities, but we had to admit that they were as good as hopeless. We immediately enlarged the scope of the supper we had promised. Of course there was to have been black coffee—that was what reminded me of the dance—and whisky and various other things, and we promptly sent out an emissary to spread the news in the town that our eating programme had been doubled. All the time, though, we knew it was a forlorn hope.

"You see, it was this way: The feminine element of our community was limited. Partners were at a premium, even if every woman in the place turned out, and where the women went, there you could be dead sure the men would go, too. Well, the women wouldn't hesitate a minute as if it came to a choice between a little better supper and a good deal better music. We knew that, and we felt as if we might as well lay our hands down and give up the game. There had fallen there from Kentucky, though, and the day after the announcement of the imported band came out he strolled in at supper time and threw his hat into the corner with one of his most effective blue-grass comfort shutters. We returned the compliments of the evening and he sat down at the table.

"'How's the pahty comin' on?' he asked.

"We groaned.

"'Oh,' he said, 'you all ain't got mob'n enough ingenuity to subcommont a kitten! If one o' you gentlemen 'll be good enough as to place himself under my directions I give yo' my honah that we'll have the only ball in this heah town!'

"Well, perhaps we didn't jump at the offer, and, after he'd picked out his man, we made him tell what his plan was. I'll tell you how we carried it out. The next morning we all went out looking very gay and cheerful; quite a contrast to the glum set we had been. Whenever anybody gave us the razzle-dazzle, begging your pardon (the apology was in the Poet's direction) we—well, we gave them the ha! ha! and looked as blamed superior that the town couldn't make out what was up. When we ran across one of the ladies whom we had invited to come—not that we had omitted to ask any of them—we were as dashing as we knew how to be. We wanted to know how many dances we were going to have with 'em and all that. They couldn't make us out quite, but they gave us to understand that our name was Dennis because, to be sorry, of the lovely music that the other gentlemen were importing for the occasion. Hadn't we heard of it?

"We laughed at this; laughed loud and long, much to their bewilderment, and finally we found it low enough to ask them if they really believed in that fake story of an imported band. Oh, sure they did! At which we laughed again, and then pitied them. Finally, when we had them at the proper point, we averred to them that the band was coming, that we knew it, and we were willing to stake all our future chances as entertainers on it. Well, they hedged a little then, promised to come to our party if the band didn't turn up, and that was all we asked. Our Kentucky cavalier had agreed to see that the band did not turn up.

"How did he fix that?" asked the Boys' Own, and his tone spoke evident regret that the story he was telling had not been found a story for the young, else could he have spoiled it.

"Easy! easy!" said the Cow Puncher, carelessly. "It was the simplest thing in the world. We learned that the band was to arrive on a way train which passed our town at nine o'clock in the evening. About seven o'clock the Kentuckian and his companion got on their horses and rode quietly out of town. They went to another village, ten miles or so down the road, where the train was due about 8:30. They don't run lightning expresses for the local traffic out that way. When the train came in our two fellows boarded it, found the band promptly, treated them with a jovial welcome, told them it was their station, and hauled them off and into a big wagon which they had all ready there. The Mexicans didn't really know what they were about, the Kentuckian fooled them completely. He and the other fellow got on their horses and started with the wagon out on the road to our town. At first they thought they would start in the opposite direction, but they didn't want to lose any more of the ball than was necessary, so they took their own road.

"When they were two miles out of town the wagon broke down. My! that Kentuckian was a sly devil! He worked it just right. When the breakdown occurred they made a show of examining the wagon and took the occasion to remove several other bolts besides the one they had "fixed" originally. Then they told the Mexicans that they, our fellows, would have to ride on to a place near by and get something to fix the wagon with. They told the band to 'just sit there quietly' until they came back, and with that they spurred up their horses and were off like the wind for home and the dance. They got there almost as soon as the crowd did."

"Then you got the crowd?"

"Well, did we get the crowd?" repeated the Cow Puncher, wagging his head with pride. "You never saw such a landslide as there was when that train came in without bringing any band! The party simply melted away at the other place, and it wasn't five minutes after that we had the whole night before I was dancing my first waltz with a—well, it may be that time and distance enhance her charms, and anyway I see a gleam in the Poet's eye, and I know he'll make copy out of my damsel of the night, so I won't have it. But I'll tell you what I will do.

"Here, waiter! Say, boil down some of that cocoroon coffee, will you, and bring us some that's black! You understand, black!

"If he does it, I'll drink her health with you, though I doubt if it does much good. As I remember, she must have imbibed about a quart of our coffee that night, and she was a northener. They can't do it always with impunity. But it made her eyes shine that night, anyway. My, what a night that was!"—N. Y. Sun.

NOVEL BICYCLE BOAT.

Unique Mechanical Combination Devised by a Californian.

The Strange Craft Goes Eight Miles an Hour—It Has Weathered Rough Water and Can Turn Around in Its Own Length.

A bicycle that really goes to sea just like a boat, that carries its rider safely through storm or calm, that floats like a duck and turns in its own length, is the invention of a San Francisco man. Many inventors claim to have made water bicycles, but they are usually useful only as sources of amusement to the readers of journals of a humorous nature. The aquacycle which Capt. Colin Thompson has built, however, is, according to the New York Herald, not one of this kind; for it exists and has already carried its maker out to sea, and what is still better, has brought him safely back.

This "bicycle," or aquatic wheel, combines features of the racing yacht, the bicycle and the steam launch. It has the propeller, rudder and machinery of the launch; the lines, hull and build of the yacht, and the complete workings of the bicycle, all combined. Capt. Thompson is a well-known character in San Francisco, and what he does not know about cogs, shafts and wheel fixtures in general could be written in a very small space.

He has succeeded in applying the motive power of the bicycle to the frame of a boat, and the combination makes the aquacycle. On the outside this craft or vehicle, looks as much like a naphtha launch as anything else. The lines of the hull follow very nearly those of the most modern racing yachts, notably the Defender. The propeller shaft, and the air-tight compartment, which gives additional buoyancy to the affair. In place of a rear wheel Capt. Thompson has a three blade, six-inch propeller, and above that a rudder.

Above the gunwale is an ordinary saddle such as is common to all land cycles. A handle bar serves as tiller and the propeller is worked by the pedals. As the pedals are moved around they start a set of cog wheels, which in turn revolve the propeller shaft, and the three-blade six-inch propeller at the stern is sent revolving at the rate of 40 revolutions per minute. At this rate the craft will go eight and a half miles an hour, and the inventor claims that with a few alterations the speed can be brought up to 12 miles an hour. The hull of the boat is 12 feet 6 inches in length and 3 feet 3 inches in breadth. Her greatest draught is 14 inches. All of the machinery runs on ball bearings, and there is the least possible amount of friction.

As the rider sits on the machine about one-half of the body is above the gunwale. The pedals, acting on the cog wheel, which in turn operates the propeller, are down within what in a larger boat would be termed the floor. There is no bracket and chain, but instead a series of beveled wheels connecting with the propeller shaft.

It has been demonstrated by practical tests that his combination craft can be used in almost any sort of weather. The air tanks at either end give it a buoyancy which reduces the danger of sinking almost to a minimum, and at the same time materially aids the rider in maintaining his position. This craft can turn in its own length, while it can be used, as has been demonstrated, in almost any kind of weather. It is particularly adapted for use on inland water.

It can be loaded as heavily as any ordinary canoe, and the method of propulsion is much less fatiguing than either paddle or oars. There is no complicated machinery to get out of order, no gasoline or naphtha engine to care for and supply, and it is for this reason as much as any other that Capt. Thompson claims to have evolved a craft of material value to inland hunters and sportsmen as well as to those who have occasion to put off shore in all sorts of weather.

In addition to its many other unique features the entire machinery of the boat can be taken out and so compactly folded that it may be carried under one's arm, while the hull itself is so compactly folded that it may be carried around like any portage ordinarily used by trappers or hunters.

Capt. Thompson is now at work trying to simplify some of the machinery of the craft, and thinks that when he accomplishes this he will have a craft which can, without undue exertion, be pedaled through the water at the rate of 15 miles an hour, with very little exertion to the rider.

Where Women Do the Wooing.

Between the mountains of India and Persia is a powerful tribe among whom an extraordinary custom prevails. Women's rights apparently have received full recognition, for the ladies of the tribe can choose their own husbands. All a single woman has to do when she wishes to change her state is to send a servant to fan a handkerchief to the hat of the man on whom her fancy lights, and he is obliged to marry her, unless he can show he is too poor to purchase her at the price her father requires.

TALK WITHOUT A STING.

Some Things Seen and Heard in Northern Michigan.

An Unprejudiced Estimate of Our Jewish Fellow-Citizens—Economical Potato Planting—Landscapes That Hurt the Eyes.

[Special Letter.]

Usually the first man I meet when away from home is a Jew. But as I have a great admiration for the Hebrew race these meetings are by no means disagreeable. I admire the Jews because they possess the knack of adapting themselves to conditions and circumstances, and because they know how to live. Several years ago I became a convert to their theory that a man's food influences his mental and moral condition. And observation has strengthened my faith in this doctrine. The Jews eat the choicest food, as soon as they have the means to buy it. Note the result. Instead of having remain in bondage and mere workers for wages they have become the prime movers in magnificent enterprises and give employment to tens of thousands of gentiles. While I admit that many shrewdness has had much to do with Jewish success here and abroad, yet I am firm in the belief that good cooking and the wise selection of food products has been quite as important a factor. Still another cause of the phenomenal progress made by the Hebrew race since its emancipation from bondage is its love of travel. A Jew never stagnates, either commercially or socially. When business is dull in one town he moves to another. When the society is unbidding place time he takes his family to a summer or winter resort. In short, he is progressive in every phase of life—whether selling goods on the road, or running a store, or dealing in options, or winning a place in the social world, or seeking political preferment. He is not satisfied until he is on top, and when on top he wants to direct the movements of the society in which he moves. What a combination of oriental cleverness, tenacity and cosmopolitan genius! No wonder that even the Jewbaiters of Germany and Austria seek to emulate the race they hate so much by exhorting their followers to meet Semitic persistency with an imitation of Semitic aggressiveness.

Too Many Christians by Four.

The oft-repeated statement that half of our pleasure resorts would have to be closed should the Jewish population withhold its patronage received confirming emphasis in my mind during a summer trip through northern Michigan, a section of the country which has developed into a veritable Mecca for recreation seekers. The large hotels at Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Mackinaw and Manitou Island entertained hundreds of representative Hebrew families, hailing from Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans and other southern points. In some hostelries they formed the majority of guests, notably in one inn at Petoskey where a genuinely American face was hard to discover. Coming down in the train from Charlevoix I overheard a conversation between two clothing manufacturers from Cincinnati, one of whom had been to Petoskey, which, although a trifle ancient, hit the nail exactly on the head. "Well, Israel," said one, "how's things at the Blank hotel in Petoskey?" "All right, Ikey," responded the other, "only dere's too many Christians there. I met four of dem in de corridor yesterday morning." The first time I heard this story it was applied to Long Branch, but as it fits the Blank hotel at Petoskey equally well, we will let it go without further comment.

Economical Potato Planting.

Once upon a time I read that Scots and Swedes were exactly alike in one respect—a total lack of the sense of humor. The man who projected the statement must have been a dull observer indeed, for some of the brightest wittieisms I have heard were of Scotch origin, and Gus Heege, in his clever speech at the banquet, was successful in proving that Swedish humor is worth at least a smile. Ole Olson has done more than his share to convert Michigan's great wilderness of stumps into a huge potato patch, and one of the family at least of this Swede wit to grow peculiary advantage this summer. Swede struck Mecosta county some time in April and made arrangements with a land owner to plant a large field of potatoes "on shares." He was to furnish half the seed and all the work. The seed cost him eight cents a bushel, and grew heavily on his savings; but when he looked at the large extent of soil to be worked the heart almost failed him. However, instead of giving up in despair, he studied Mecosta county nature, and then proceeded to invite all of his neighbors to meet him on his "patch" on a certain Monday morning, for the purpose of partaking of some solid refreshments. His guests arrived on time, and so did three kegs of beer and a lot of agricultural implements. Sven asked his neighbors to hitch their horses to the machine and give him a "lift" with his potatoes before indulging in the amber fluid. By five o'clock all his seed had been planted and all the beer had been drunk. "But do you think," said I, when he had told me his story, "it was impossible to make your guests work like slaves?" "If so," responded Sven, "I dey ben fool enough to do de work. Ae just ben fool enough to spend a dollar for beer." Now I contend that this Swedish peasant has not only lots of humor in his make-up, but enough shrewdness to accumulate a competency, no matter how discouraging conditions and circumstances might be.

Where Nature Is in Mourning.

An artist in search of a landscape depicting "Desolation" could find plenty of material in northern Michigan. After having traveled over the rich prairies of Illinois and Iowa and through the picturesque valleys of New York my heart almost bled when, for the first time, my eyes beheld mile after mile of country covered with nothing but rank grass, sand and stumps. Where a few years ago stately hemlocks and pines had invited man to worship his Creator nothing remained but decaying roots and here and there a leaning trunk scorched by forest fires. Everything else man, in his greed for gold, without a thought for posterity, had destroyed. Towns which once contained hundreds of busy inhabitants, stores and dance houses, were deserted, save by the few who had not the means to get away. The busy sawmills were moved to other points where the work of destruction promised fresh returns to unscrupulous capital. Occasionally a small potato patch in the midst of the laborious cultivated around gigantic stumps, bore testimony to the industry of the few remaining inhabitants of these deserted villages, but otherwise all was desolation—a picture of want, a sermon on the thoughtlessness of man and the shortsightedness of greed. Where hundreds could have dwelled in affluence for generations, had the stock of lumber been husbanded, a few new struggle along on the borderland of starvation. The lumberman has become a millionaire in a year or two, the paupers are paupers still, and the farmer has to spend years in clearing land which, after all, promises but lean returns for his hard toil.

THE GIANTS OF THE PAST.

Stranded in a Deserted Town.

Sven, the Swede whose potato planting experience testifies most graphically to his shrewdness, accompanied me to one of these deserted lumber towns, located on the shores of a beautiful lake. The first man we met was a middle-aged native mechanic who, in the palmy days, had been in charge of an engine in the woods. His tale of woe was pathetic, in a way. He had worked at "lumbering" for many years. "Work was always plenty," said he; "for 12 years I never earned less than $7.50 a day, and for a year or more I got $7.50 a day. But lumbering is dead now. I can't get any work and I haven't enough money to get away. Don't you think that's rather hard lines?" I didn't answer his question, but Sven remarked, sententiously: "Ef. Ae ben earning three dollar seventy fi' cents a day for dree year, Ae not have to stay here an' ben catch bullhead to keep from starvin'." Sven took the words out of my mouth. Any workingman who earns as much as the man had earned, and has not enough good American sense to make himself comparatively independent in 12 years, is not a worthy object for sympathy, although we may pity his wife and helpless children.

Largest Bet on Record.

The biggest bet on record, according to Mr. G. L. Sims, was made a few years back by a young American who was assistant at "a main" held in the grounds of a notorious young sporting marquis, now deceased. One bird was badly crippled and the rule of fighting with terrible force. "Twenty thousand to a pinch of snuff on that one," said the young American millionaire, which was taken. The American won.

A HERO.

He never bucked the center
On the gory, chastly field;
He never grasped a belly's throat
And choked him till he "squealed;"
He never perfected a balloon
To navigate the air;
He never shot a tiger or
Explored a leopard's lair.

He never plunged into the flood
To save a drowning maid;
He never climbed a snow-clad peak
Or a blazing building raid;
He never rescued from the flames
A gasping little child;
His name never graced a thousand lives
From an engine running wild.

He never faced the cannon's mouth,
Oh heard grim war's alarm;
He never closed his eyes and rushed
Unheedingly to harm;
He never clasped a maiden fair
And held her perfect at bay;
He never risked his life to stop
A frightful runaway.

But, though the skies be dark above
And fortune seems to frown—
Though everything appears to have Combined to keep him down—
He plods along his weary way
With hope still in his breast;
He never murmurs, but is just
Content to do his best.

A CURIOUS COUPLE.

The village of R—— is one of the quaintest little places imaginable. It is so small, and so out of the way, that you would never find it, except by accident. Indeed, it stands apart in some fields, absolutely concealed in a hollow, and is only approached on one side by a footpath (which in the winter is usually under water); on another by a cart track of the rudest and roughest description. When you do arrive there, the first object to strike you is the church.

There is something pleasing, something grateful to the eye in this grey, plain, disproportioned little structure. It seems to fit into its surroundings admirably; the farmyard, the cottages, the brook flowing just below (they call it "the river" there, where everything is new-fangled and modern), the everpresent geese and sheep and cattle, and the perfect seclusion of surrounding pastures. Nothing but green whichever way you look. No houses (except the quaint little cluster round the church), no shops, no view of anything but in by the slopes which skirt the valley; a complete environment of everlasting fields.

I have seen many churchyards. This one, lying begirt as it is under its ivy-clad horn-nosed tower, indifferently kept, shaded by many cypresses and weeping ash, where scarcely once a year, perhaps, is the slumbering soil disturbed for a new grave, and where everything speaks of rest, quietude, and peace, this churchyard of R—— is the spot in which I myself would soonest choose to lie. One I knew who now reposes there—a former rector; the kindest, heartiest, tenderest, most beloved of pastors. Those who have since died in R—— have all wished to be laid near him. And now around him sleeps a little cluster of his hoary-headed friends. A happy family, I should think, where they peaceful. But in that especial corner the peacefulness seems always most profound.

It was this rector's nephew and successor—for R—— has been a family living any time this hundred years past—to whom I am indebted for the following story. He often strolled out with me when I went to paint, and, while smoking innumerable pipes, told me many interesting local yarns. Some, however, the facts of which had lately come under his own experience, quite overtopped all the others in strikingness and peculiarity. Here it is, substantially in my informant's words:

"You see that cottage over there?" he said, pointing to a dismantled hovel in the corner of the field where I had pitched my canvas.

I nodded.

"A most remarkable history is attached to it," he went on. "Not a legend, but a fact. Of this, I can assure you, because I myself had a hand in finding it out. It centers round a certain couple who lived there—the most extraordinary old folk that I ever came across. I should like you to have seen them. I think you would have admitted them to be the ugliest pair in England, as they certainly were the most close and unfriendly. During the 16 years that they lived in that cottage, they never once asked a neighbor inside."

"Umph! Hermits, indeed," I observed.

"Absolute hermits. There was, however, some excuse for their objecting to chewing all outside company. Each suffered from a severe physical infirmity. The woman was nearly stone deaf; the man was dumb. When they first came here—18 years ago now, I think—my uncle, as you know, was then rector, tried to find out what he could about them. He only learned a little, and that little was nothing out of the way. It transpired that the man was an ex-sailor of the royal navy, who had lost his speech after a severe attack of yellow fever in the West Indies. He was now entitled to a pension, which he drew half yearly, and which my uncle only knew about by the fact that the old fellow had to come to him periodically to get his papers signed. The woman was his sister, so she gave the neighbors to understand, and so also might have been inferred from a certain family likeness which was noticeable between them. She was a most ill-favored hag; shrivelled, unkempt, and dirty beyond description. Although she then must have been nearer 70 than 60 by her long, tousled hair was still as black as a coal, and hung in hideous locks about her hawk-like face, which, with its dusky eyes, and its hooked proboscis, was most unconformly forbidding. The poor people all pronounced her a witch; and, for that reason, gave her a wide berth. Probably the woman purposely encouraged the idea. For her great aim and object was, evidently, to be left alone.

"Although her brother's pension amounting to about £1 1s. day, was ample to keep two old folks decently and even comfortably, in that cheapest of neighborhoods, these two always gave the impression of being half starved, and I do not believe that either of them purchased a new article of clothing for years. On the glebe land in R——. From this people began to infer that they were misers, and as time went on many things happened to strengthen the inference. All along they had discovered the greatest anxiety and apprehension when their privacy tried to gain access to their hovel. Indeed, my uncle has often told me that the expression of the old people's faces when he called there, and one or other of them peered round the chained door at him, was really quite comical in his suspicious trepidation; and the older they grew, the more pronounced did their precautions to prevent outsiders entering become.

"At first they had sometimes ventured to lock up their house and make an excursion together into F——." (He named the adjoining market town, which I will not further particularize,) "But by and by they gave up such recklessness entirely, and whenever one of them went out, the other always remained on guard at home. The precaution was quite necessary. All the poor in the neighborhood were by this time fully convinced that there was something 'unked' about them; and no one in R——, or for miles round, would have willingly crossed their threshold, even if the door had been left open. But these old misers were altogether too suspicious to reason, and seemed to live in the unceasing fear of having their privacy invaded.

"My uncle (as he himself told me shortly before his death) was greatly exercised about his two strange parishioners. Many rectors would have considered themselves absolved of all obligations toward people who not merely never attended church, but refused even to admit their clergyman into their house when he called. But that was not my uncle's way. Every poor man who lived in his parish he held to be under his pastoral protection, and he felt himself bound to look after his interests. In regard to these two old misers, however, it was difficult to know what was the kindest course. To let them live on in their present half-starved condition, and in that fearfully insanitary hovel, undisturbed, seemed no real kindness. And yet he was loath to set the parish or the sanitary officer upon their track. He was strongly to the opinion that an Englishman's house—even if it be nothing better than a pig sty—is his castle; and, in his heart, by no means approved of the wide compulsory power then lately given to the local authorities.

"Besides, after all, what could such authorities do? Compel them to evacuate their miserable shanty, no doubt. But the old people would then simply change their local habitation, not their mode of life. Those regulations are nothing themselves, not all the hoards of guineas in Somerset could make people eat who did not choose to do so. It was possible, indeed, that they might be medically found of unsound mind; and, in that case, would be removed to the workhouse infirmary or the county asylum. But even supposing that feasible, it was a course from which my uncle shrank. And the outcome of it all was that he let things remain in statu quo.

"When I succeeded him here, I went to call, now and then, on the old people; meeting, however, with the same treatment that my uncle had always experienced. Sometimes, they would take open letters at others, they would did so with the chain up, and conversed with me through a narrow aperture. In reply to my inquiries whether I could do anything, or give them any assistance I always had a negative returned; until at last I gave up trying in that direction, as hopeless a direction, and left the two hermits pretty much to themselves.

"The man came to me regularly every half year to get his pension papers signed. I took advantage of these opportunities to give him some friendly advice, and to remonstrate with him on his folly in starving himself and wearing such inadequate clothing in the coldest weather. At first I had made my appearance in pea-jacket, trousers and flannel shirts. But I soon gave up that, for he never wore them; and I formed the impression that he had probably converted them into cash. In fact, I asked him one day what he had done with them all. He only looked cunning, affected stupidity, and made some unintelligible signs. Despite his dumbness, he could make me understand things very well when he liked—especially anything connected with his pension. The woman was only to be met in the presence of some old coats

A MAN OF REFORMS.

Assuredly, Sheriff Kirk is a man of many reforms. He has surprised the old habitues of the courts pretty nearly every week with some new order, and yesterday he announced that constables attached to the court would not be permitted to become bondsmen for prisoners brought up to answer indictments. It is said that the privilege has been abused by many constables who made money out of the prisoners, as it often happens a man is arraigned who can not secure a bondsman and who would be glad to pay a good round sum rather than go to jail. As many of the constables are property owners, they could, if they so desired, strike a bargain with the prisoner and get him out of his difficulty with little risk to themselves.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

During the session of last year's Legislature Assemblyman Roll, of Union county, was severely criticised, even by his own party associates, for his seeming favoritism to trolley road corporations as against the general sentiment of the people on certain matters. Now he is honored by the appointment as chairman of the Assembly Railroad Committee where he is in a position to easily do more in the line of favoritism than he was a year ago. Public sentiment didn't amount too much with Speaker MacPherson in this case.

UNDERGROUND WIRES.

The announcement made in the columns of today's paper concerning the disposition of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company to put their wires in underground conduits will be pleasant news to those who realize the danger that lurks in the network of wires overhead in the case of fire or a live electric wire coming in contact with the less harmless telephone connection. It is a source of congratulation to know that there is a corporation in our midst who has has so promptly acquiesed to public sentiment.

CONVICT WORK.

One of the bills that will be introduced in the present Legislature will provide that convicts in county jails shall work on the roads. The measure originated in Asbury Park, and is being actively supported by the wheelmen of the place. Assemblyman O. H. Brown, of Spring Lake, has promised to introduce such a measure. The Rights and Privileges Committee of the New Jersey Division of the League of American Wheelmen will hold a meeting shortly to take some action on the proposed bill.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

No matter what precautionary measures in equipment and operation it may make or what rigid rules it may prescribe for employes, a railroad company depends on the personal responsibility of its servants to see to it that disorder and fatality does not ensue. The slightest misjudgment of any one of its thousand employes is likely to subject the road to a horrible and ghastly catastrope such as took place at Skillman, Saturday night.

OPPOSE BIENNIAL SESSIONS.

The New Jersey Federation of Trade and Labor Unions, representing 50,000 wage-earners, has sent a circular-letter to members of the State Legislature appealing for the defeat of the proposed Constitutional Amendment providing for biennial sessions of the Legislature. The circular further requests an eight hour law for public employes and a semi-monthly payment of wages law.

CITY CONSIDERABLE RICHER.

City Treasurer Titsworth received a check Monday from County School Superintendent Holmes for $16,199.04. This amount is Plainfield's share of the county school tax and will be turned over to the Board of Education.

RECONCILED TO HIS FATE

JONES FOREMAN SHOWS BUT LITTLE CONCERN ABOUT HIS WIFE.

Keller Released From Custody at Elizabeth and Disappeared Before Foreman Could Have an Interview With Him

There are no new developments in the disappearance of Mrs. Jones Foreman and Baker Keller, which was recorded in these columns on Saturday. Sunday Mr. Foreman went to Elizabeth in search of his wife but he could not find her. He learned where she had been staying but the people at the house would not tell him where she had gone.

Saturday evening it was reported that Keller was in town and Foreman hearing of this, went to the office of Justice Neweorn for the purpose of having a warrant issued for the arrest of Keller. The Justice told Foreman that he had slight grounds for a charge so nothing was done in the matter.

Monday morning when Foreman was seen he seemed to be more reconciled to his fate and showed but little concern regarding the absence of his wife.

Keller was released from the Elizabeth jail Saturday, as there was no charge on which to hold him. It is not known where he went to, but Forman thinks that he joined his wife at some pre arranged place.

A MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

A Well-known Turfman Charged With Adultery at a Trenton Hotel.

Fred Smith, a well-known turfman and assistant trainer of the two great pacers, John R. Gentry and Robert J., was murderously assaulted at his apartments in the stable of Lewis C. Tewksbury, at Somerville, at early hour Sunday morning, by George Castler, manager of the Alfred de Cardova stock farm. Castler applied to a local justice at midnight for a warrant for the arrest of Smith, who he alleges, committed adultery with his wife at a Trenton hotel on Friday night. The justice refused to issue the warrant, as Castler had not sufficient proof of the man's guilt. Castler, accompanied by his father-in-law, then went to Smith's apartments, and Castler, who is a man of phenomenal strength, broke Smith's nose with a single blow. He then grasped him by the throat and continued the assault with terrible effect, and would have killed his victim but for the timely interference of the stablemen. Smith escaped to a neighboring stable, where he concealed himself in a haymow. When discovered by his friends he was in a pitiable condition. Castler was still searching for him. Smith's friends dressed his wounds and hurried him out of town in a closed carriage. He boarded a train at Bound Brook for New York City.

AROUND THE EUCHRE TABLE.

Saturday Night Club Entertained By Mr. and Mrs. Peter Schultz.

The entertainment of the Saturday Evening Euchre Club at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Schultz, of East Second street, last Saturday evening, was one of pleasure to all.

The prizes were elegant and useful, as usual, and consisted of an afternoon tea lamp, which was awarded as first prize to Mrs. Hall. A dainty theatre fan, as second prize, was awarded to Mrs. Dryden. For the gentlemen, Mr. Schultz won first honors, a handsome umbrella, while Mr. Dryden won second honors, a carafee with three glasses.

The members of the club present were Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Terhune, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Nightingale, Mr. and Mrs. Longman, Mr. and Mrs. DeLong, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Codington, Mr. and Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Campman, Miss Force, Mr. Salkeld, H. C. VanEmburgh, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Schultz. The guests of the club were Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Andrews, of St. Paul.

The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Codington, of Sandford avenue.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2780 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m out in the rain

A good drenching in a cold rain is often the beginning of consumption. Yet no one claims that the germs of this disease exist in the rainwater. Then how was this brought about? The exposure was followed by a cold; the vitality was lowered; the cough continued for some weeks; the throat and lungs became congested; and thus all the conditions were favorable for the consumption germs.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, does not directly attack these germs and kill them. But it does tone up the whole system and restores the body to health before serious harm is done. The germs of consumption thrive best when the system is weakened and the throat and lungs congested. Do not delay until it is too late, but treat your cough early. Cod-liver oil and the hypophosphites, in the form of Scott's Emulsion, are the very best remedies.

SPORT ON THE DIAMOND

PROSPECT OF A LIVELY BASEBALL SEASON FOR PLAINFIELD.

A Semi-Professional League to be Composed of Teams From New Jersey Towns—B. A. Mulford Interested In It.

The work of forming a New Jersey State base ball league has been steadily progressing but it was not until lately that any announcement of the league was made and then it was rather indefinite, especially to Plainfield enthusiasts, but now some facts have been learned concerning this city's share in the league.

Pat Powers, of Trenton, and Ted Sullivan, of Washington, D. C., have been the prime movers in the scheme and they are assured that the league will be successfully carried out.

The league will consist of six clubs: Plainfield, Trenton, Millville, Elizabeth, New Brunswick and Bridgeton. It is thought that with a short circuit and not much travelling expenses the league will be a financial success. There are several other cities that are anxious to get into the league but the plan of the promoters is to stick to the original number, six, and make no change unless one of the present teams should drop out.

Of course the formation of the local team is of the greatest interest to the Plainfield cranks. At present it is impossible to learn the names of the men that will compose the Plainfield team, but it will be under the same management as the nine from the Plainfield Athletic Club was last year. B. A. Mumford, manager of last year's team, will resume his old position this year and look out for the fortunes of Plainfield in the New Jersey State League. He has not yet announced the players that he has signed, but he expects to make public the details of the proposed league shortly, and The Press will give the information as soon as it is announced.

The nine which Mr. Mumford managed last year was known as the Plainfield Athletic Club, but this year the name will be changed as another organization in the West End has already been incorporated under that title.

AN AGITATED COLLECTOR

HE RAISED A RUMPUS IN FRONT OF A BARBER SHOP.

Claimed That the Proprietor Owed Him Money Which the Barber Declared He Had Paid—The Collector Was Arrested

There was lots of excitement in front of William Classen's barber shop on Liberty street, Saturday afternoon. Alfred Orbann, a little Frenchman, who is employed as collector by L. Sternberg & Co., in it was he that seemed to be at the bottom of the trouble, and after being put out of the barber shop, he refused to leave the sidewalk in front of it until Patrolman Flynn came along and placed him under arrest for disturbing the peace and refusing to move on.

Sometime ago, Classen purchased some articles from L. Sternberg & Co., and he has been making small payments on account for some time. He claimed that he has paid the entire amount, but the company's books did not agree with his, and a comparison followed. In the instances where they differed, Meyer Leichtentritt, the manager for the company, claims that the customer's account book had been altered, and that the change was apparent by the use of a different kind of a lead pencil in the entries.

The difference came in the collections by Orbann and the Frenchman was very indignant at the imputation on his honesty. Mr. Leichtentritt had never had occasion to suspect his collector before, but he told him that he must go and collect the rest of the money. Very much excited over the matter, Orbann went and demanded the rest of the money, but Classen said it had all been paid. The Frenchman presisted and then the barber at last ordered him to leave the place. He refused and was finally assisted out. He was greatly excited over the matter and attracted a crowd until the officer appeared on the scene and told him to keep quiet and pass on. Orbann refused to do so and was locked up in consequence.

He was brought up before City Judge DeMeza Monday morning and pleaded not guilty. He was represented by ex-Councilman Walter L. Hetfield. The Judge finally suspended sentence.

'I AM DYING," SHE CALLED.

AND HER DEMISE CAME RIGHT AFTER.

The large circle of friends of Edwin I. Vroom, of Harrison street, will learn with deep sorrow of the sudden death of his wife, which occurred last Sunday. Mrs. Vroom had not been ill, and this fact makes her death a particularly sad one. Following the usual custom, Mrs. Vroom in putting her little girl to bed, always lies down with her until the latter goes to sleep. This was done last evening and Mrs. Vroom told them that she would be down stairs in a few minutes. Presently her husband heard her say, "I am dying!" He rushed up to the room and found his wife lying prostrate on the bed. All attempts to arouse her were fruitless, and the grief stricken husband sent for Dr. Zeglio at once. When the latter arrived he said that death was the result of the bursting of a blood vessel and that Mrs. Vroom had been unable to raise the blood before it choked her.

It was only a few months ago that Mr. Vroom lost a young son, and this double affliction has made him heartbroken.

Mrs Vroom was formerly Miss Lena Kellar, and she was a most estimable young woman, with a large circle of friends who will mourn her death exceedingly.

The second series of the papers of travel of the Honeyman Private Tours party has been published in a pretty volume of 210 pages, illustrated with about 30 photographs. These papers are by twenty different members of the party of last summer, who coached in England, and then spent some pleasant weeks in Switzerland on the Rhine, and in Italy. The descriptions cover in the coaching tour considerable of the course along the Thames, including the Henley races, and the journey through the Milton country, with a visit to "the homes and haunts" of great men like Edmund Burke, the poet, Grey, William Penn, etc. A few copies of the work not taken by members of the party are for sale by the publishers, Honeyman & Co., of this city.

Death of Mrs. Daley.

The death of Mrs. John K. Daley, of Pleasant Run, N. J., occurred on Saturday last after a lingering illness. The decedent was the mother of Mrs. Levi C. Kline, of Somerset street, and the latter has been in constant attendance with her mother during the past three months.

You Can't Do It

It isn't possible to boil any oatmeal long enough to break the starch-cells, and so render it digestible. Starch is not converted into digestible material until 250 degrees is reached, and 212 degrees is the maximum boiling temperature. Oatmeal can only be made digestible by dry heat, and is the only oatmeal in which the starch is rendered soluble by bursting the starch granules. This makes it the only safe oatmeal for infants, children, and those of weak digestion.

Be sure and get the package with the big H O on the end.

SERVED SEVERAL YEARS

H. D. JANES RESIGNS AS A TRUSTEE OF THE CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH

Annual Meeting of the Society Monday Night—George A. Strong Elected a New Trustee—A Balance in the Treasury.

The annual meeting of the Crescent Avenue church was held last evening at which time the election of trustees took place, and the report of the treasurer, W. F. Arnold, was presented.

The election of trustees was held first, and resulted as follows: Charles Place, C. J. Fisk, J. K. Myers, I. W. Reshmond, J. W. Murray, George A. Strong and W. F. Arnold. The resignation of Henry D. Janes, as a trustee, was received with the deepest regret. Mr. Janes has filled the position for the past fourteen years, and during that time he has served the church faithfully and with great honor. The following resolution was ananimously adopted by the board which will explain itself:

Resolved, That the thanks of the board be extended to Henry D. Janes for his long and very efficient services as trustee, and we regret that he has been compelled to decline a re-election.

After its adoption by the board it was also adopted by the congregation.

The vacancy in the board was filled by the election of George A. Strong, who was unanimously chosen.

Treasurer, W. F. Arnold then presented his report which was as follows:

RECEIPTS.
Pew Rents	$11,807.43
Other Receipts	266.50
Chapel Receipts	6,901.32
Total Receipts	$18,974.25
EXPENDITURES.
Church Expenses	$12,486.40
Chapel Expenses	5,650.93
Total Expenditures	$18,137.43
Balance on Hand	$ 967.82

The very excellent showing made by the church in its financial department is to be highly commended, and it shows that there is wise and careful management in this department.

Exposure to Disease

Does not necessarily mean the contraction of disease provided the system is in a vigorous condition, with the blood pure and all the organs in healthy action. When in such condition contagion is readily resisted and the disease germs can find no lodgement. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to build up the system because it makes pure, rich blood, and pure blood is the basis of good health. In cold weather is especially necessary to keep up the health tone because the body is subject to greater exposure and more liable to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the safeguard to health.

BLUE LINER RUNS INTO A LOCAL TRAIN

One Man Dead and a Half Dozen More Seriously Injured.

PRECEDED BY ANOTHER FATALITY.

Two Men Killed at Hopewell Crossing by a P. & R. Local and the Delay Caused an Order For Them to Take to a Siding at Skillman—Engineer Ashton Lost Control of Engine and Ran on to Main Track Again to Get in Line of a Blue Line Express and a Disastrous Smashup Occurred—Injured Men Brought to Muhlenberg Hospital.

The little hamlet of Skillman, which lays about fourteen miles south of Bound Brook on the line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, was the scene of a frightful railroad accident Saturday evening, when one of the Blue Line flyers crashed at full speed into an east bound local train. Cars and locomotives were derailed and the passengers of both trains were thrown violently from their seats, whi e the crews of the colliding trains suffered severely.

The local train, No. 721, is due at Bound Brook at 7:09 o'clock in the evening. The train is scheduled to leave Hopewell a few minutes before 7 o'clock, and on Saturday evening was about on time. As the train approached the grade crossing, which lies just outside of Hopewell, two men were driving in the direction of the crossing at a rapid pace. They were driving in a two horse buggy. Flagman Hart saw them coming and waved his flag at them to wait until the train passed by. They paid no attention to him, however, but started to cross the tracks. He seized one of the horses by the head and tried to stop them, but the driver whipped up the horses and Hart had to step back or be run down. Then they drove directly across the track in front of the approaching train, and the next instant they were struck and the horses, men and vehicle were thrown for many feet. The men were instantly killed, while the horses died in a few minutes and the carriage was completely wrecked. The men were Asher Snook and George Coleman, of Woodville, and they were driving to Hopewell. Snook was a carpenter by trade.

The train was stopped and backed up to the scene of the disaster. The remains were taken back to Hopewell, and then the train continued on its journey several minutes late.

The Blue Line train, No. 521, under the charge of Conductor Powell, is due at Bound Brook at 7:38 o'clock. Saturday night it was drawn by Jersey Central engine 459, Charles Clapp, engineer. The engine of the local was the P. & R. engine 575, with Engineer William Ashton and Fireman George Behl as crew. Conductor Oldham was in charge of the latter train.

It was known on the local that the Blue Line was not far behind and at Skillman, which consists of the station and two little stores with a few houses in the neighborhood, the local train ran in on the siding that extends for about half a mile. The train made the switch all right but, when the other end of the siding was reached, instead of stopping, the engine glided out on the main track again and the baggage and mail cars followed. Then the train came to a standstill while the three passenger coaches remained on the siding. In the distance the headlight of the fast-approaching Blue Line was rapidly growing larger. Then came the shriek on the Central engine which was going at a speed of about sixty miles an hour. The crash followed and the screams of the frightend passengers and the rush of the escaping steam drowned all other noises.

Why the local train went out on to the main track again, it is impossible to say. The only two men who can tell, the engineer and fireman of the local train, are not in condition to reveal the cause for a time at least. It is generally supposed that the air brakes would not work and before Engineer Ashton had time to reverse his lever and back the train on to the siding, the Blue Line plunged into the other.

There was only one occupant of the smoking car on the local train and that was Dr. VanNest, of Hopewell. When the train went on the main track again, he became interested, as he knew the fast express was close behind, and got out of the car and walked up to the engine and told the men there that they had better back the train out of the way or there would be an accident. As he looked down the track, he saw the headlight of the approaching train and with a shout of warning to the men in the engine, he fled down the track.

Ashton and Behl heard the warning or saw the headlight, for they prepared to jump but before they could cleared the platform, the other train was upon them and they were hurled with great violence to the ground. Engineer Clapp of the Blue Line saw the other train when the collision was inevitable and he and his firemen prepared to jump for their lives but the time was to short and as they sprang outward, the iron monster struck the other train and plunged into the ditch at the side of the track. The boiler exploded with the shock and the scalding steam and boiling water was poured over Clapp and Mahlon Dickenson, the baggage master of the local, who at the switch preparing to turn it. He had been thrown into the ruins of the Central locomotive by the force of the collision. The heavy parlor cars that made up the rest of the train crushed the baggage car, demolishing it. The other cars of that train remained on the rails.

The baggage car of the local had to bear the full brunt of the collision and was smashed to kindling. The mail car in front was driven from the track and wrecked almost beyond recognition. The mail clerk was in the car at the time and he was half buried by the debris. The mail was not destroyed, but was pulled out of the mass of wreckage by the crowd that soon gathered. The tender of the P. & R. engine was completely demolished, while the engine was derailed and damaged to some extent. The remainder of the cars of the local train were derailed by the force of the collision and were crowded up against the wecked baggage car.

To the few eye-witnesses of the catastrophe the scene was a terrible one. The crash was deafening, while the air was filled with splinters and pieces of wreckage. The steam that rushed from the exploded boiler hid the wreck for a few moments. The passengers of the two trains were hurled from their seats; women and children who could have been rushed blindly about trying to find out the extent of the accident. Everybody on the trains was more or less bruised, and all experienced a terrible shock, from which many did not recover for some time.

The few residents of the neighborhood hurried to the scene with blankets and quilts and a field hospital was established under the direction of Dr. VanNest. The injured men were found by the searchers and carried to it while word was immediately telegraphed to Hopewell and Bound Brook for assistance. The accident occurred at about 7:15 o'clock.

The news occasioned great excitement in Bound Bound Brook and a train of two passenger coaches and a baggage car was sent to the scene under the charge of Drs. Manning and Wild, of that place. The train was equipped with all their instruments and materials for dressing wounds Dr. Pearson was hurried to the scene from Hopewell on a special engine and arrived in time to aid the sufferers. Upon the arrival of the relief train from Bound Brook, the hospital was arranged in the baggage car and here the wounds of the injured were dressed.

Engineer Clapp of the Blue Line and Baggagemaster Dickenson, of the local, were picked up near the wreck of the engine of that train, both of them terribly scalded.

James Devlin, one of the Royal Blue firemen, was found in a brook, badly scalded, thirty feet away, having been thrown that far by the shock.

Baggagemaster Webster, of the Blue Line, was able to walk to the temporary hospital. Both conductors received slight injuries. Engineer Ashton, of the local, was found in a heap, seriously injured. The shock of the first accident and the following smash-up had been too great for his nerves and his mind wandered. His fireman, Behl, was found lying on the tracks in an unconscious condition. None of the passengers were seriously injured.

The two main tracks and the east bound siding were blocked but traffic was continued by the siding on the other side. The Blue Line train, due at Bound Brook at 8:45, was flagged and the injured men placed on board. The passengers were also changed into this train and carried to their destination. Ashton was lifted off at Bound Brook and taken to his home in a hack. The other four were carried to this city where the ambulance met the train.

The North avenue station was crowded with spectators who wanted to learn the particulars of the accident, word of which had reached this city some time before. Clapp, Dickenson and Behl were conveyed to the Muhlenburg Hospital by the ambulance. Clapp was the only one of the trio that was conscious. Webster was able to walk from the car to a hack which conveyed him to the hospital. The crowd remained around the station for some time longer trying to learn more details of the affair and then departed.

The injured men were brought down under the charge of Drs. VanNest and Pearson, of Hopewell, and they were met at the station by the Drs. Hedges who then took charge of the injured ones. All the staff of the hospital was called out to attend them when they reached the hospital.

A wrecking train was sent through from Philadelphia and had the wreck all cleared away by noon Sunday. The rails were partially torn up but were soon repaired.

The wreckage caught fire from the Blue Line engine soon after the accident, and the remains of the Central engine and the wrecked cars of the accommodation train were destroyed by the flames.

Superintendent Tomlinson arrived within half an hour of the crash, and immediately set to work to clear the track with a wrecking train and a large force of men, although at no time was traffic blocked entirely, as there are four tracks at that point, and one was left open. He left at noon Sunday, when the wreckage had been cleared up and the crippled engines set upon their wheels, ready to be towed to the repair shops. He said that the damage to the rolling stock would amount to about $10,000, and declared that, although Engineer Ashton had been running on the road for ten years or more, he would doubtless be discharged for his gross carelessness as soon as the official inquiry was completed.

A Daily Press reporter called at the home of Engineer William Ashton yesterday afternoon, but was unable to see him as he was still in a serious condition.

These are the injured men:

ASHTON, WILLIAM; engineer of the local Philadelphia and Reading train; scalded and injured internally; taken to his home at Bound Brook by his brother.

BEHL, GEORGE; fireman of the Philadelphia and Reading train; has concussion of the brain and is bruised and cut; twenty-three years old and married, his home being in Bound Brook; taken to Muhlenberg Hospital; may recover.

CLAPP, CHARLES A.; engineer of the Royal Blue, Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, Jersey City; married and the father of two children; scalded from head to foot and so frightfully hurt that he has been kept unconscious by the use of opiates; now in Muhlenberg Hospital.

QUICK, GARRETT; fireman of the Royal Blue; severely bruised and thought to be injured internally; taken to his home in Dunellen; will probably recover.

WEBSTER, FRANK; baggagemaster of the Royal Blue; bruised, but not dangerously; taken to his home in North Plainfield; he will recover.

Mahlon Dickinson, the baggagemaster of the P. & R. local, who was at the switch and was mortally injured, died at the hospital Sunday at 11 p. m. He became unconscious soon after his arrival at that institution and remained in that condition until he died. His leg, arm, collarbone and three ribs were broken, besides internal injuries. He lived at 831 North Ninth street, Philadelphia. He leaves a widow, but no children. The remains will be taken to Philadelphia, today.

TALKED OF HOME MISSIONS

HELP TO DEVELOP THE COUNTRY

A Former Commissioner of Indian Affairs Makes an Interesting Talk.

The Rev. T. J. Morgan, LL. D. corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, was present at the First Baptist church Sunday morning and gave a talk on the subject of, "The relation of home Missions to the development of our national life." The speaker said that there was nothing more interesting to the student than a study of the rise and fall of great nations. There is, he continued, a fascination about the history of Rome, and the Jewish race, but nothing is more fascinating than a study of the development of our own great nation. If you ask any thoughtful-minded man what he thinks of the future of America, he will tell you that there are a great many problems of self government yet to be settled.

The speaker then went on to say that during the past sixty-five years the society had established five thousand churches, chiefly through the west, and during that time $10,000,000 had been raised. He also stated that one quarter of the Baptists in the Chicago Association belong to foreign nations. He said that the society was now doing greater work than ever, and he made a strong plea for contributions to continue the work. The large congregation present listened attentively to Dr. Morgan, and at the close he received a satisfactory collection to assist in the grand work which is being carried on by the society.

PLENTY OF AQQUA PURA.

THERE IS NO NEED TO FEAR A WATER FAMINE HEREABOUTS.

Supt. Andrews' of the Water Company Says That the Wells Have Been Driven Lower and There is a Plentiful Supply.

Of late there has been several rumors afloat that the water supply in this city is getting low, and to ascertain the true facts, a Daily Press reporter made inquiries concerning the same. Superintendent Amos Andrews said that the rumors were without foundation in every particular. "He also said that the supply is greater this year than it was one year ago.

After the establishment of the works it was learned that the pumps were set too high to do efficient work, and in consequence they were lowered. One well was driven lower for an experiment and four new wells were put in. Outside of that nothing has been done to increase the supply.

At present Plainfield is using about 600,000 gallons daily. In the summer the consumption is about double. For sometime past Elizabeth has had but precious little water from Plainfield, owing to the establishment of their own system of water works at "The Hummocks."

CONNECTING TO SEWERS

PROPERTY OWNERS WILL BE GIVEN PLENTY OF TIME TO DO THIS.

The False Impression Has Been Given That the Board of Health Would Start a Regular Crusade to Hurry Connections.

The ordinance, providing that all residents shall connect with the sewer, which is now before the Board of Health, has caused lots of discussion as to its effect, should it be passed, and no end of worriment to the citizens who are not near a sewer or whose house is not equipped with the sanitary plumbing required to connect with the sewer. There have been many questions asked as to the real meaning of the proposed ordinance and whether it will be necessary for all residents to connect at once no matter to what inconvenience or heavy expense they are put. The New's has been publishing articles in regard to the matter which have increased the worriment by giving the impression that the Board is soon to start a campaign against the residents who have not connected with the sewer.

To learn the real facts in the case, a Daily Press reporter called on George W. Rockfellow, president of the Board of Health, at his office on Park avenue, last week, and asked him regarding the intentions of the Board in the matter.

The object of the ordinance, explained Mr. Rockfellow, was to have the residents along the lines of the sewer connect with it as soon as possible for as the sewer system was made to use, not to look at, but the Board had no intention of driving anybody to make the connection. There are some buildings in the city which are already to connect and the owners will be expected to do so in a reasonable time, but then there are others which will have to be greatly changed in order to make the connection; they will be given time in which to make their alterations. The matter is left to the judgment of the Board and they will not drive anyone.

In passing this law, Mr. Rockfellow said, the Board is merely acting according to the laws of the State of New Jersey. The Board was informed by the Corporation Counsel that it was necessary to pass such an ordinance to conform with the State law and so it was drawn up. The ordinance will probably be passed at the meeting of the Board the last of this month unless there should be some opposition to the ordinance.

A FAMILY FATED WITH MISHAPS.

One Brother Has an Eye Shot Out and Another Cuts Off His Toe.

Hezekiah Ryno, of Three Bridges, met with a serious accident last Tuesday while chopping wood in the barnyard of his home. He was hard at work when his axe slipped and struck his foot severing one toe from the foot. He straightway removed the shoe and then took care of the extra toe, after which he dressed the wound without consulting a doctor and returned to his work around the farm.

His brother had his eye accidentally shot out with a bullet from a Flobert rifle in the hands of one of his friends some time ago, as was told in the Press at the time.

Will of the Late A. W. Cutler.

The will of the late A. W. Cutler, of Morristown, admitted to probate by Surrogate Pierson, was executed June 10, 1873, and witnessed by Senator John B. Vreeland and Mayor Edward A. Quale. It is very short. His entire estate is left to his widow during her lifetime and then to his three sons. Mrs. Cutler is made executrix.

COMRADE LAID TO REST.

FUNERAL OBSEQUIES OF THE LATE ISAAC BROKAW.

The Services in Charge of the G. A. R. of Which Decedent Was a Member—Sermon Preached by Rev. C. R. Barnes.

Another comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic has been laid to rest, thus reminding all that the ranks of this noble patriotic order is growing thin very fast.

The funeral services of the late Isaac Brokaw were held from the house, No. 507 West Fourth street, Wednesday of last week. There was a very large attendance of relatives, friends, comrades and members of the Woman's Relief Corps. The services were conducted by Rev. C. R. Barnes, who, after reading appropriate selections from the Bible, spoke in part as follows:

"It is natural in times of sorrow to seek for comfort, but we are not left in darkness if we look at the word of God, where we can find facts that can comfort us. If we stop and think, we can see how much better off our friends are, and this is illustrated by Paul who said that to depart and be with Christ was far better.

"We often think of our friends racked with disease and pain, but it never occurs to us to think of them in such a condition that they have passed from all their sufferings.

"There is a story of a little boy who grieved over the death of a sister. One day an angel showed him, in a dream, his sister's condition, free from pain, and enjoying all the good things God had prepared for her. He then asked the little boy if he would like to have his sister back again, when he replied, that he would rather have the angel take him to her.

"When we pass to the other side we shall have a glorious body. Jesus will lead His sheep and they will go in and out and find pasture.

"Our brother was a good soldier, and a good soldier for Christ. He was a true and faithful Christian and tried to live a consistent life in the Master's service. If we want other sources of consolation let us think how much better off he is. He is no longer subject to temptation or trials.

"There are blessed messages that come to us from our friends who have passed over the line. How patient they were in suffering and how glad they were to go to their Maker. We look expectantly forward to that morning when we shall meet the loved ones that have gone before us and who waits anxiously for our coming. Then we shall hear our Saviour say come up higher."

When the speaker had concluded his remarks all present were given an opportunity to look for the last time on the form of one who had fought his last battle and had answered the call of his Captain.

Two beautiful floral tributes rested on the casket. One was an anchor from Post No. 73, of which the departed was a member, and the other was a wreath from the Woman's Relief Corps. These flowers, together with an American flag, were beautifully arranged about the casket.

At the grave, members of the Post took charge of the service, which was according to the ritual of the order, and it was very impressively rendered.

Those who composed the firing squad were H. C. Drake, John Emmons, I. Compton, Wm. Stites, Wm. C. Hand, Wm. R. Moore, A. King, A. Sargent, J. Beglin, J. Lewis, and those who served as pall bearers were E. Van Court, M. C. Dobbins, W. W. Coriell, R. Milligan and Robert Walker. All of the above were from Post No. 73, G. A. R.

Interment was in the Plainfield avenue cemetery.

MORTGAGE WIPED OUT.

The Relief Association Now Entirely Clear of Debt.

The Relief Association takes great pleasure in announcing that the mortgage, which has rested on its buildings for the past year, has been entirely payed off. Several smaller subscriptions have been made within the past few days in addition to the one most generous contribution of $500 which was received from a lady who has been interested in the association since its formation. The officers and board of managers wish to offer their sincere thanks to all the kind friends who have relieved them of this heavy burden.

Received a Gold Watch

There wasn't standing room at the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church last week, when an excellent musical and literary entertainment was given. The star of the evening was Theodore Drury, of Newark, who sang several solos. Fred White recited "Sheridan's Ride," and Miss Bertha Groves, a talented vocalist, gave several of her best selections, and bass solos were given by John Taylor, who captured the audience completely as did also the selections by the quartette composed of John Taylor, Oscar Green, William Wilson and Watson Randolph. Israel Jones, who sold 136 tickets for the entertainment, was presented with a handsome gold watch and Theodore Hooper received a gold ring for selling 100 tickets.

STORY OF A CORNER LOT.

HART MAY FIND TROUBLE IN BUILDING ON HIS PROPERTY.

Edward Vail Claims to Have a Deed For a Corner Lot on Elmwood Place and Intends to Enforce All of Its Provisions.

The indications that Lemuel E. Hart, of West Front street, intends to erect two or three houses on the rear of his property has brought out some interesting facts which may block his plans of operation.

Several years ago a street was marked out to run from Elmwood place to Plainfield avenue, about midway in the block, and for years there was a vast strip of unoccupied property on Elmwood place which could neither be bought or sold because the owners, husband and wife, would not sign off. Sometime later one or two real estate investors managed to get hold of the desirable land, and they erected two houses which enhanced the value of the property. Before one of the houses was completed it was purchased by Edward Vail, and in securing the property he was very particular to find out that his deed called for a corner lot, and it was so stipulated in the contract.

In the meantime Mr. Hart purchased a lot on the other side of Mr. Vail from Rev. Mr. Howlett, of Philadelphia, and on this lot he erected a small house, presumably for the purpose that when he got ready to build in the rear of his Front street property, which would be directly back of the lot on Elmwood place, he could open up a passageway for his houses in the rear. But here is where the obstacle appears, for Mr. Vail will declare himself and show that he has a corner lot. This will necessitate that Mr. Hart move his house on Elmwood place to the other side of his lot which he has left vacant for the above mentioned purpose.

This does not seem to end all the trouble, for it is said that the deed to the property on the other side of Mr. Hart's lot also calls for a corner lot. If this is true, the little house in the center will find itself in close quarters with barely enough room to stand on.

It is said that both Mr. Vail and Mr. Howlett will demand their rights in case Mr. Hart makes the intended move.

Mr. Hart's house on Elmwood place is now occupied by Amos Gray, and it is said that when the latter took the house he was informed of Mr. Hart's intention and that he was told that a board fence was likely to be built along side of the house shutting him off from the passageway. The fence does not like very much.

The chances are that Mr. Hart will have to look elsewhere for an opening. If his plan was carried out it would be a great source of revenue. On the other hand if the street is opened up, as originally provided for it, would make quite an improvement to the property.

It is understood that the interested parties against the closing of the street have sought legal advice and that they have been told to maintain their rights. The outcome of the affair will be watched with considerable interest y many in that vicinity.

TROLLEY TALK ON ALL SIDES.

ROAD FROM SOMERVILLE ASSURED.

New Company Backed by Men of Wealth and Practical Experience.

There is again evidences that the trolley road is to invade the territory around Somerville. The Central Traction Company, which received the franchise to build the road, has sold out to the Bentley Construction Company, composed of Philadelphia capitalists. A representative of the new company told the Somerville Unionist-Gazette the other day that the road from Raritan to New Brunswick would be built just as soon the weather would permit. The next track laid will be from Bound Brook to Dunellen. They will also build a line in Fanwood so that there will be a trolley line right through to Fanwood. The time, he says, will not be very much slower than the steam cars and the price much less.

An application was made to the Somerset Board of Freeholders, last week, for permission to build an abutment south of the Peter's brook bridge and to cross the bridge at Bound Brook. The application was referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Lutkins, Schomp, Van Cleef and Logan with power to act. The Bound Brook Council also have been asked for certain grants.

The new company is said to have plenty of capital and the managers are said to be practical railroad men

UNDERGROUND WIRES.

THE N. Y. & N. J. TELEPHONE COMPANY WILLING TO DO THE WORK.

They Have Prepared an Ordinance to That Effect to be Introduced Into the Council—Will Put City Wires in Conduit Free.

The question of doing away with the overhead wires in the business section of this city by placing them in subways, which was originally mentioned in The Press some months ago, is again attracting the attention of the city fathers and the ordinance requiring the putting of all wires underground is likely to come before the Council very shortly.

Most of the wires and cables that are now stretched along the streets of Plainfield are the property of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company and the proposed ordinance would affect that corporation more than any other. So far is that the company has decided to "take the bull by the horns" and has had a copy of an ordinance drawn up that meets with the approval of the officers of the company and contains the provision which they would be willing to agree to in regard to the matter. The draft of the suggested ordinance was drawn up by a lawyer in the employ of the company and will be presented to the Council, through Mayor Fisk, by Manager Charles W. Runyon, of this city.

The ordinance provides that the company shall place all their wires and cables that are now carried on the poles in the business portion of the city, into underground conduits or subways. This part of the work shall be done this year, and in the following years the company shall gradually place all their wires, except in the unsettled outskirts of the city, into the underground ways.

The company will also provide room in the conduits or subways for the wires of the fire-alarm system of the city, and leave room for other wires of the city, probably those of the proposed police call system, should it be adopted. This work shall be done at the expense of the company and the city will not have to pay any of the burden. If the city should so decide, the company will be willing to take in other wires at a suitable charge for the rental of the space in the conduit. There is no profit in renting wires in the conduit, however, and the company is not anxious for it.

While the company is not at all anxious to go to the expense of putting all their wires below ground, they are willing to do it and their willingness is expressed by the proposed ordinance which they have just submitted.

The portion of the city which would probably be equipped with sub-ways the first year is as follows:

The only exception to allowing all wires in the sub way would be that the electric light wires would not be allowed there for fear that the current may escape and play havoc generally.

The company is very anxious that, if the city is going to do anything in the matter, it should be done at once, so that they can have time to make their arrangements and have the work done at once.

The plan seems to find general favor except that there is a disinclination to tear up the streets again after they have been put in such good condition.

The company has not yet decided what system they would use but are figuring on several and they would probably agree to some way that would answer the requirements of the Council.

A JOLLY SURPRISE.

Randolph Runyon Receives an Unexpected Visit From Friends.

A very jolly surprise was tendered Randolph Runyon, the undertaker, of Somerset street, last week, by his friends. The surprised was wholly unaware of the intended visit and he was speechless for a time. The evening was passed in playing progressive whist, and refreshments were served about midnight. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Runyon, Walter G. Runyon and son, Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Giles, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Giddis, Mr. and Mrs. Tinsman, Messrs. Tinsman, Miss S. Louise Giles, of Dunellen; Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Harris and son, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph, Harry Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. Ayers, Mrs. Apgar, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Apgar.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

In Justice Newcorn's court the two cases of Slape against the Plainfield Street Railway Company have been adjourned for one week, also the case of Smith against Hall. The case of Coddington against Burke has been adjourned for thirty days.

LOVED AND WEDDED TWICE

WM. PRYOR'S SECOND PLUNGE INTO THE MATRIMONIAL SEA.

His First Cruise Was Beset With the Trials of Marrying Another Man's Wife—Now He Finds Happiness Again.

When Cupid gets in his fine work everything else sinks into oblivion and the cold and heartless world has no attractions for the two hearts that beat as one.

Thus it was with Wm. Pryor, of West Third street, and Miss Ella Stevens, his housekeeper. They have been associated for some time and William thought it was about time that the two hearts were made as one. Last Thursday was the time set for tying of the matrimonial knot and the hour was 9 o'clock. Everything was in waiting and the guests had been invited.

Previous to the appointed hour the groom called on Rev. Mr. Groves, pastor of the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church, and asked him if he would perform the ceremony. The reverend begged to be excused, for reasons he did not like to mention. The groom was not going to be discouraged by this failure, so he sought Rev. Mr. Johnson, pastor of the Fillmore Avenue Baptist church, and after explaining the circumstances the latter agreed to officiate.

In the meantime the guests had assembled and were waiting for the return of the groom and the minister, which was close to the scheduled time.

Those on the outside who had failed to get an invitation to the wedding shook their heads and said that the affair would not come off. This announcement startled some who wanted to know the reason. It was then whispered that the groom was a married man, having joined the benedicts several years ago, and could not legally be married again. No one appeared to offer objections to the union and the ceremony was performed in the presence of about 70 guests.

Nathan Pollard and William Fisher served in the capacity of best men. The wedding passed off without a hitch of any kind and the festivities came to an end about 12 o'clock.

Friday morning a Press reporter called on the groom to make inquiries concerning the reports regarding his previous marriage.

An expression of merriment appeared on his countenance, when he replied: "Well, sah, dar is some peoples dat's been tryin' to make trouble for dis yere coon and dey can't do it. 'Bout five year 'go, sah, I'se mar'ed a woman who fooled me by sayin' dat her husban' was dead. After I gets mar'ed, sah, she done tells me dat her husban' was libin in de souf. We didn't live togeder long foh she left town. De deacon dat mar'ed us gave no outifcawte so de marrwage don't count. There war no witnesses and she don't want to boher dis honey, I'se tell you right yere. I'se could'n help bein' fooled, but if she done comes 'round there's g'wine to be truble."

All the time the happy groom was talking his face beamed with joy over the event of the evening, and with a broad expression of southern dialect he told how he had fooled 'em.

The couple received many handsome presents, and from all appearances they will live in supreme bliss and happiness

YOUNG MAN AT THE HELM.

A. O. H PRESIDENT P. CASEY RETIRES.

Had Filled the Office With Credit For Twenty-Five Years.

The recently elected officers in the A. O. H. were installed last week at Amphion Hall on West Second street with great pomp, and many of the members of the Plainfield lodge, as well as a number of visitors from Elizabeth, Westfield and Newark, were in attendance. The officers were installed by County President Canty and State President Waldron, who performed the ceremony with great impressiveness. The officers installed were as follows: President, Edward Burningham; vice-president, Edward Ryan; recording secretary, William McCarthy; financial secretary, P. J. McDonough; treasurer, Michael Nugent; sergeant at-arms, William Casey.

After the installation all those present sat down to a banquet. There were 125 that were seated around the table, and after the inner man had been satisfied, speeches and recitations by the different members followed. It was the close of the term of Patrick Casey as president, after serving faithfully for many years, and the members united in thanking him for his services in the past, and wishing him success in the future. His resignation was caused by the fact that he wanted to give the younger members a chance, and he responded to the thanks of his fellow members with a neat little speech.

—Mrs. Brower, of East Fifth street, has leased for a term of years one of the new houses just finished by the Moore estate on East Sixth street between Watchung avenue and Washington street, and will occupy it on or about the first of March.

POTTERS BOWLED FIERCE

AND DEFEATED THE SCOTT TEAM BY 200 POINTS.

That Games Was the Deciding One and Was Doubly Interesting on Account of Each Team Having Had a Victory.

The Potter and Scott Press work teams again contested for honors and big scores on the Ulrich alleys on East Second street last Friday, and as usual a large number of "rooters" were present for each side. The game was unusually interesting from the start, but the Potter team seem to have come to the front early in the game and made a rapid stride toward until at the end there was a difference of just 200 points in their favor. The contest was all the more exciting from the fact that each team had previously won a game, and this was the deciding one in the series. Following is the individual scores:

CAUGHT IN CUPID'S WEB

A PLAINFIELDER TAKES A PHILLIPSBURG BELLE FOR HIS WIFE.

Frank Jones and Miss Anna H. Slater Married at the Home of the Bride Last Monday—Reception at Groom's Home.

A pretty wedding took place at Phillipsburg Monday afternoon of last week, when Miss Anna H. Slater, daughter of Whitfield Slater, of that place, was united in marriage to Frank Jones, of Chatham street, North Plainfield.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Thomas Hall, pastor of the Methodist church of Phillipsburg. The bridemaid was Miss Rosetta Nixon, of the latter place, and the best man was Thomas A. Randall, of Easton.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones left Phillipsburg on the 4 o'clock afternoon train, and on their arrival in this city, they were given a reception at the groom's home on Chatham street, by a few of their relatives and intimate friends.

The happy couple have taken up their residence at No. 146 East Fifth street. The groom is a valued employe at the Walter Scott Printing Machine Works.

POSSIBLE YALE CHAMPIONS.

PLAINFIELDER'S IN ATHLETIC WORK.

McGee for the Rowing Crew and McCutchen for the Bicycle Squad.

Plainfield is unusually well represented in the athletic world at Yale University this year. Two of her sons, Raymond A. McGee and William M. McCutchen, have been called out to try for the freshmah crew and McGee is considered almost sure of a place on it. McCutchen is doing well but he is pretty light for the position while McGee has all the necessary weight, combined with a very powerful physical system. McCutchen is also out training with the bicycle squad and is about assured of a position on it as he is considered one of the fastest riders in the college. The training for the crew now consists of work on the tank in the gymnasium but as soon as the work progresses far enough, the candidates will be trained on the river and then the list of applicants for positions on the crew will be greatly cut down.

KNOCKED OUT MIDST FRIENDS.

A Cocking Main in Which Somerville Birds Lost the Battle.

Another one of those "spark easy" affairs, known to the sporting fraternity as a cock fight, took place in an isolated barn near Warrenville, last week. The authorities in some of the remote parts of Somerset county put their fowls to roost early these short days and then go to roost themselves. Such was the case Wednesday night when the main took place, and Plainfield and Somerville birds competed for honors for themselves and boodle for their owners. The main was all one-sided, however, for in the first round the Somerville bird was sent to the wall as though struck by a western cyclone and the second one put on more vim than John Harkins used to when it was "struck out" by the Plainfield fowl and started to run for home.

At the beginning some bets were made, but later on no takers could be found against Plainfield.

No Entertainments.

The Young Ladies' Missionary society of the First Baptist church has decided that they will not conduct any entertainments for one year, but instead they will raise money in other ways. At present the members are making useful articles for their city mission work which is being carried on so successfully by Miss Shinn, of the church.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of Watson chapel have shipped three barrels of useful articles to missionaries in the far west.

OPENED LETTERS NOT HIS

NOT DONE INTENTIONALLY, BUT HE WAS ARRESTED JUST THE SAME.

Meyer Leichtentritt Charged With Tampering With the U. S. Mails—He Seems to Innocent of Intent of the Wrong

Tampering with the United States mail was the charge on the United States warrant which brought U. S. Marshall Haggerty to this city on Saturday afternoon. The resident of Plainfield against whom this serious charge was made was Meyer Leichtentritt, manager for L. Sternberg & Co., whose outfitting establishment is located on West Front street over the Central Market. The complainant is Louis Sherman, of the Sherman Outfitting Company, of Newark.

For about four years Mr. Leichentritt was the Plainfield manager for the Sherman Outfitting Company. He first went with the company when they came to Plainfield and remained with them as long as they remained in this city; after that he went with the rival concern, L. Sternberg & Co. Mr. Leichentritt has a large correspondence in his present position and he has many letters to look over every day. About two weeks ago he opened a letter, not noticing the address, and found enclosed a $1 bill, with a note from a man in Summit, saying that it was on account. On examining his accounts, Mr. Leichentritt found that there was no such man on their books. He then looked at the envelope and found it addressed to the Sherman Outfitting Company. As it is his custom to visit Newark on every Tuesday, he planned to call at the office of the company by which he was formerly employed but on that date he claims that it entirely slipped his mind. About a week ago he received another letter to the Sherman Outfitting Company which he opened without glancing at the address. Within was found another remittance from some other man in Westerly, R.I.

Then he sat down and wrote a personal letter to Mr. Sherman explaining the circumstances and enclosing the two letters and their contents. He asked Mr. Sherman to acknowledge the receipt of it.

The next he heard regarding the matter was when the United States officer arrived on Saturday afternoon and took him in custody. He was taken before Commissioner Whitehead at Newark. He pleaded not guilty and was held in $300 bail to appear for trial on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Commissioner's office at Newark. He has retained ex-Judge Terry, of Newark, as his lawyer in the case.

Mr. Liechtentritt was seen by a Press reporter, Monday a. m. regarding the matter and he told the story as given above. He said that he thought that the arrest was caused merely out of spite, because he was now in the employ of a rival concern. He did not, he said, commit any crime that he knew of, although possibly he should have turned the opened mail over to the postal authorities at once instead of sending it personally to Mr. Sherman. If that was the case, then it was from ignorance that he had broken the law and not in an effort to defraud his old employers. He did not think that Mr. Sherman believed he did it with any criminal intent, but had made the complaint purely from spite.

EIGHT, AND WAS A HOST.

George M. Rittenhouse, Jr., Entertained His Young Friends.

George M. Rittenhouse, Jr., celebrated his eighth birthday Friday afternoon by entertaining a number of his young friends at his home on East Sixth street. He was assisted in receiving his guests by his sister, Miss Frances. Most of the afternoon was spent in playing games, after which supper was served to the children.

Master George received a number of remembrances from his little friends. The youthful guests were Herman and Harold Mills, Florence and David Smalley, Tillie and Louis Mulford, Ethel Marguerite and Anna Vanzandt, Charlotte, Rosalie and Henry Moore, and Lawrence and Donald Bromfield.

The Trolley to the Mountain.

Nothing of any importance was done at the meeting of those interested in the extension of the trolley to Washingtonville, which was held Saturday evening at the schoolhouse. There were about thirty people present and Robert Clark, Jr., presided. The people are desirous that the company make a slight concession and John H. French was appointed a committee of one to report the matter to the company. If the latter agree to grant the concession, the work of building the road will probably be commenced at an early date.

Prayer and Praise Service.

The Central Council, International Order, King's Daughters, invite all members of the order to unite in a three days prayer and praise service to be held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons and evenings of this week in the Madison Avenue M. E. church, New York city. A large delegation from this city will probably attend the meetings.

RODE OFF ON THE BOOTY

THIEVES EFFECT AN ENTRANCE INTO THE ELDRIDGE BICYCLE STORE.

Stole a '97 Model Columbia—Used a Skeleton Key—Also an Attempt Was Made to Enter Elmer Runyon's House.

A gang of burglars began work in this city on Saturday night and made two attempts to enter buildings and in one case they were successful. In the other, they were discovered while attempting to gain entrance and were frightened away before they accomplished their object.

At about 1 o'clock Sunday morning, Elmer E. Runyon, of 608 Madison avenue, was awakened from his slumbers by a noise at the side of his house. He looked out and saw several shadowy forms standing near the window. He notified the police by telephone but when they arrived the burglars had skipped. Further investigation revealed the fact that the putty had been dug away from around one window pane and the glass was already to be removed had not Mr. Runyon disturbed the midnight visitors in the midst of their operations.

The other attempt was more successful. It was made on the salesrooms of the Eldridge Bicycle Company at the corner of Park avenue and East Fourth street. Sometime during the night the unbidden guests came to the side door of the establishment, which is on East Fourth street, and pushed out the key that was on the inside and then, by the use of a skeleton key, gained entrance to the ground floor. The rooms were filled with the samples of the '97 Columbia wheels and some of the older models. The thieves were very careful to take the best, however, and carefully removed the new Columbia wheel, '97 model, from the front of the store and departed with it.

William H. Miller, night clerk at the Hotel Grenada, resides in the flat above the store. He arrived home about 3.30 o'clock and had just dozed off when a crash, sounding from the lower story, awakened him with a start. He sprang to his feet and listened, but although he waited for some time he heard no other noise and finally returned to his bed and went to sleep. It is supposed that the noise he heard was made by the men who were trying to carry out the wheel or were just forcing an entrance.

The case was reported to the police yesterday morning by Manager W. L. Price, who made the discovery that the store had been entered and that the wheel was missing, but so far no trace of the thieves has been secured. The police are inclined to believe that the burglary was committed by someone who was pretty well acquainted with the place. The police are working on the case.

GUN CLUB ELECTION.

Officers Who Will Run This Ambitious Society For a Year.

The annual meeting of the Dunellen Gun Club was held last week in the club room and the following officers were elected for the year: W. J. Nelson, president; Adam Dealaman, vice-president; A. F. Warden, secretary; W. H. Carmon, treasurer; A. N. Randolph, field captain; board of directors, W. J. Nelson, Adam Dealaman, A. F. Warden, W. H. Carmon, A. N. Randolph, J. G. Lindzey, Frank Van Nuis, C. Giles, Peter Osborn and Alvah Gray. The club is one of the best in the State for a young club of only two years and has got all the latest traps and improvements. The above club is arranging for a live bird shoot open for all and the date will be published later.

HIS CLOTHES WENT UP IN SMOKE.

William Tracy a Sufferer by Fire at Yale College.

William Tracy, of West Eight street, who is now attending Yale University at New Haven, met with a serious misfortune, Thursday. As he came from one of the recitations, he was met by his classmate from this city, William M. McCutchen, and told that his room at his boarding house had just been burned out and he had lost everything except the clothes on his back. The fire had started in his room, how it started is not known and had spread through the house, doing about $2,000 worth of damage before it was extinguished. Tracy managed to borrow enough from his friends to fit himself out until he could hear from home.

WANTED TO BE GAY.

A Trio of Drunks Who Made the Night Hideous.

Patrolman Myers and Special Rockafellow arrested three men last Sunday for being drunk and disorderly. They were wandering up and down West Front street singing songs that were not exactly of the Moodey and Sankey style. They were locked up for the night to recover from the effects of their little spree.

From the testimony given, the Judge thought that Hall was guilty and, as it was his second offence of the kind, fined him him $10. It was Snyder's second offence and he was fined $8. Jackson had never been there before and he got off with a fine of $5.

THE SACRIFICE OF SELF.

Men Can Not Cover Their Sins With Money, Pomp and Show.

DR. RICHARDS ADVICE TO CHRISTIANS.

The Confession of Sin and the Sorrow for It is What God Wants as a Sacrifice—Christian Life is Broad, But it is Not Quite Deep Enough, He Says.

The union service held in the First Baptist church, last Friday, was a fitting close to the series of meetings which have been continued throughout the week. Considering the weather, the attendance was excellent and there was a deep spirit of devotion.

Previous to the regular meeting, the Christian Endeavorers held their service in the Sunday-school room of the church. L. H. Biglow, Jr., led the meeting, which was a thoroughly interesting one.

The service in the main part of the church was preceded by the singing of several hymns under the direction of F. H. Andrews. Drs. Yerkes and Barnes then offered short prayers after which Dr. W. R. Richards took charge and preached the sermon from the sixteenth verse of the fifty-first Psalm which reads: "For Thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it; Thou delightest not in burnt offering." The Doctor then spoke in part as follows:

"This Psalm of David was written after the author had committed his great sin. It is strange that anything so beautiful should come out of sin, but it is really a choice bit of Scripture. David was hiding iniquity in his heart against all but God, but he was brought face to face with his own iniquity. You cannot read this Psalm unless you take it in the first person singular.

"One year ago, when revival meetings were being held, one person remarked that the services accomplished some good for they were profitable for the ministers. That was so, but how about the person that made the remark? If we are thinking of others we may never reach the desired goal. David said it is not sacrifice that is desired, but where did David learn that? Had he read the book of Moses? With sacrifice, the blood had always flowed and the smoke had always risen from the altar, yet David presumed to say that sort of thing was not needed. He held that the sacrifice of a goat would not answer for the committing of a crime, and if our sins are ever brought home to us the same as they were to David we shall understand the force of that argument.

"Men try to cover their sins with money, pomp and show, but it is a plainly told truth that God wishes no such sacrifice. God offered the only sacrifice and that we must accept.

"If David had seen the sacrifices that God had provided, what sort of a hymn would he have given us, as compared with the beautiful Psalm we have read tonight?

"A thank offering is the sacrifice that God approves, and a broken and contrite heart He will not despise. The confession of sin and the sorrow for it, is what you see in Paul and Peter. There hearts were broken and they recognized the great law.

"The Christian life of our day is broad and covers a great deal of ground, but it is not quite as deep as it should be.

"Our time is taken up a great deal with what is going on in the world. The newspapers are full of it. It is either the cruelties of the Turk or the troubles of the saloon-keeper. We should leave the newspaper, with all its gossip outside, and devote more time to God. While David was separated from God he had no time to teach transgressors the way. If I ever allow myself to become entangled with the world, Lord deliver me from blood—guiltiness.

"There are sins near enough at hand if we can only see them, and that is what we are praying for, that God may help us to teach transgressors the way."

When Dr. Richardson had concluded his remarks, E. E. Anthony offered a prayer, which was followed with a few remarks by Dr. Yerkes. A few minutes was then devoted to prayer and testimony, after which Dr. Yerkes announced that it had been decided to continue the meetings another week and due notice would be given in the newspapers of the city. The singing of a hymn and the pronouncing of the benediction by Dr. Yerkes brought the meeting to a close.

Pay Your Taxes.

Borough Tax Collector H. N. Spencer gives notice in The Daily Press today that all taxes remaining unpaid January 31st, will be recorded with the county clerk at Somerville, and will be published. It is well to remember that taxes are considered as first lien to the property.

Church Trustees to be Elected.

A meeting of the congregation of the Crescent avenue will be held this Monday to elect seven trustees and transact such other business as may come before them. The meeting will begin at 8 o'clock.

J. L. EDSALL SELLS OUT

Commercial Palace Bought by a Morristown Firm

TO TAKE POSSESSION MARCH 15TH.

Woodhull and Martin, the Buyers, Conduct a Large Store in Morristown and Are Well-Known in the Dry Goods Trade—Mr. Edsall to Enjoy a Vacation.

One of the largest, if not the largest, purely commercial changes that has ever taken place in this city was consummated Thursday when legal papers was signed by J. Linn Edsall for the transfer of Edsall's Commercial Palace, in the Babcock building, to Messrs. Woodhull & Martin, of Morristown. Possession will be given March 15th. The new firm owns a large and prosperous dry goods business in Morristown that is conducted on about the same lines as the Commercial Palace, and are classed as among the most substantial and up-to-date merchants in the New Jersey dry goods trade.

It was known to Mr. Edsall that these gentlemen were desirous of acquiring possession of his business when he inspected the store two years ago, but yesterday was the first time that they had come to the practical point of making an offer for it. The offer was such a satisfactory one to Mr. Edsall, that his father, Seeley Edsall, who founded the business, advised that it be accepted. For the past six months J. Linn Edsall's health has been very poor and the elder Mr. Edsall felt that his son's constitution was not strong enough to stand the strain of close attention to such a large business much longer, and he did not care to again assume the business himself. Mr. Edsall will take a much needed vacation for a few months before again entering into active business life.

Seeley Edsall began his mercantile career as a clerk in a Newark dry goods house. After remaining there for some time, he went into the wholesale notion business with a Mr. Price, of Newark, and they conducted a store on Market street, Newark. In about 1873 they bought out James E. White, of Plainfield, and opened a dry goods and notion store in the building on East Front street, now occupied by Moore's butcher shop. They remained together for about seven years and then dissolved partnership, Mr. Price taking the Newark wholesale store and Mr. Edsall the Plainfield establishment. They had in the meantime moved up to West Front street to the store now occupied by Edward White and remained there two years before separating. Then Mr. Edsall conducted the business in that store until three years ago when he moved to his present quarters in the Babcock building.

Last summer Mr. Edsall disposed of the business to his son, the present proprietor.

TWILIGHT COUNCIL'S SOCKER

Scotch Plains Juniors Have a Jolly Good Time.

The smoker and second anniversary exercises of Twilight Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., at Scotch Plains, Friday, was a red letter night for that organization. The regular meeting of the order was held in short form and then the doors were thrown open to the visitors.

E. J. Phillips opened the meeting with an appropriate speech concerning the growth and prosperous condition of the order, stating that there were thirty-two members now on the membership rolls. State Warden Long was the first of the visiting speakers, and his remarks had mostly to do with the objects and benefits of the order. Mr. Lightfoot, of Milburn Council, mixed a little humor in his words and entertained the assemblage in a pleasant way. Brothers McMunty, of New Germantown, and Edwards, of Westfield, followed. W. H. Turton responded in behalf of Twilight Council and was greeted with applause all through his remarks. A banquet was served afterwards. The following Councils were represented: Success, of Milburn, 23 members; Central, of Westfield, 8; Franklin, of Plainfield, 6; Overlook, of Summit, 10, also Mt. Bethel and several other Councils.

HOBART'S GIFT TO RUTGERS.

Vice-President Elect Presents $50,000 to the College.

Garrett A. Hobart, Vice-President-elect of the United States, has given $50,000 to the trustees of Rutgers College to be used, in their discretion, for the best interests of that institution. The announcement was made to the students by President Scott. It was greeted with tumultuous applause and three cheers and a tiger for Mr. Hobart.

Officers Installed.

Deputy Grand Master VanDuzen, of Rahway, installed the officers elect of Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., last Thursday. The work was performed in a highly creditable manner by the state officer who complimented the members of the lodge for their excellent showing. There was one initiation and one proposition was received. In the good of the order refreshments were served, followed by a smoker.

BURIED AN UNKNOWN.

THE BODY FOUND ON THE TRACK AND NEVER IDENTIFIED.

Found Near Skillman—Had Evidently Been Killed by a Train—Held for Several Days But Was Not Identified

The body of a stranger was picked up near Skillman, Somerset county, on Tuesday evening, by the Blue Line train that reaches Bound Brook at 7:30. It was found lying along the track. The man undoubtedly had been struck by a train.

County Physician Wagoner was notified and after examining the body he ordered it placed in charge of Director DeMott with the idea of awaiting developments. The man's back, arms and left leg were broken. The only articles upon his body, aside from good clothing, were a Catholic prayer-book, 71 cents in money, an empty envelope, a clay pipe and a bag of tobacco.

In the prayer-book the name of "Annie Lyon, 532 Bank street," is inscribed in many places. The empty envelope is begrimed with coal dust and all that can be made out of the directions thereon is "West Jersey street, Elizabeth."

A special agent of the P. & R. worked on the case but failed to find relatives of the dead man, whose height was about 5 feet, 7 inches. He weighed in the neighborhood of 175 lbs. The body was buried yesterday at Somerville.

ALERTS OWN THEIR WAGON.

THE CITY WILL PROBABLY BUY IT.

Fire and Buildings Committee Recommend Such Action to the Council.

The fire and building committee of the City Council, together with the officers of Alert Hose Company, held a joint meeting, last Thursday, to discuss the proposed offer of the company to sell their hose wagon to the city. It has not been generally known that the wagon used by this company belonged to the city. It was purchased by them for about $475, with the understanding that if the city wanted to buy it they could do so.

After a thorough discussion of the matter, the committee decided to recommend to the Council the advisability of purchasing the wagon, provided both parties could agree as to the price to be paid.

Several years ago the company purchased a hose cart which was sold to Warren Engine Company in 1891, when Alerts bought the hose wagon which they now use. At that time the city was not in a position to buy a wagon for this company and decided to secure their own.

The officers present were not authorized to name any price and they will have to report to the company before doing so. No difficulty is anticipated in the price to be paid and it is quite likely that the city will buy the wagon.

A STREET MUST BE OPENED.

Further Developments Regarding the Intended Action of L. E. Hart.

Further developements regarding the intended action of L. E. Hart in the erection of two houses in the rear of his property on West Front street, but street, show that Charles Hand has sold his property to Edward Vail, has a contract, sealed and signed, with W. B. Codington, from whom he originally secured the property, that the proposed street from Elmwood place to Plainfield avenue, shall be opened. This practically settles the matter so far as that property being opened up by Mr. Hart as a private passage way to the houses which he may erect, and he will have to secure another opening.

Mr. Vail says that he will not allow Mr. Hart to carry out his proposed plans if he can prevent.

WILL HOLD 6,000 TONS OF ICE.

Immense Storage House for the Ice Company Just Finished.

The big ice-house of the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company at Washingtonville has been completed and is now ready for its store of ice to supply the homes of Plainfield. The building is a large one, being 150 feet long by 65 feet wide and 36 feet high. It will hold 6,000 tons of ice and is the largest in the neighborhood.

The ice on Wilson's pond, on the banks of which the ice house is built, is now frozen to the depth of eight inches, all good ice without snow, and the work of cutting it will begin this week. It will be stored in the new ice house.

An Evening at Cards.

A very delightful evening was spent at the home of Miss Sallie Gray by the members of the Washington Avenue Card Club, last Thursday, when she entertained the members of the club for their regular fortnightly game of progressive euchre. The game was unusually exciting and the first prizes were finally won by Miss Jessie Haynes and Fred Haynes, after settling several ties by cutting for it. The second prizes were won by Miss Sadie Barrett and Clarence Marlowe. After refreshments had been served the members enjoyed a little dance.

THE MYSTERY OF EVIL.

A Cultured Audience Hear Prof. John Fiske's Lecture.

WITHOUT GOOD WE'D NOT HAVE EVIL.

If We Had Never Known Anything but Good, Said Prof. Fiske, How Could we Distinguish Evil, for There Must be Contrast in Knowledge of All Things.

The audience that gathered at the Y. M. C. A. hall last Wednesday to hear Prof. John Fiske, of Cambridge, was a cultured one, and genuine appreciation was evident. The subject of the lecture was "The Mystery of Evil in the Light of the Doctrine of Evolution." The speaker has an august appearance and he was warmly received by the audience. He was introduced by Charles W. McCutchen who, on behalf of the Club of Current Events, under whose auspices these lectures are given, thanked all for the hearty support accorded.

A portion of the speaker's remarks follow:

"What I have to say concerning evil was suggested to me several years ago by the text found in Genesis which reads 'Your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil.'

"Too often has the cry come from the old world that there is no God. And it is said that if such a being does exist why does he permit pain and suffering, when the very meaning of God is love. Plato has said that the world is an imperfect realization of the divine idea, and that it is the best that could be made out of the material at hand. Some have had the idea that the creator of the world was an inferior imitation of God without sufficient force to shape it as it should be, while others have thought it was created by the devil.

"In recent times, fast ceasing to be recent, these views are passing away. The advance of modern science has brought about a belief in the all-wise and never-changing Father. In nature there is nothing out of place, and today we realize that whatever function there is, it is an indispensable function. If we had never known anything but good how would we distinguish the evil, or in other words how can we have good without evil?

"To have any knowledge of things in general there must be a contrast, however slight. This fact is deeply rooted and it is not superficial, but a fundamental truth. We are unconscious regarding the pressure of atmosphere until we reach the lofty heights. And so it must be with everything else, there must be a contrast that we may recognize the difference.

"It is a happy world that has sorrow and pain, good and evil, for it is a part and parcel of the universe. For strong men and women, the Garden of Eden would be a fool's paradise. We should strive to diminish suffering as much as possible, and sin should not be cherished. Morality comes forth when there is an alternative offered. Conscience keeps people from wrong doing and gives them a yearning for the highest attainments in life. Moral evil is characteristic of a lower plain of living, but its absence would mean stagnation. We recognize the difference between good and evil, but evil must be present. As man comes nearer to God evil disappears.

"The mystery of evil is a mystery still, and it belongs among the profound harmonies of God's creatures."

At the close of Prof. Fiske's lecture hearty applause was given, and many remained to personal meet the renowned speaker.

Through the efforts of the club, under whose auspices the lecture was given, the platform was arranged attractively for the occasion. The next lecture by Prof. Fiske will be given Thursday evening, January 21st, at the same place.

ARRANGED BY YOUNG FRIENDS.

Pleasant Surprise Party Given to Miss Annabella McAffee.

A very pleasant surprise party was given to Miss Annabella McAffee at her home on Berkman street last Thursday. It was gotten up by some of her young friends and was a complete surprise to her. The evening was spent in playing games, singing and recitations, interspersed with instrumental music.

Those present were the Misses Katie Ryan, Clara Weber, Alice Sharkey, Nellie Callahan, Lucy Jennings, Lillian and Florence Scribner, Katie Kelly, Annie Callahan, Katie Monroe, Alice McAffee, and Masters Walter Sharkey, John Callahan, Leonard Jennings, John Ryan, Henry Roche, Henry Kiederling, Joseph Roche, Chester Allen, Charles and Edward Montross, William and Harold Gloak, Daniel McAffee, Fred Wilbee and Raymond Scribner.

A Surprise in Store.

The members of Warren Engine Company are requested to appear at the engine house, Tuesday evening, February 2d, in full evening dress, at which time the newly-married members will have something to communicate to them. It is said that one member is somewhat puzzled to know just where he can get a suit.

NEWS OF THE SUBURBS.

THINGS THAT INTEREST SCOTCH PLAINS AND DUNELLEN.

Brief and Terse Observations Gathered by Alert Press Reporters to be Perused at the Supper Table at Your Leisure

DUNELLEN AND NEW MARKET.

Mrs. A. N. Randolph has returned from a visit with her sister, Mrs. J. B. Sprowl, at Jersey City.

Albert W. Heyser, formerly of Plainfield, and now of Brooklyn, is visiting the family of A. W. Warden.

A. A. Parker goes to Boston early next week to officiate as judge at the annual poultry exhibition there.

The skating continues good on the New Market pond, but it will not be so good after Thursday, when ice cutting will begin.

A. A. Parker sent by express yesterday to Mexico three of his choice game fowls. His birds have become so renowned for their fighting proclivities that they are wanted in Maceo's territory.

A runaway accident, which, fortunately, was not attended with any serious results, occurred on Prospect avenue yesterday afternoon. A Plainfield slater named Cose left his horse standing tied to a 14 foot plank, while he was doing some work about the new Fisher house. The animal took fright and dashed across a twenty-acre cornfield with the plank dangling at its heels. Coming to a fence on the opposite side of the lot the runaway stopped short and was captured.

The sociable, supper and dance given by the Young Ladies' Society of St. John's church in the new Town Hall, last evening, was the formal opening of the hall. Many people, old and young, were present, and gazed with admiration on the interior of the new structure. There was a hitch in the electric lighting apparatus somewhere along the line, and the building was in total darkness until some of the members took a hack and drove to the Greenbrook plant and secured an electrician. During this interval kerosene lamps were used, and aside from this little delay nothing happened to mar the pleasure of those present. The advance sale of tickets had alone more than paid for the entire enterprise, and the receipts at the door were correspondingly large. The object of the supper and dance was to obtain means for purchasing matting for the aisles of the church. The committee of arrangements, to whose untiring efforts is largely due the success of the undertaking, consisted of the Misses Anna and Lena Maier, Miss Mamie Heyl and Miss Lizzie Heyl.

SCOTCH PLAINS

Fred Clark and William Richardson drove to North Branch yesterday on business.

Miss Florence Wade was able to go out for the first time yesterday after her three weeks illness.

Miss Wahl, of Plainfield was taken suddenly ill while dressmaking for Mrs. William Lee yesterday and was obliged to go home.

An advance agent for a musical and literary entertainment was in town yesterday arranging for the affair which is to be held in the school hall on next Tuesday evening.

Andrew Love, Jr., is stopping at Blimm's Hotel for a few days, while he is making the collections for the James A. Baker estate. He may be engaged in the work for several days yet.

Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company met and elected the following officers on Monday evening: Foreman, W. H. Turton; assistant foreman, Louis Drexter; secretary, George L. Dunn; treasurer, William Lake.

J. Ackerman Coles, of Scotch Plains, who recently has presented to Newark valuable statuary, has just given to the Free Public Library of that city, a life size bust in finest canara marble of "Young Augustus," the exact counterpart of a bust of that title found at Ostia in 1808 and now exhibited in Rome, Italy.

WILLOW GROVE.

Miss Etta Lee is the guest of relatives in Newark.

Miss Little presided at the organ last Sunday in the absence of Miss Clark.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Clark have returned from a visit with Newark relatives.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society will hold a social in the chapel next Saturday afternoon.

Charles Lambert fell in the lake while skating last Saturday afternoon. Some friends who were with him rescued him before he was to far gone.

Miss Edith Darby is confined to her home by illness. She has been attending the State Normal school at Trenton, but was obliged to give up her studies for a time.

Last Saturday afternoon while Clarence Lambert was cutting ice by the lake his horse broke through the ice. After a good deal of hard work the men managed to get rails under the animal and thus float him to the shore.

playing the baby act and I will let you keep the desks if you will go in a room with me alone for half an hour."

Mr. Moore wanted to know what for, but he didn't accept the invitation.

After a while Roundsman Frederickson arrived and Mr. Moore ordered the officer to eject the lawyer. The latter refused to go and told the officer that he had a right there, and the latter—between two fires, a Judge on one side and a lawyer on the other—said he would consult Chief Grant first. The officer started out to do this and before he returned Mr. Hetfield left. It was then 6:30 o'clock. He had arrived there about 4 o'clock.

Judge Moore was still holding the fort.

Wednesday a.m. Mr. Moore said that he should commence proceedings against Lawyer Hetfield for assault and battery in pulling the tops of the desks down on his arms.

Mr. Hetfield could not be seen as he was in Elizabeth, his son said, on this very matter. Young Hetfield said that his father had secured the replevin papers and they had been served a long time ago. He says his father will either secure the desk or have Mr. Moore arrested.

The rest remains to be told.

When seen by the reporter this morning, Judge Moore said: "A very entertaining matinee."

WESTFIELD SOLONS TO MOVE

THEIR ACTION CAUSES SURPRISE.

W. W. Gilby Fitted Up Rooms Especially For Them a Year Ago.

Much interest has been aroused in Westfield by a resolution, passed at the last meeting of the Township Committee, notifying W. W. Gilby, the owner of the building in which the new town rooms are situated, that the Committee would not use the rooms after April 1st, at which time the present lease expires.

The present building was completed only last fall, and the plans were somewhat altered in order to provide quarters such as the Committee would require. This was done by the owner with a view to the permanent occupancy of the rooms by the Committee The impression has prevailed in the town that there was at least a tacit understanding between the Committee and Mr. Gilby; and hence the resolution of last Thursday was a genuine surprise.

At the last three meetings of the Committee the rooms have been so cold that overcoats had to be worn. The impression generally prevails that it was this condition of affairs which caused the committee's action.

THEATRICAL.

On Monday, January 25, Chauncey Olcott will begin his annual engagement at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York, presenting a new play, entitled "Sweet Inniscarra," written for him by his manager, Augustus Piton. The action of the play transpires at the village of Inniscarra, on the banks of the River Lee, about nine miles from the city of Cork. The time is 1812, during the war between England and the United States. The first act shows the historical Shamrock Inn at Inniscarra, with a view of the mail road between Cork and Dublin, and the distant country. The second act is a beautiful woodland scene. In the third act there are three scenes. The first shows again the Shamrock Inn. The second scene shows a road to the river. The third scene shows the River Lee. The fourth act is a Gothic apartment in the Castle of Inniscarra, the home of Squire O'Donoghue. There are twenty-four speaking parts in the play; also a number of peasants, fishermen, English sailors and the press gang, which latter plays an important part in the development of the play. Mr. Olcott has composed four new songs for the play.

A Distinguished Speaker.

R. S. Tharin, a gentleman of national and international celebrity as a writer, patriot and orator, has been engaged by Capt. J. M. Smith, of Indiana, to deliver a series of lectures, who announces that the distinguished speaker will deliver his great lecture on the "Crimes of Islam" in this city, at the Y. M. C. A. hall on Saturday, the 23d instant, at 8 o'clock. Tickets 25 cents; reserved seats 50 cents, to be had at the door and at Randolph's and Leggett's Pharmacies. The subject is a grand one and the truth will be told by one whose pen has already caused the Sultan to tremble on his throne. Our readers would do well to remember and embrace the opportunity to be both entertained and instructed by one who knows how to handle the Eastern question.

An Invitation to Ministers.

The ministers of the city were given an invitation to attend the installation services that were held at All Souls' church, Tuesday but none of them were present.

A House Quarantined.

Two children of Mr. Kyle on Watchung avenue, near Fourth street, are suffering with diptheria, and the house has been quarantined and placarded.

A PASTOR INSTALLED.

"Don't apologize for being a minister. If you do you cannot be a minister. The function of the ministry comprises the dignity of the physician, the judgment of the lawyer and business man. Comfort of your people, but don't sympathize with them on every occasion.

"When I think of some of the things that ministers bring into the pulpit I wonder that they are not paralyzed. Preach the Word direct and don't forget to use plenty of English."

The charge to the people was given by the Rev. W. I. Nichols, secretary of the Charities' Aid Society, of Brooklyn. A digest of his remarks follow:

"I speak as a member of the congregation and not as a preacher. Our motives are different from those of other churches, and every term has a far different meaning. The old motive was fear, but now it is love. Unless you are trying to advance the principles of this church it is not worth the while wasting your time. You owe it to the man you have called to stand and labor with you. Abhor all selfishness and stand for liberal religion. We shall not be a populous church, but we shall be a strong one. Stand by the man you have chosen. He will not be able to please you all, but he is a man you can afford to trust."

Following the above remark a hymn was sung by the congregation after which the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. A. C. Nickersen, the new pastor

During the service F. H. Hebard presided at the organ and Charles Lewis acted as precentor. The church was very prettily decorated with choice cut flowers and greens, and the effect was striking.

After the service nearly all remained to meet the new pastor personally and to get better acquainted with him.

FOR STEALING A CORN CROP

Matthew Ricker, a Well-To-Do Farmer, Accused of Taking it Ina Bag by Bag.

The Somerset County Court was crowded Tuesday by farmers from the mountain district of Chimney Rock, who had assembled to witness the trial of a farmer, Matthew Ricker, for stealing corn from the field of his neighbor, Peter Sebring.

Ricker is well to do and has heretofore been an influential man in the community. In driving to his home at night he passed Sebring's corn field, and it is alleged that he stopped by the wayside so often to pluck the corn from the field that Sebring's crop fairly melted away, and the latter put a watch on the field.

John Thompson, a farm hand, testified that he was watching the field by night, and on two occasions saw Ricker pull his team up and enter the field with a bag which he filled with ears of corn. The theft, he said, occurred last fall. Ricker, he said, robbed the field on the instalment plan, taking only one small bag of corn at a time. Ricker denied Thompson's statement. After deliberating several hours, the jury stood nine for conviction and three for acquittal, and were unable to agree. Ricker may be tried again.

A PLACE FOR CITY'S POOR

PROJECT TO HAVE THEM QUARTERED AT THE SEWER FARM.

A Prominent City Official Says That the Poor Can be Kept There to Great Advantage and at a Saving of $12,000 a Year

The greatest change that will be made by the city this year will be the removal of the city's poor from the present poor house on Terrill road to the Mountain View Farm, where the sewage disposal beds are located. While the subject has been mentioned before by The Press, there is a renewed interest in the matter as the time draws near then the matter will be taken before the Common Council.

A city official, who is well posted on the matter, gave a Press reporter some facts regarding the fitness of the city farm for the purpose. There is a house on the farm already that is capable of accommodating thirty people without inconvenience to any. By making a few alterations to the building, which can be done at a small expense, the capacity of the house can be enlarged to nearly forty persons.

Such of the poor as were able to work could be used to great advantage on the farm, while the products from it would, in a large measure, feed them.

The saving would therefore be considerable and the official puts it at about $2,000. This would be saved in rent of the present quarters and in the products of the farm as well as in the cost of labor saved on the farm.

How soon the change will be effected is not known, but it will probably not be until the arrival of the warm weather, as moving in the cold would be extremely unpleasant for all concerned. Then it will be necessary to see to the furnishing of the new quarters. This matter will have to come before the Council, and that is likely to be very soon. It was mentioned last evening at the Council in the report of last year's alms committee, and the necessary resolution will soon be introduced.

WRECK VICTIMS IMPROVING.

CLAPP AND BEHL DOING NICELY.

Dickerson, Who Died, Was to Have Enjoyed a Day Off Saturday.

Engineer Clapp, of the Royal Blue line, and Fireman Behl, of the P. & R. local train, who were in the terrible railroad accident at Skillman last Saturday evening, are improving nicely at the hospital, and their recovery is now almost assured Both men are conscious and their sufferings have been greatly reduced. Behl has not the slightest remembrance of the accident and is unable to tell anything about it. Clapp's memory of the calamity is more clear and every detail is indelibly impressed on his mind.

A singular coincident in connection with the sad affair is related by Mrs. Dickerson, wife of the late baggagemaster, who was on the local train. She says that her husband was to have had last Saturday off, but he changed his mind and decided to take a later day. This he did much against his wife's wishes who was particularly anxious that he should remain home that day. She said when she received three telegrams, closely following each other after the accident, she felt sure that her husband was injured much worse than the telegrams told her, and when she arrived in Plainfield she fully expected to learn that he was dead.

Engineer Clapp's wife is an invalid and is unable to come to Plainfield, but the daughter has been here to see her father. Mrs. Behl arrived soon after the accident and has remained at the hospital ever since.

TO CROSS JERSEY BY TROLLEYS.

Seeking Right of Way in Somerset and Middlesex.

A committee of directors and officers of the New York and Philadelphia Central Traction Company, headed by W. A. McAfee, of Philadelphia, met the Freeholders of Somerset and Middlesex counties at the Berkely Hotel, Bound Brook, Tuesday to discuss plans. The company wishes to build between Bound Brook and Somerville, thence to Princeton and Trenton. A spur is to cross the Raritan at Bound Brook and run to New Brunswick, on the south side of the river.

Application will be made at the next meeting of the Freeholders for rights of way for such sections of the line as will be in Somerset and Middlesex.

Marvelous Merchandising.

Seely Edsall says that he has been selling a general line of merchandise ever since he was eighteen years old; and in Newark and Plainfield from the time of just before the breaking out of our Civil War. With the exceptions of the war times when money was so very plentiful he says he has never experienced such marvelous merchandising as he has seen since last Saturday, the opening of the great retiring sale. He had no idea that it would arouse such a widespread interest in the dullest season of the whole year, and feels it is the highest compliment that could be bestowed upon him by the people in winding up his business here in Plainfield.

Death of Mrs. Charles Sears Baldwin.

The friends of Charles S. Baldwin will regret to learn of the death of his wife, Agnes Irwin, at their home in New Haven, last Thursday night. Her funeral services was held Saturday afternoon and the interment was in New Haven. Mr. Baldwin's boyhood and early school day were passed in Plainfield, his father, John S. Baldwin, being a resident here for a number of years. He is professor of English literature at Yale College at he present time.

Ladies Listen.

The ladies of Plainfield and vicinity will be pleased to learn that the celebrated Centemeri kid gloves are hereafter to be sold in this city, Messrs P. Centemeri & Co. having induced E. L. VanEmburgh & Son to become their Plainfield representatives, and they have supplied them with a full line of their gloves, at regular New York prices.

Death of Mrs. Martine.

Anna N. Martine, the wife of Rev. A. I. Martine, pastor of the Presbyterian church, at Dunellen, died at her home in Dunellen, Tuesday a. m. She was forty-one years of age, and was well-known in this city where she was often in close relationship with the people through the Local Christian Endeavor Union. The funeral services will be held in the Dunellen Presbyterian church on Friday afternoon at 2:54 o'clock. Interment at Flemington on Saturday.

Harold Bronnell was very pleasantly surprised at his home on West Second street, Monday by seven of the little friends from which he received presents. The event was his eleventh birthday. Those present were Louis Fisher, Howard Wagoner, Joseph Osgood, Malcolm Davies, Harry Blimm and Tom Demeza.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL XXX. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1897. NO. 4

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

HOW ICE IS HARVESTED.

EVERY MAN TO HIS TASK AND THEN IT IS DONE EASILY.

All the Handling is Done by Machinery and the Men Only Have to Know Just How to Settle a Cake at the Proper Time.

It is rather cold work to stand and watch the operation of ice-cutting but it is a very interesting one, never-the-less. While every body knows that it is cut somehow, the way in which it is done and the ice transfered to the ice-houses is known to but comparatively few. Plainfield has only one ice company that cuts its own ice in the city limits and that is the one of which John H. Tier is the proprietor. For a week he has been planning to start the work as the ice was of the required thickness, but warm weather, rain and snow have all taken their turn in preventing the operations from going forward until Tuesday when a large force of men were set to work on the pond.

Tier's pond is a body of water fed by Green brook, running from Bank place to Elm street, parallel to Front street. It is somewhat over an acre in extent. The ice houses are at the end of Bank place and are two in number.

A line is drawn on the ice at the start and along this line the ice plow is run. The ice plow consists of a sharp blade that cuts into the ice to the depth of four or five inches. The plow is pulled by a horse and guided by one of the men. Attached to one side is the marker, a rather dull blade that leaves a line on the ice to one side of the plow showing where the next path of the plow shall be. The pond was divided into cakes three feet long and two feet wide, by the use of the plow and marker. The cakes are not entirely separated from each other by the plow, the ice being cut only to the depth of four or five inches. After the entire pond had been divided into the cakes, those nearest the ice house are broken off from the rest by means of a four-pronged spade-like instrument called a fork-bar.

The ice houses are large shed-like structures without floors and a door that runs all the way up the side of the building, which is about sixty feet in height. This door is on the side toward the pond. The two ice houses are side by side and the door in the one nearest Front street opens into the other.

The hardest work is the transferring of the large cakes of ice from the pond where they are floating about to the ice house to be stored away for future use. The cakes average in weight from 200 pounds to 225 pounds, and are very hard to handle. They are conveyed up to the ice house by an endless chain that carries them up an inclined plane. There are openings in the inclined plane corresponding to the different runways that lead into the ice house.

Men, armed with ice poles, poles with sharp spikes on the end, are stationed about the portion of the pond in which the cakes have been separated from the rest with the use of the fork bar, and they push and direct the cakes toward the end of the scaffolding in which the endless chain runs. Here is stationed a man with another fork bar to separate any cakes that have been missed in the breaking up of the ice. Three men stand around the end of the scaffolding, and with the assistance of their ice poles, push the cakes into the path of the wooden cleats that are placed at regular intervals along the endless chain to carry the cakes up the inclined plane on the scaffolding.

Tuesday, the work of filling the ice houses had only just begun, and so the lowest of the runways into the ice houses were used, only three layers being laid. The cakes fell through the opening in the inclined plane, which can be closed when necessary, and then slid down the icy runway, which was inclined into the icehouse. Here the runway was continued into the other house, the ice cakes to be stored in the first house being taken off by the men there with their ice poles. The cakes come flying down the runway, and it requires considerable skill to stop them and draw them off at the right place.

The power used for the endless chain is furnished by a steam engine. The men employed by Mr. Tier are the same ones that he has had for years, and they thoroughly understand their business. The spade with which the cakes are poled from the end of the pond to the scaffolding, and then up the inclined plane and slide into the house, is quite remarkable, and everybody is kept hustling to do their share of the work.

The work will be continued for several days if the cold weather keeps up, and it is well worth a short visit to watch the operations of ice cutting and storing in the icehouses.

NOTING THE CITY ILLS.

TOWN IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION SUGGEST VARIOUS METHODS.

Littering Streets With Ashes, Store Sweepings and Papers is Complained Of—One Member Would Act Aggressive.

There was a good attendance of members at the meeting of the Town Improvement Association held Tuesday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. building. The president, Mrs. Pierre Mali, occupied the chair. The first business of importance considered was the ordering of 500 postal cards for the various committees of the association.

A member spoke of the objectionable features about the present ash carts in use in the city, and she wanted to recommend to the Council that they adopt some ordinance which would abate the nuisance. She was informed that the Council has under consideration at present an ordinance which will abolish the trouble. She did not think, however, that if such an ordinance was adopted it would be enforced unless the association attended to the matter, and she thought that an ash-carter should be brought to justice by the association when he was found to be violating the ordinance. She also spoke about the practice of people about town who persisted in sweeping the refuse from their store into the street. She had been informed by Chief Grant that if a person was detected doing that sort of thing they could be punished for it. She was willing to watch these violators, but wanted the association to stand behind her. She cited a case where one person had violated the rule three times, and if the association would stand by her she would see that this person was brought to justice. Another place spoken of as being bad in this respect was at the postoffice, where the janitor persisted in sweeping all the papers into the street, and she wanted to know if the association was expected to furnish the government with a basket in which they could place these papers, etc. In regard to the latter it was decided that the street committee should send a communication to Postmaster Hetfield asking him to see that the nuisance is stopped.

She also reported in the matter of street signs. She said that there were 684 streets and not one-third of them had suitable signs at the intersection of the streets. She recommended that signs made of copper and aluminum be suggested to the City Council and that they be asked to put the proper number of them where they are needed. It was thought the cost would be about $500, and one woman thought the association might do the work. Other members were of the opinion that the city should do it, and the suggestion was ordered sent from the committee to the Council.

At this time the members considered the changes recently made to the constitution. Among the most important changes made was one creating an advisory board to be composed of men who are to consult with the advisory board of women. The constitution was also amended so that meetings shall be held monthly unless otherwise agreed, and that the annual meeting shall be held in April.

Mrs. Kirkbali made a strong plea against the raising of the price of the annual dues. She thought that many would join at 50 cents where only a few would come in at $1. The members decided to leave the dues as they are at present.

It was decided to have 200 copies of the constitution printed. Mrs. Krom stated that she had been informed that they would cost from $5 to $7, but she thought that she could get them printed for less.

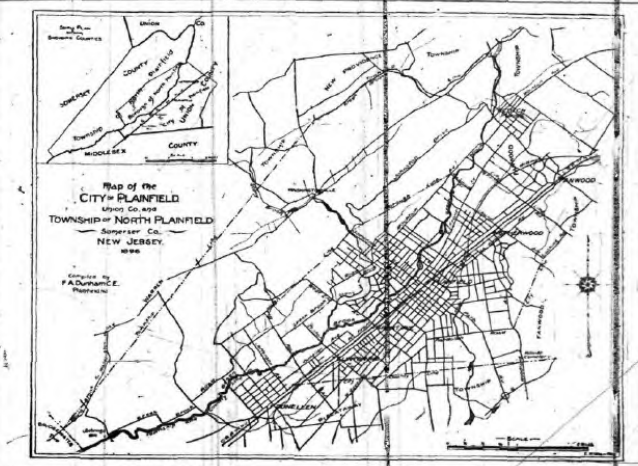
Mrs. Mali said that she would like to ask the Association for the sum of $50 to be used for the work of pulling the stumps out of the ground at the city park. She said that she spoke of the matter at present so that the members would be prepared to vote intelligently at the next meeting.

Regarding the recent request made to Mayor Fisk that he appoint two women as members of the Board of Health, it was stated by Mrs. Frost that her husband had informed her that according to the laws of this State a woman could not be appointed to membership on the Board of Health, and it would be necessary to have the laws changed.

It is the intention of the members to place at convenient points suitable wire baskets in which papers, litter, etc., can be put, and in this way help to remove the objectional matter which is usually found on the streets. A sample basket was at the rooms, yesterday afternoon, and all agreed that it was a most excellent thing.

An X-ray Machine in Town.

Dr. F. Wood, of Crescent avenue, received a very elaborate X-ray machine Tuesday which he will use in his surgical operations.



AGITATION TO BLOT OUT THE LOCAL CANADA.

AN ORGANIZED MOVEMENT TO ACCOMPLISH THE CONSOLIDATION OF CITY AND BOROUGH.

Meeting of Prominent Citizens Held in the Borough Last Night at Which the Preliminary Steps Were Taken for the Consummation of the Movement—Ex-Mayor Saunders Makes an Elaborate Argument in Favor of the Consolidation—The Names of Those Who Sanction the Consolidation.

A good deal of quiet work has been going on among borough citizens looking to a consolidation with the city, and Tuesday, in pursuance to the following call, a meeting was held at the home of L. B. Woolston, 30 Fairview avenue:

The undersigned citizens of North Plainfield favor the consolidation of city and borough and its union under one government. It is understood that a society is to be formed to effect this result and that questions of ways and means are to be decided by the united action of that society.

Newton B. Smalley, Samuel B. Woolston, James McGee, Frank C. Church, John P. Esmonde, Richard E. Cortell, A. F. Kenney, Walter F. Hamilton, John Valiant, Henry H. Wells, S. St. J. McCutchen, Benjamin M. Day, Henry H. Howell, H. E. Carell, Edwin S. Hooley, Walter M. McGee, Frank Cirtis, Samuel Townsend, G. T. Dodd, Jr., I. P. Northrop, George F. Dupee, James G. Peck, Martin J. Cooley, George T. Rogers, W. L. Saunders, Willis A. Holmes, W. O. Worth, Robert D. Miller, Elston M. French, H. E. Dodd, Jr., Henry A. McGee.

The meeting was organized by the election of L. B. Woolston as chairman and A. E. Kenney as secretary.

The chairman was authorized to appoint a committee of three to draw up a plan of permanent organization and call the next meeting.

After a preliminary discussion of the general plan of action, ex-Mayor Saunders addressed the meeting as follows:

"We have been taught by Jefferson that government is perhaps a necessary device, of which the more we have the worse we are off. Is it not true that in national, State and municipal affairs there is a tendency to expand the functions of government; to increase the offices and to make places; a tendency which inevitably leads to extravagance. We are suffering just now from an overdose of government at Washington. We, of New Jersey, have been patient and long suffering under legislative abuses at Trenton. In a speech recently delivered in Plainfield, Mr. Richard V. Lindabury declared that so many and conflicting laws had been passed by our legislature that nobody knows just where we stand.

"So, too, in our municipal affairs, we see the same inclination to too much government. Who is there who thinks that the peace, happiness and prosperity of the people of New York would suffer by the abolition of her Board of Aldermen? And to come down to things in our midst, who is there about us whose property would be less secure, whose person would be less free or less safe or whose happiness need be less complete with one government over the two Plainfields?

"A municipal government is necessary for the protection of property, for the maintenance of law and order, for the preservation of the rights of individuals and to promote the welfare of the community. In order to best effect these ends it is wise to adopt home rule, even though it necessitates keeping up the machinery of government in each settlement. It would obviously be unwise to say that one set of officers is sufficient to manage every town in the state. It would not do to consolidate Plainfield with Camden because the interests of the two communities are not identical. What might be good for Camden might not necessarily be good for Plainfield. It is only because these places are wide apart and have different interests that two governments are necessary. A community living on ships has obviously different interests from people on land, hence unity of government is not practicable. Home rule is the only excuse for our numerous governing bodies which are maintained at great public expense and where some good men waste much valuable time.

"To be extravagant in public affairs is an easier and a greater crime than to be extravagant in private affairs. It is always easier to spend other people's money than to spend our own. We more readily assent to the creation of a new office than to the addition of a new clerk in our business or another servant in our household. And yet does anyone deny that the same rules which govern the affairs of business apply the equal force to effect prosperity or ruin in national, state and municipal government! If economy is a wise policy in one it is as wise in the other. If it is a good thing to consolidate two shops which manufacture the same product; if it is a good thing to join under one head two department stores which sell the same goods and to the same people, then it should be a good thing to consolidate two cities which are joined together by nature and in which are people whose interests are identical. Home rule is not an argument against, but a reason for the union of Plainfield and North Plainfield. We are the same people, mingling one with the other in social, political and religious intercourse. We use the same streets and buy goods at the same stores; we belong to the same churches, lodges and societies; we contribute to the same charities. There is but one hospital, but one Childrens' Home, one Y. M. C. A., one boys club. We are one in interest, one in sympathy, one in fact, yet divided in government. So much for consolidation in the abstract, I will not dwell longer on this point because it appears plain that every intelligent citizen who is without prejudice will agree that the union of city and borough is a good thing provided it can be effected in an equitable manner.

"In looking at the practical questions involved the first and most important point in taxation. We may not, perhaps, agree with Alexander Hamilton that property is the basis of all government, yet it is only fair to admit the right of the freeholder to an active voice and influence in municipal questions—he pays the freight. Now, there seems to exist an impression that one of the difficulties in the path of consolidation is an inequality of taxation between city and borough. No such inequality exists. The nominal rates for the year 1896 are, Plainfield 2.30, North Plainfield 2.05. A tax rate is deceptive unless due consideration is given to valuation. We know that corporate bodies have at times juggled with tax rates, for political effect. In order to

HONORED THE PAST MASTER

ANCHOR LODGE PRESENTED A JEWEL TO C. C. Howard Receives a Token of Esteem From Brother Members.

A pleasant surprise was in store for those who attended the communication of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., last Tuesday, and the large attendance was most gratifying to those who had the affair in charge. The surprise was the presentation of an elegant Past Master's jewel to C. C. Howard, the last worthy retired officer of this lodge. The presentation speech was made by Rev. E. M. Rodman, the chaplain of the lodge, and it was a masterly effort. On behalf of the lodge he complimented Mr. Howard for the excellent service he had given the lodge, and hoped that he would not allow his interests to decrease. Mr. Howard responded in his usual happy manner, and he thanked the members for the honor bestowed. After this bit of pleasantry, the fellow craft degree was worked on one candidate, and a banquet was served under the very able management of Stewards, H. C. VanEnburgh and Clifford Pearson. While the latter was in progress several excellent speeches were made by the members.

Died in a Philadelphia Hospital.

Mrs. William Smalley, wife of the active member of the firm of L. D. Cook and Company, the leading lumber dealers in Bound Brook, died at the hospital in Philadelphia Tuesday as the result of an operation performed on her a short time before. Mrs. Smalley was well-known in Bound Brook and, as it was not known that her condition was serious, the news of her death was a great shock to the community. Mrs. Smalley was the daughter of L. D. Cook. She was well-known in this city also.

Social Side of the Church.

A special meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church was held Tuesday afternoon in Vincent chapel to make arrangements for a series of entertainments which will be given by the society this winter. The first will be a Martha Washington tea which will be held in the chapel on the evening of Friday, February 26. Two other entertainments will be held later in the season, one of which will be the tableaux, which were given in Vincent Chapel last fall by the young ladies of the church.

An Appetizing Event.

There is nothing more appetizing than a good turkey supper, if it is cooked and served right, and you will make no mistake if you attend the turkey supper to be given Thursday and Friday evenings in the parlors of Trinity Reformed church under the auspices of the Ladies' Christian Work Society. The proceeds will go toward purchasing a new carpet for the church. Excellent music will be furnished each evening, and the admission, including supper, will be 35 cents.

Peary Is Coming.

Lieutenant Peary, whose tales of adventure and explanations in his search for the North Pole have interested every American, has been secured to lecture in Music Hall, Thursday evening, February 25th. He will bring with him a hundred beautiful views of the land of perpetual ice, all of them taken by himself in his visits up there.

—The next legal holiday is Lincoln's Birthday, February 12th. It is a legal holiday in this State and New York State, but in very few of the other States.

PAID IN SPURIOUS COIN.

THEN JOHN PEDRO GAVE NINETY-FIVE CENTS IN GOOD MONEY.

In Looking Over Their Change Several Merchants Find That the Counterfeit Dollars Have Been Passed on Them.

The passing of counterfeit coin in this city, as has already been mentioned in the Daily Press, still continues and the man who is circulating the spurious coins remains undetected.

John Pedro, the colored bootblack in Brown and Hill's barber shop on North avenue, polished a man's shoes Tuesday afternoon and received a silver dollar, giving back ninety-five cents in change. After the man had gone John learned that the coin was valueless. It was the same as those that have already been put into circulation. It was an excellent imitation of silver dollar in appearance but it was entirely too light.

Pedro did not remember the man that gave him the coin and there was no other clue. It was possible that the man was not the real offender but had received the coin without any knowledge of the fact.

Several other dealers in the city have found the spurious dollars among their change but there is no clue so far to the identity of the one who is passing them.

VETERANS ARE NOT AT ODDS.

NO TRUTH IN THE NEWS' STORIES.

Everything is Harmonious and the Post Consolidation Will Come.

At a meeting of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., held last Tuesday terms for consolidation with the other Post were agreed upon, and they will be submitted to the latter for consideration. Regarding the recent articles published in another paper, the comrades are very indignant, and they are fully convinced as to who the author is. The person who is supposed to have something to do with them is opposed to a consolidation and will no doubt fight the scheme to the end. Such obstacles as were mentioned in the articles have not been considered by the comrades at all and will not be. The comrades feel sure that the matter is published to injure the scheme, and the majority of them do not countenance such attacks.

NOT KNOWN IN PLAINFIELD.

A Man Dies in New York Who Was Thought to Live in This City.

A well-dressed, elderly man started at noon, Tuesday, to go up the steps of the Parmley Building, No. 165 Broadway, New York. He had nearly reached the top of the marble flight when he reeled, cried out in alarm and fell backward. He was picked up unconscious and taken to the Hudson street Hospital. There were few papers in the pockets of the clothes. On some was the name Charles Adams, Plainfield, N. J., and on the other the name C. F. Adams.

The man revived long enough to say his name was Adams, and that he was a retired merchant, sixty-seven years old, married, and lived at Plainfield, N. J. Then he relapsed into unconsciousness, and at 7 o'clock he died.

The hospital authorities sent a telegram to "Mrs. Charles Adams, Plainfield, N. J."

There is a Charles R. Adams, mason, living at 139 Duer street, but no harm has come to him. The telegraph company was unable to find any such person in this city. The postoffice does not deliver mail to any other Charles Adams besides the one living on Duer street and from no source could any trace could be received of any other Charles Adams. It is believed that the man did not live in this city.

A Pleasant Sociable.

A dime sociable was held at the residence of V. W. Nash, of Prospect avenue, last Tuesday by the members of Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Council, D. of P. There were two recitations and a mock trial. Dancing closed the evening's pleasure. Naylor furnished the music. The committee consisted of A. Wilson, Mrs. Riker, Mrs. Smalley, Mrs. Terry and Mrs. Divine.

Lost a Finger.

An employee of the Scott Press Works, named Newmiller, had a finger on his right hand cut off while working in the press rooms of the New York Times, Tuesday morning. He was brought to his home in this city where he is staying at present until the wound is healed somewhat.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

In Justice Newcorn's court the cases of Doane, et als., against Laster, and the same against Sullivan, have been tried, and judgment has been given the plaintiff in each case.

HEARTS AND DIAMONDS.

By HILDA NEWMAN.

CHAPTER I.

The big diamond sparkled on Elsa's finger. She looked down upon it admiringly, then with one of her swift, shy glances into John's face. "May I wear it for a little while?" she asked.

Though they were in the park, John risked public opinion, and taking the little hand in his, held it tightly for a minute. "You shall have it for good some day, and 20 better ones," he said, confidently. "Meanwhile wear it as long as you like, that is, till my old dad comes to town, which will not be for some time yet."

"It was very good of him to give it to you."

"Yes, because he prized it, and always wore it himself. But I wanted no reward for passing an ordinary exam. that heaps of other fellows get through as a matter of course; besides, I don't care for jewelry. I'd just as soon have had a mug engraved with 'A present for a good boy.' I shall only wear it to please him, and you shall wear it to please me."

Elsa hardly heard what he said—she was deep in thought and spoke dreamily. "I think it is the cruelest thing in fate—to have expensive tastes and no means to gratify them."

"That's something that can be conquered," said John, cheerfully; "there's always a second best, you know."

"Ah, if I could only realize it—but I can't," Elsa answered, despondently. "And here is a case in point: Mrs. Ponder gave me an awful brooch on my birthday—bogus jewels mounted in brass. I never give a mean present," she said, 'and anyone would take this to be worth at least £40.' I thanked her, but I have never had the courage to wear it. Had I only been able to see it with her eyes I should have been delighted with it."

"She meant well," said John, softly.

"O, John, she ought not to have had me so well educated—we have not a taste in common. She would have been happier with her niece, the grocer's daughter."

"You must take more exercise, Elsa; that typewriting is too much for you."

"No, it is not that; besides I have the daily walk, and I'm better away from home, then I must have some money of my own—I can't come to Mrs. Ponder for it, feeling as I do—and I pay her as much as I can, and try to make things last, but O! I am so tired of it all!"

John's healthy mind could not gauge these fits of despondence. He saw no reason for them. Why could not Elsa work on sanguinely towards the future as he did? She must have little faith in him.

He gently pointed this out to her, but she only shook her head, and leaned back, closing her eyes. They sat in silence for awhile until the mood passed; then Elsa rose, slowly drawing her shabby little glove over the beautiful ring."

"You, dear John," she said, impetuously, "I don't need this to remind me of you, because it is only the thought of you and your perfect trust and patience that makes my life endurable. But I like to think of it, and it will be a pleasure to wear it, though I expect I shall often think of the things it could buy."

John rose and drew her arm through his, in his bourgeois fashion. "It is rather impossible, when you come to think of it," he said, laughing, "to wear a big diamond when you've had up to it, I wouldn't stand the temptation, you know. I'm glad you've got it."

Mrs. Ponder prided herself on being very outspoken, but here was the candor of which she had no conception. One's feelings, least of all those of dependents. She also demanded, and could digest, an unstinted amount of praise, and, as long as this was bestowed, was a fairly reliable person to live with. If Elsa would have borne with this most irritating of foibles she would have had a comfortable home; for, though Mrs. Ponder mourned over her want of tenderness and sympathy, she cherished a secret pride in Elsa's beauty and nice manners, which she attributed to her own influence in the girl's training. But Elsa had not the tact of hypocrisy, that helps so many waifs to claim luxurious lives; she had the impatience of intellect, and the stress of unsympathetic companionship told on her and caused constant bickerings.

When John called late one afternoon to reclaim his ring, he found Mrs. Ponder much aggrieved. An altercation had taken place in the morning in reference to some chintz draperies she had chosen that did not meet with Elsa's approval.

"She's not home yet," snapped Mrs. Ponder, in answer to his diffident inquiry, "and the longer she stays away the better. She grumbles at this—she grumbles at that—she says she'll lock her door, because I want her to have a pretty, clean room—and I'm not to interfere with her things. Her things! Why, she hadn't a rag to her back when I took her in! Look what I've done for her! The paltry sum she insists on giving me doesn't pay for her breakfast. But I will tell her plainly she hasn't a bit of sense, and she won't listen—that's what annoys me."

John endeavored unsuccessfully to stem the wrathful recital of woes. In his desire to soothe her he said exactly the wrong things. "All girls are like some, I suppose; they like to be independent. I shouldn't worry about it, if I were you; perhaps she's right, you see. And of course she knows all she owes you."

"She doesn't—that's just what she doesn't," exclaimed Mrs. Ponder, angrily. Suddenly she lowered her voice in a mysterious whisper. "No one knows the truth—no one would have done what I did."

John shrank vaguely from these sought confidences; there was something dishonest about listening when Elsa was not present to deny or defend them.

"Well, it's no good thinking of what is past, particularly anything disagreeable, is it, Mrs. Ponder?" he said, gently. "I dare say Elsa will repay you some day."

"Ah! but I must speak of this, if Elsa hasn't already," said Mrs. Ponder, shaking her head and assuming her most tragic and important air. "I think you ought to know, if you're going to marry her."

"What is it?" asked John, rather anxiously.

"Elsa's father was a thief—he died in prison, and Mr. Ponder let me take the child and bring her up as my own. If it hadn't been for me she'd have gone to the workhouse, for she hadn't a relation in the world."

But he met Mrs. Ponder's curious glance calmly. "I expect Elsa forgot to mention it," he said quietly, "and it does not make the slightest difference. People can't be responsible for their parents."

To his inexpressible relief Elsa entered as Mrs. Ponder was about to pour into his unwilling ears the story of the great grief that had led to her father's arrest and imprisonment. She had apparently walked off her ill humor. Her cheeks were flushed, her lips smiling, as she laid her hands in John's outstretched ones.

"And what made you come to-day?" she asked, taking a small bunch of violets from her waist belt and fastening them in his coat.

"My dad's in town. I have to meet him at 4, so I called for the ring."

He seized Elsa's busy little hand. Why, what have you done with it?"

Elsa hesitated, glanced round, and looked rather alarmed. "I—I must have left it upstairs," she said, doubtfully. John was growing impatient, when she returned with the ring in her hand.

"I have found it," she said, "but you will be very cross with me. The stone is not quite secure. I must have loosened it when I cleaned it. Don't wear it till I the diamond is fastened in tightly; but you needn't trouble to take it to a jeweler. You can pinch it with some of those horrid little forceps."

"Why, Elsa, you look as white as a sheet! I'm not a bit vexed about it," said John, as he took the ring from her shaking hand. Elsa put her arms around his neck and laid her face on his shoulder. He could feel the rapid beating of her heart.

"I felt so frightened," she murmured. "I thought you'd be angry."

"And even if it were," said John, smiling, "it is not worth the roses in your cheeks."

CHAPTER II.

One afternoon in early summer, three years later, John stood at the window of his large, professional-looking house, and looked out on the green garden of the square in which the trees nodded and rustled in the breeze and reminded him of Elsa.

As he stood there, moodily reviewing the past, he saw Mrs. Ponder labor slowly up the street, her dotted veil pushed up on her forehead, her face red and shiny with exertion or excitement. Being admitted, she entered his room and sat down without ceremony.

"I know I look a guy, but I couldn't wait a minute," she panted. "I had to come to tell you. O! dear, the diamond has been found. Poor Elsa—poor, poor, dear, innocent lamb!"

John rose and grasped the back of his chair. "Go on," he said, hoarsely."

"I'm so bewildered, I don't know where to begin. A friend of mine came to see me about the little upholsteress I had recommended to her. She said she had missed things and traced them to the woman's lodgings, and then the place was searched, and among other stolen things a diamond was found. She had come down without ceremony. I had taken it, but was too frightened to offer it for sale, and was waiting for her husband—a well-known thief—to come out of prison and get rid of it for her. It appears that when she came to measure the curtains for the chintz in my bedroom (dear, dear, how the poor girl went on about them!) she saw the ring on the dressing-table, and, turning it about while I was out of the room for a minute, the diamond fell out on the floor. She had just time to drop the setting into a half-opened drawer when I came in, but having, as she said, no opportunity to replace the diamond, she was tempted to keep it."

"What about the false diamond?" asked John.

"Ah! I have only just discovered that," said Mrs. Ponder, opening the shabby bag in which she carried her purse and handkerchief. "The wretched thief swore she knew nothing about it, and that it was quite likely I have found this in the same drawer where Elsa found the ring. I left her things just as they were when she went away, thinking she might come back some day." She held up the brooch she had given Elsa, and John's heart—for one of the bogus stones was missing. "It was tangled in an old veil—I'm sure I don't know why Elsa wouldn't wear it—no wonder she thought the stone she picked up was that diamond, they're just as much alike as real," she added, tender, eying the brooch with admiration.

"A mere coincidence! What fools we have been!" said John, savagely striding up and down in his agitation. "I wish to heaven you had not told me about her father that day!"

"Why?" ejaculated Mrs. Ponder, indignantly. "You said it made no difference, and when I told Elsa she said she had meant to tell you herself."

John stopped short, seizing the astonished woman by the wrists.

"You let Miss Elsa know that you had told me that afternoon?"

"Let me go. How dare you? Yes, of course I did. We had a few words after you had gone, and that cropped up among other things."

There is no day so lonely as a birthday. If it be not spent with those one cares for best—or, failing the loved presences, with the memory of some tender message to haunt one through the day. John missed both bitterly, and determined to seek in music peace of mind, since forgetfulness was impossible.

He paid extravagantly for his seat in St. James' hall, and took possession of it just as some one began the "Moonlight Sonata." Dreamily he enjoyed the wonderful mesmeric melody; listening, with closed eyes, he heard its tender human voice tell of Elsa, of their betrothal and the storminess of their parting. As it ended, he awoke, sighing, from his reverie, to a consciousness of Elsa's presence. He could not descend at once to the ordinary part of the dream—get there she sat, next to him, studying the programme, her sweet, oval face shaded by a large black hat that cunningly revealed the waves and coils of her chestnut hair. She was unconscious of his gaze, and looked at ease with the world and herself. John had pictured their meeting so differently—he had had visions of need and distress bringing her back to him, of love conquering pride, and then silenced the emphatic, downward curve of her red lips.

Unconscious of his scrutiny, she read on to the end of the page, when she looked up and their eyes met. She started a little, then held out her hand with a gracious movement.

"How do you do? You are the last person in the world I expected to find here! I hoped to be in time for the sonata, but I see I have just missed it."

He did not hear a word of the song that followed—he was wondering what to say to this strange, cold, but ever-fascinating Elsa. She turned to him in the interval and said:

"My conscience has often pricked me about not writing to Mrs. Ponder. Have you seen her lately?"

"Yes, I saw her last week," he answered, hurriedly, "and she told me something you have a right to know."

Elsa held up her little gloved hand with a deprecating gesture.

"Oh, please—please—nothing about that unfortunate diamond! I suppose it has turned up somewhere. I meant to save up and send you another, but afterwards I thought it would be better to forget it all."

"And me? Well, perhaps you are right," said John, slowly.

"I am not always right," said Elsa, frankly, smiling on his melancholy face; "for instance, I should have told you the first about my father, but I put it off because I like pleasant topics, and that always made me cry."

"For God's sake, Elsa, be merciful. You don't think I love you less because of that?" And, Elsa, I have searched for you for three years to try and undo what I said in a moment of madness. Can't you forgive me?"

Elsa's manner baffled him, but when she spoke her voice was low and tremulous.

"I forgave you long ago, and don't let us speak of it any more; everything is past and buried."

"Everything but our promises and plans for the future, you mean."

"Please don't speak of them, they were childish. The perfect love and trust we spoke of so glibly were myths. But I shall always be grateful to you."

"I don't understand. You talk in riddles. Why should you be grateful to me?"

"You told me once that there is always a second best. I have learned to find it."

"What do you mean? Where have you been all this time? Don't keep me in such suspense—I can't bear it!"

"I suppose I owe you an explanation. When I ran away I made some desperate resolutions. They came to nothing, for when I went to my work in the morning I experienced such loathing and bury myself where no one should find me, Mr. Scarpley was so kind that, in answer to his inquiries, I was tempted to tell him the whole story." Elsa stopped and stared at the empty platform for a minute.

"If I had only known!" murmured John, frowning. "I went there, but he would give me no clew."

"He is the best and dearest of men," replied Elsa, softly. "I made him promise. And though he had only my word, he believed in me, and—and—loved me. Desolate, heart-broken and friendless as I was, he offered me the truest heart that ever beat, and unworthy as I was, I accepted it, and have learnt to value it."

"You married that man!" gasped John, hardly knowing what he said.

Elsa gently bent her head. "That honor was mine," she said, proudly. "He is not young—you may call him plain. I think he is the best and handsomest man in the world, and he thinks I am the most perfect woman that ever lived. So now you know why I am grateful."

The long-haired favorite again took his place at the piano. Elsa smiled and applauded with the rest. It was clear she had no pity for John's heartache, as he hoped she had not noticed his distress.

When he rose at the end of the solo she looked up brightly.

"Must you go? My husband will be here in a moment. I should like you to know him. But you must come and see us."

Mechanically he took the card she tendered.

"Thanks; but—"

"But if you don't I shall know I have spoilt your afternoon," persisted Elsa, sweetly.

He did not trust himself to reply, but bade her a brief and courteous good-by.

On the dreary return to his northern lodgings he pondered on what she had said till his head ached as well as his heart; yet he could neither blame nor reproach her for broken vows since she was so happy, and he tried to be glad for her sake. But a burning jealousy consumed him as he read the familiar name on her card and he knew he should never seek her out again.—Chicago Tribune.

HOW DETECTIVES WORK

Romance Plays No Part in Their Everyday Life.

To Be Successful They Must Be Patient, Vigilant and Ready to Sacrifice Many of the Comforts and Necessities of Life.

[Special Boston Letter.]

"Cherub, the fly cop!"

Who has not heard the cry from a back alley? to see a moment later eight or a dozen pair of little heels and the end of a baseball bat disappearing behind the barn. The small boy is gone and a moment later, the face of the "fly cop" is lost in the crowd. He is a mysterious, magical personage.

To the untutored mind the life of a detective appears as a romance—one grand, continuous dime novel romance. An uncanny sort of individual, dark and sinister looking, lean, long and hungry of mien—subterranean passages, terrible plots, hairbreadth escapes, a mass of gunpowder, sulphur and bullets—that is the popular conception.

As a matter of fact the average detective is quite an everyday sort of a good fellow. He is fat and red, has a big nose and watery eyes and likes nothing better than to have a friend invite him to take "eins" and "noch eins" over the bar. To be sure, every detective occasionally encounters a real adventure. But on the whole, his life is that of a patient plodder and the thrilling experiences are rare enough to remain a matter of comment for months and years after.

I am reminded of an incident which occurred some weeks ago.

It was immediately after dinner on Sunday when in walking toward town I passed a certain detective with whom I was acquainted. He was sitting on a bench at the street corner, and was amusing himself by teasing a vagrant dog. His apparent unconcern notwithstanding, one could see that he was keeping a close watch upon the street.

"Going to 'vag' some one?" I asked.

"Naw. Got a warrant for Tim at last," he grumbled. "About time he'd got his stripes. He's got a date here in the o. k. m. that works 'cross the street, and I'll catch him this trip, see if I won't."

The sun had set before I returned, but my friend was still lounging on the same bench, now hard at work whittling a stick.

"Ain't come yet," the sleuth remarked, with a complacent grin. "Got to keep my head down all the time, for the cuss is wise to my face better than his own mother's."

The next morning I read a thrilling account of the capture of a notorious burglar by my detective. There was no glare of publicity about the job. The success of it was the result of exemplary patience. At the same time some professional skill had also been required. It was no easy task to determine just where Tim would be that afternoon, and the information had to be obtained through many chats with kitchen girls, small boys and gossipy old maids.

I met the victorious detective a few days later. His face was still wreathed in smiles at the inward contemplation of his laurels.

"Yes, we keep loafing all the time," he remarked. "We keep loafing, for that is the only way to get posted in this business."

In the tough districts of the big cities from four to eight men are detailed to cover a territory of a few blocks. They mingle with the lowest classes, getting as closely in touch with them as possible. Sometimes the relations of detectives and toughs become almost intimate. They call each other by their first names, and while away the hours by telling stories of unusual adventure. As soon as the criminal is wanted by the police a little rivalry springs up. It is the business of the police to allow all the criminal to escape; that they both recognize as the usual state of affairs, and so they proceed to outwit each other, as men might sit down to a chess contest. When the criminal has served his sentence and no new charge has yet been brought against him, amicable relations with the "fly cop" are restored. A reverential air of superstitious fear of the functionary of the law which is ingrained into every criminal from babyhood up, but besides the tough often entertains a queer kind of affection for his prosecutors. He is happy to explain to the one respectable human being that will tolerate his company how it happened that he sank so low; and the detective not infrequently has some rough but sincere feeling for the victim whose present and past he can best appreciate. The statement may sound strained, but the truth of it will be apparent to anyone in touch with police circles.

"They get so chummy," resumed my friend, 'the detective, "that we learn all about their families, their affections and especially their hatreds. The toughs get to telling of his last escapades and incidentally he lets fall many remarks which unwittingly he turns into pointers of vital importance to us."

"How's 'Sleepy Ed,' old man?" asked the detectives.

"And Bill?"

"And when's Dick comin' back from New York?"

Now, Sleepy Ed and Bill and Dick may at present be at large, and the tough may know it. So he talks freely and unhesitatingly, for there is nothing like being on the right side of the "cop." Sooner or later Bill and Dick will be wanted by the police, and then the sleuths will know just how and where to trace them up.

As a rule the detective has no stated hours of work. If he has a case in court he reports there in the morning and after that he is supposed to be on guard—some 23 hours a day. At the stations with which I am familiar it is customary for detectives to report to the desk sergeant at ten a. m. Here they receive instructions if special business was on hand; such as the serving of warrants, the tracing of stolen property, etc. This done, the men pair off and go out on their beats, where they are expected to keep a sharp watch for every indication of a suspicious incident. There is absolutely no restraint upon them; they are free to come and go as they please; but they must be prepared to give the latest gossip of the criminal line.

The peaceable citizen may never be aware of the presence of these patrolling detectives, but they are after all the men that do the real police work. The uniformed officer is conspicuously busy at the street corners, where he regulates traffic and maintains general order. But when it comes to equaling the tricks of a professional criminal, he is altogether too bulky an individual. For his big blue coat and shining brass buttons serve as a danger signal for a block's distance so that any gentleman of tender conscience has ample opportunity to escape the clutches of the law. The citizen's clothes officer on the other hand is a very unostentatious sort of a fellow. His garb is often quite as shabby as that of his intended victim and he saunters along in so innocent a fashion that the liveliest tough is apt to run straight into his arms. Then, too, when an overcoat is stolen, it is an officer in citizen's clothes that recovers it; when a burglary has been committed, the sleuth looks after the case, and in a murder mystery the solution is again dependent upon the brains of the plain detective.

Sandwiched in between his patroling, his serving of warrants, hunting up additional evidence for his cases, the fly cop does occasionally get an opportunity to display the wonderful genius of "Dick, the Boy Detective," or "Old Sleuth, the New York Terror." Late in the evening, perhaps when the officers are about to finish from a day's wanderings, half the force is sent out on a special case. A mysterious murder has been committed, a bank robber is supposed to have arrived in the city or a diamond theft is reported. The ability with which the detective works upon such occasions is really wonderful; but it seems less surprising when one considers the store of information he has gathered during the days of loafing. Some of his allegedly magic tricks are exceedingly sagacious and original, but as a rule he has recourse to a few stereotyped devices modified by circumstances. In tracing stolen property he examines most of the pawnshops and fences in disguise. The writer recalls the figure of a jovial Irishman, who upon several occasions metamorphosized himself into the most fibbing hot cross string vendors. Another common device is to turn tramp. So disguised they prowl about the haunts of criminals and are made confidants in the deepest plots. But not the danger of detection is imminent, the sleuth suddenly withdraws from the chosen circle and resumes the garb of an ordinary detective.

In so far, then, the dime novels give a true picture of the life of a detective; namely, in that the incidents they relate have at least a modified form occurred. But one must keep in mind that the sensational element constitutes but a small, a very small, part of the daily duties of the "citizen's clothes" man. It is the tedious and most patient of workers and for that he deserves the public's thanks.

E. T. GUNDLACH.

THE FOXY DUCHESS.

She Proves Too Shrewd For Chauncey Peabody and Mr. Paul.

"'Oh, well,' I says, 'I don't see your name on any buttons.'

"When I says dat t' de duchess she says I was 'a little beast,' what is her form way of giving me de frosty face. Let me tell you, ever since dat time when I danced wid Maggie de duchess's sister out on top of de floor de duchess has been leary of me, and I has a hard time to lose her long enough to go over t' Mr. Paul's t' give him de boxing exercise every day. But she's terrible artful every once in a while, just de same, dough someting woise has happened since. Da's a funny ting about women. Dey kicks till dey nearly gets de swell knee if you does a little ting like giving annoder gal a kiss, but dey never is so nice to you as when dey kicks. It don't make no difference how long a man is up against de game of women, he is always a farmer at it—dead farmer.

"Dis business says dat she has herself in stuck on Maggie's sister, what I is, and before de duchess come from here she and she says Maggie was in de job t' give me a chance t' see her sister, and she's made things go de odder way from Maggie so fast she looks like a chicken chasing a grasshopper. But all de same tings is coming my way so fast from de duchess I has t' wear catcher's gloves to hold 'em.

"Can you explain dat? No, nobody can't. It's just because women is crazy—for women, particular. Why, only de duchess calls me 'a little beast' and makes a bluff at giving me de frost face, but all de same I never was in it so hard as now. Dere ain't nothing she won't do for me. Yesterday I up my of all dat boodle she's pinched from me. But I'm a winner on every odder leg, sure.

"Always till now I had t' get Maggie t' darn me socks and sew on me buttons. I never had no luck at it, and de odder day when de duchess says, 'Let me do dat for you, Charnies; Maggie doesn't do em neatful.' Well, she does em. Say, if I took off me shoes me socks would put your eye out. De duchess danced on wid dose giddy silk pants Miss Fannie makes fancy tings wid, and me Trilbys look like dey was real yellow and blue posters.

"But dat isn't what I was going t' tell you about. Dis is it: De duchess has been dancing out on top of de steps wid Maggie's sister. Yes, I told him Mr. Paul and me gots pretty chummy when I boxes wid him, and we has a small bit of fun now and den in de dance hall strosts. Honest, dere ain't nothing makes you so chummy wid a man as t' spar wid him—if you spar hard, and Mr. Paul won't have it no odder way. 'Charnes,' says he t' me de odder day 'you is de only one I has a glass t' trow in de face, 'how is it,' says he, 'dat you danced wid de girl you was telling me about?'

"'I can't cop your light on how we done it except I has de gall t' dance wid,' I says t' him.

"Den he looked solum, like he does when he has a game on, and says: 'Isn't dat in de realms of poss'bility? You is de job,' says he, 'and I'll pay you freight.'

"What I was enough for me; so I tole Maggie de game, and she writes t' her steady, what's me friend de barkeep t' fix de layout. Well, say, he fixed it! I got a night off, telling de duchess dat I was going t' take Mr. Paul to a boxing match, and she didn't say a word. She phases into town, Mr. Paul and me did, and after de theater Maggie's sister and some odder gools what dances wid her shows up at Mr. Paul's house, and de duchess tings on me, small. Dat's right. He had a orchestra dere and bottles t' drown a whale and grub up t' de insane.

"I introduces him as his own valet, what is a little game swell mugs is up to once in awhile when dey is traveling in company dey don't belongs to. Well, we wasn't having a ting but fun, Maggie's sister and me showed off our high shoulder speed till Mr. Paul and his friends near died laughing. They was going along like a hurry call ambulance, when all of a suddent, p'wheu! in waltzes de duchess. I tant don't see up against it de wciest ever. She's de hoped us have fun, and, for de sake of Paul's servants, she made de mash in de house all right. I just braced meself for a cast'quake, but what do you tink? Honest, de duchess was smiling t' beat de band, and dat all some us was. She says t' Mr. Paul dat if he wanted t' see good dancing dere was no use going t' de trouble of coming t' town and getting dose 'canaille,' what is a foreyard.

"'All you has t' do,' she says, 'when you want t' see Chimmie dance, is t' stay at home in de country and ask him and me over to your house.'

"I was paralyzed, cause I couldn't get t' her curves a little bit, and Mr. Paul sat down on a small bottle, and says dat he didn't suppose de duchess would do him de honor; but if she would, de music and de floor was at her service, he says. What do you tink dat goil done? She shed her shoes, t' stay, said she, 'canaille' t' chase demselves t' de wall, and den she danced. Say, it was de best dat ever come over de hill! Even dose odder girls yelled murder wid joy. I tink de duchess had been doing dat since she was a t'ree year dem dumb, I couldn't been more paralyzed. De next day Mr. Paul sent for me and de duchess, and he says t' me as polite as ever he spoke in his life: 'Charnes,' says he, 'I has done you wrong by asking Chauncey t' go on a lark and not asking you. De next time you shall come wid us. Here is a little tip. I intended it for Chauncey; you take it, Horace, and forget me mistake.'

"De duchess took de bundle all right, and I didn't mind dat. What I am minding is dat she has never roughed me a wold about dat racket. I'm tinking she must have someting up her sleeves—and her sleeves are pretty big at dat."—E. W. Townsend in New York Journal.

HIS FLYING CAT.

BY W. L. ALDEN.

"Sparrows," said the colonel, "may be very spright, respectable, middle-class birds so long as they stay in England, but when they emigrate to America, they are no better than the average of our working classes. Some meddling idiot brought a lot of sparrows to the states some ten or fifteen years ago, expecting they would kill all the worms on the fruit trees. They hadn't been in the country six months when they took the ground that they were as great a set of thieves as the farmer and the fruit grower ever had.

"Prof. Van Wagener and I were discussing the sparrow question one day, and I was complaining of the inefficiency of the American cat. We have about as wide-awake and as monarchial cats as you can produce, but they can't catch a single sparrow. I've known ambitious cats who set out to catch sparrows, and who waited away to mere skeletons and died of weakness through watching for sparrows from dawn to darkness, and never once getting within ten feet of one. As a general rule I don't have much sympathy for cats, but the insulting language that sparrows use when they see a cat lying for them, and the aggravating way in which they will fly just over the cat's head, or may be hit the cat over the tail with their wings, is more than any cat can be expected to bear.

"The trouble is," said Van Wagener, 'that the cat isn't a flying animal and the sparrow is. The sparrow's native element is the air, and you can't expect a cat to catch a sparrow so long as the cat can't fly.'

"'That's true,' said I, 'but it don't help me out of our difficulty. Cat's weren't made with wings, and neither you nor I can invent a new model of cat that will be able to fly, and to catch sparrows on the wing.'

"'Don't be too sure of that,' said the professor. 'Science has improved everything that it has put its hand to, and I see no reason why science shouldn't improve cats. A flying cat would supply a great public want, for she would be a terror to horses as well as she kills off the mice. I've half a mind to try the experiment of inventing a flying cat.'

"'All right,' said I. 'When you get your flying cat finished just notify me, and I'll come and see her fly. Then, if you are going in for improving animals, perhaps you will invent a cat that can sing like a nightingale. The present style of singing among cats is disgraceful. They haven't any more idea of music than a Chinaman.'

"Well, the professor buckled down to business, and from his daily interviews with his private cat, and the consequent scratches that diversified his good old scientific countenance, I judged that he was doing his best to make a cat that could fly. Before the six weeks were up he sent me a note inviting me to come round to his house at two o'clock the next afternoon to see the first successful flying cat that had ever been invented. I needn't say that I went. I had assisted at the birth of dozens of Van Wagener's inventions, and I had generally found that the presence of a man with experience in the treatment of accidents was a useful adjunct, so far as the professor was concerned.

"'You know, colonel,' said he, 'my method as an inventor. I ask myself what is needed in some particular purpose, and then I proceed to supply that need. Most people who call themself inventors have ideas come to him all of a sudden, in a supernatural sort of way; but that is all nonsense. Inventing is a business, like any other, and any intelligent man can learn it. Now, when I saw that the reason why I can't catch sparrows is that they can't fly after the bird, I saw what was wanted was a flying cat, and I proceeded to invent one. Here I have a small balloon. This I fasten in the cat's clothing, and when it is inflated it will just support the weight of the cat in the air. Then you see this pair of paddle-wheels. They are to be fixed one on each side of the cat, and are to be driven by a small electrical engine. The balloon floats the cat, and the paddle-wheels propel her. In order to steer the cat I fix a flat piece of tin to the extremity of her tail. When she sees a sparrow her instinct will make her swish her tail from one side to the other, and my attention being fastened on catching the bird, she will unconsciously work her tail in such a way as to steer her directly towards it. It wasn't an easy job to rig up Van Wagener's cat. She kicked and swore her level best, and she left divers scratches on the professor's hands. However, he stuck to his task, and after awhile the cat was ready, and we adjourned to the backyard. There was a whole gang of sparrows in the middle of the yard, performing a spring round two that were fighting, and from the way in which every sparrow was talking at the top of his voice it was clear that some heavy betting on the fight was in progress. When they saw Van Wagener and his cat, they naturally flew up to the eaves of the house, where the fighting was resumed. Van Wagener took his flying cat to the extremity of the yard, and after showing her the sparrows at the top of the house, and uttering her to prefer them in, he launched her into the air.

"She rose slowly, kicking and yelling, and all she was just about level with the sparrows. The sparrows were so occupied with the fight that they paid no attention to her, and when she saw that there were at least 20 of them gathered close together, her desire to get at them made her temporarily forget her balloon and her paddle-wheels. She lashed her tail, as cats will do when bent on murder, and, just as the professor predicted, the effect was to steer her in the direction of the sparrows. Her paddle-wheels were working smoothly and regularly, and though they were not large enough to give her any speed, they steadily carried her across the yard towards the sparrows. Van Wagener was in ecstasies. He challenged me to point out any defect in his flying cat, and when I candidly admitted that it did seem to be a complete success, he was the happiest man in New Berlinopolisville. The cat came through the air so slowly and noiselessly that she was within two yards of the sparrows before they saw her. When they did catch sight of this new and startling animal, they were the worst frightened lot of birds that were ever seen outside of one of those so-called happy families, where half a dozen birds, clean paralyzed with fear, are shut in a cage with a cat that has been filled up with chloral, and the public is asked to regard the exhibition as a specimen of what will be the usual sort of thing when the millennium gets its work fairly in. Those sparrows left in a tremendous hurry. They had a sudden business call in some distant part of Illinois, and I don't believe a single one of them stopped flying until they had put at least 30 miles between themselves and Van Wagener's flying cat.

"'Now, you see,' said the professor, 'how completely successful my invention is. My flying cat will either catch the sparrows and kill them, or she will frighten them out of the country. In either case the great sparrow problem is solved. It makes no difference to me, as a patriotic American citizen, whether all the British sparrows in the country are killed, or whether they are driven over into Canada. Come to think of it, I should prefer the latter remedy, for all of our troubles with European birds out of our beloved country will be an object lesson in the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine, which will be of immense benefit to the nation.'

"The professor, being a scientific crank, was naturally a political crank also, and he was more than two-thirds mad on the subject of the Monroe doctrine. When the professor once got fairly started he was going to make the Monroe doctrine he forgot everything else, and he had clean forgotten his flying cat when Mrs. Van Wagener leaned out of a second-story window, and solicited to know if she was going to make a political speech, to hire a hall. She was a mighty sarcastic woman, and her contempt for her husband's political views was even greater than her contempt for his scientific achievements. So she was not at all comforting to her remarks about the professor's political aberration, when she suddenly gave the awfullest screech that I ever heard from female lips, though I was once in a room full of strong-minded women when a mouse ran across the floor. Mrs. Van Wagener thought that her last hour had come, judging from her screams, but, as I had a full view of what was taking place, I knew it was only the cat who had come. Having missed the sparrows the cat turned partly round to see what had become of them, and just then Mrs. Van Wagener, having unconsciously put her head within the cat's reach, the cat judged that her opportunity for making a landing had arrived, and accordingly she lit on the top of Mrs. Van Wagener's head.

"Most any woman, not knowing that her husband had invented a flying cat, would have supposed when some monster with sharp claws, and a talent for using bad language, came flying through the air and lit on her head, that nothing short of the sea serpent, or the flying dragons mentioned in Scripture, had attacked her. What with the cat's desire to kick herself free from her flying apparatus, and her anxiety to get square with the human race, she did that person's head and woman's hair in five minutes than any other cat could have done in a good half hour. The professor tried to explain that it was only the cat, and begged his wife not to injure the flying apparatus. It didn't seem to occur to him that he ought to run to his wife's assistance till I had taken him by the shoulders and started him upstairs. I don't want you to think for a moment that he wasn't anxious to help his wife, but he was so in the habit of looking at things from a scientific point of view, that he forgot that while he was explaining things Mrs. Van Wagener might be clawed to such an extent that she would never be recognized by her nearest friend. Then he had once grasped the idea that she needed his help he fairly flew upstairs, and succeeded in transferring the cat's attentions to himself. Then I had to come to the rescue, for the professor, not having time to invent anything to injure cat, she had devoted her efforts to beautifying his countenance, and if I hadn't succeeded in pulling her off, and tossing her out of the window, she would have torn his eyes out, or at all events would have nose. I got a bad hurt during her interview with Mrs. Van Wagener, and consequently when I threw her out of the window she struck the ground pretty heavily and smashed up the paddle-wheels. We never saw her again.

"Van Wagener made peace with her husband on condition of his making a solemn promise never to have anything more to do with flying cats. I consider that she was wrong in so doing, for Van Wagener's invention was bound to be a success. If he had been allowed to carry it out, flying cats would have become as common as bats, and every sparrow in the states would have emigrated. If it wasn't that I don't believe in using other people's inventions I would go in for the manufacture of flying cats myself; and as it is I believe that Edison will some day hear of Van Wageuer's experiment, and will immediately invent a flying cat and spend the rest of his life in trying to make the invention work."—Idler.

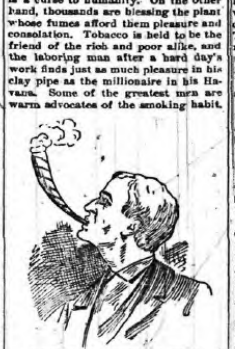
EVOLUTION OF SMOKING.

King Nicotine Began His Reign in a Modest Way.

But Now Tassels and Serfs in Every Part of the Civilized and Barbaric World Acknowledge His Despotic Sway.

[Special New York Letter.]

It has been said that the tobacco habit is a curse to humanity. On the other hand, thousands are blessing the plant whose fumes afford them pleasure and consolation. Tobacco is held to be the friend of the rich and poor alike, and the laboring man after a hard day's work finds just as much pleasure in his clay pipe as the millionaire in his Havana. Some of the greatest men are warm advocates of the smoking habit.



SIXTEENTH CENTURY CIGAR.

And many of them have produced their greatest works under the beneficent influence of the narcotic leaves. Tennyson and his pipe were inseparable friends. It was his steady companion from morning until evening, and the thicker the clouds of smoke would belch from it the faster the inspiring thoughts came to the poet. And so it is with many other mental toilers.

The first historical mention of tobacco was made by Columbus. When the great discoverer landed at the islands of the West Indies he and his crew saw with great astonishment how the natives smoked dried herbs. In his report he says: "They are dried herbs, rolled in a brand, dried leaf; they look like the small mosl ets which Spanish children use on Pentecost. On one end they are lighted, and on the other end the people sucked and drink the smoke by inhalation. They get drunk from it, but it evidently prevents them from getting tired. They call these small muskets tabacos." Little did the islanders think at the time that 400 years later tobacco would rule the world, and that the production of the herb would amount to over 2,000,000,000 pounds yearly, at the value of hundreds of millions of dollars.

For a long time after its discovery tobacco remained a stranger to the European nations. The Spanish settlers and adventurers in the new world accustomed themselves soon to the use of the herb, but the "barbarian custom" did not make any notable progress. In the middle of the sixteenth century smoking sailors could be seen occasionally in European ports, but their example was not followed by the people in general. The appearance of that time were about the shape and size of a candle. It was not the cigar, however, which was destined to conquer the old world, but the pipe. Only with the advent of the latter began the victorious march of the narcotic herb around the globe.

In the course of time the Europeans in America became acquainted with various ways of smoking. The Aztecs in Mexico used peculiar pipes, and the manufacture of which the Franciscan monk, Bernardino de Sahagun reports the following: "Those Indians who sell pipes for the inhalation of tobacco smoke cut reeds and clean these of the leaves. Then they are coated with finely pulverized wet charcoal and painted with flowers and animals. They also have such pipes where the painting only shows after long use. Some are finely gilded. The pipes are filled with the dry leaves of the tobacco and other aromatic herbs, rose leaves, etc., and then they are lighted."

When Ponce de Leon visited Florida for the first time he found the natives devoted to the tobacco habit, but their way of indulging in it was different from the Aztecs. The Floridans used hollow vessels of burned clay into which they inserted reed pipes. The vessels were filled with dry tobacco leaves, and the smoke drawn through the reed. This smoking utensil was the prototype of the tobacco pipe of to-day, but did not attain any popularity at first. Six decades later Sir Walter Raleigh landed with his expedition in Virginia, where the colonists came in close contact with the native Indians. The latter used the same kind of tobacco pipes as the Floridans, and soon the colonists had accustomed themselves to the use of the herb. The mathematician, Thomas Harriot, a former teacher of Sir Walter, wrote the first letters to Europe praising the qualities of tobacco. The Virginia colony was no success, and Sir Francis Drake brought the men back to England, landing them in the Plymouth harbor. Here they created great astonishment, for tobacco smoking was seen for the first time in England. The Indian clay pipes found admirers and the habit of the returning colonists was contagious. Soon no one could see everywhere in England men with tobacco pipes, and in 1598 smoking in London theaters was common. The herb was imported from America, but the burned clay pipes were manufactured by English artisans. The trade laws of 1619 the guild of London pipemakers was incorporated. In 1590 English students introduced the habit in Holland. The fact that tobacco smoking temporarily overcomes hunger and thirst made it soon popular in the English and Dutch armies, and during the Thirty Years' war the soldiers of Wallenstein and Tilly acquired the habit from them.

During the Seventeenth century tobacco was smoked from pipes modeled after the Virginia pattern, but with the increasing popularity of the smoking habit efforts were made to improve and perfect the smoker's utensils, and many were the changes in style and material during the transition of the Indian pipe to the perfect and artistic specimens of our day.

In the civilized countries cigar and cigarette smoking has during the last few decades largely crowded out the tobacco pipe, but that by far the greater majority of smoking humanity all over the globe still adheres to the pipe, which in many cases has become a national characteristic.

The Turk loves the chibouk, with its red clay bowl, its long stem of weichsel and its mouthpiece of amber, and frequently adorns it with gold and precious stones. In the farther orient, in Arabia, Persia and India the water pipe or narghile is the favorite. The Japanese smoke from metal pipes, which are frequently of the most exquisite workmanship, being inlaid with gold and silver. In the world of smoking humanity all over the globe still adheres to the pipe, which in many cases has become a national characteristic.

The Kirghese bore a side hole into a mutton bone, fill the narrow cavity with tobacco and smoke calmly the primitive apparatus. Very simple is a Siberian pipe, which consists of the hollowed root of a tree. Next to this another pipe of the same country made of roughly-carved wood and adorned with tin mountings looks like a work of art. The latter pipe has also something which no other pipe possesses—an adjustable wooden protector for the bone mouthpiece.

It has been asserted that not all of the tobacco pipes of the Asiatic and 1, Spoon Pipe of New Zealand; 2, Kiko Pipe of the Makraka; 3, Siberian Pipe; 4, Double Pipe of the Niam-Niam.

African peoples have grown out of the North American pattern, but that the smoking habit was cultivated by some tribes before the discovery of America. There are no assured facts to this effect, but circumstances point to the conclusion that the Black race smoked long before the Caucasians. It was not tobacco, however, but the common, intoxicating leaves of the hemp and "datha," another specific African plant that the New Zealanders of other plants may also have served the purpose. How primitive their way of smoking must have been can be seen to-day among the Bechuans in Africa. A Bechuan constructs his pipe by forming a small cavity in the ground and opening, which he fills with hemp, datha, tobacco, or other combustible material. Then he puts a glowing ember on top, and after inserting a tube through the sand to the pipe, he enjoys the smoke lying on his stomach.

Few things can be said about the native Australian smokers. They are not passionate smokers, and excepting the wooden spoonpipe, with the stem of bird's bones of the New Zealanders, the pipe of the Papuans of Roon island, and the "baubau" of the New Guinea tribes, one does not find interesting varieties. The "baubau" is a piece of bamboo more than a yard long, open on one end and hollowed out with a cracked opening, which he fills with hemp, datha, tobacco, or other combustible material. Then he puts a glowing ember on top, and after inserting a tube through the sand to the pipe, he enjoys the smoke lying on his stomach.

A cigarette is put into the latter, the bamboo is filled with smoke by sucking at the open end, and the smoke inhaled through the side hole after removing the cigarette. This is the most tedious way of smoking in the world.

The shah of Persia owns the costliest and most magnificent pipe on earth. It is incrusted with rare and precious stones and said to be valued at $400,000. Capt. Crabbe, in Brussels, owns the most complete collection of pipes, consisting of 5,000 specimens, and including pipes of all periods, countries and materials.

Sending Money in Letters.

An old post office inspector says: "Money never should be inclosed in letters for transmission through the mails. In the first place, it is unnecessary to do so, because money orders are so cheap; and, in the second place, money in a letter offers a constant temptation to those who handle mail. It is practicably impossible to place money in a letter so that the postal clerk into whose hands the letter falls will not instantly detect it. Paper money has a peculiar odor unlike anything else on earth, and the clerk who is dishonest uses his sense of smell in spotting valuable letters rather than the sense of touch."

PROMISING YOUNG MAN.

He Wins Distinction by His Reliability and Integrity.

How Leroy J. McNeely, a Mere Youngster, Secured Executive Action by the Secretary of the Navy, Single-Handed and Alone.

[Special Washington Letter.]

This is a story of commendable endeavor and noteworthy achievement.

Very often in the newspapers and sometimes on signs in front of store doors we see the words: "Boy wanted." How did it ever occur to you how few boys there are to be had, who are worth having, to merchants and other business men?

Four years ago I wanted a boy: an honest, industrious and educated boy. You may advertise day after day for weeks and possibly for months, and not get a good, well-bred, honorable, gentlemanly, capable boy. But when you also want a boy who can write shorthand and transcribe on a typewriter the ability becomes the more pronounced. A long-time personal friend one Sunday afternoon came to my house and introduced a slender, modest, unpretentious youth, who had seen so little of the world that he blushed like a schoolgirl when he was addressed and made answer to inquiries. He did not claim to be an expert stenographer or rapid typewriter. He simply wanted an opportunity to develop what talent he might possess, and he was willing to learn. Gentlemen who had known him from the cradle spoke of him in the highest terms. He seemed to be just the boy I wanted, and he went to work.

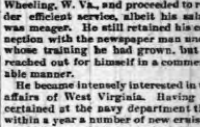
Immediately, virtually, he began to began to learn the corridors, committee rooms and offices in the big capitol building; the places where news items are obtained by the diligent correspondents of metropolitan newspapers. Within a month he knew all of the routine work, and performed it like a veteran. He was, first of all, a reliable young man. Not one out of a thousand is always and under all circumstances reliable. But when this young man had learned the ropes and had it well in hand, when opening came, his employer was satisfied that no news item had escaped the vigilance of the youthful worker. He was well assured that the young man had done his duty every day, and as well and as faithfully as his employer could have done it for himself.

Then the young man had another lesson to learn, and it was not easy. Sufficient unto himself, of diligence and dates without embarrassment, but when it comes to making acquaintances with many men it is different. This young man was obliged to become acquainted with a number of senators and representatives of congress. He not only was obliged to become acquainted with them, but to see them every day, and ask them all sorts of questions.

He was taught to approach public men as the fully accredited representative of his employer. Public men were told that the young man could be trusted with private affairs, and they were requested to talk freely with him. His modesty of demeanor proved to be a potent factor in his way of getting into the regard and esteem of many men. He worked for a man who represented daily newspapers in Philadelphia, New York, Detroit, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Omaha and other cities. Therefore he was obliged to become acquainted with the senators and representatives from Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska and other western states.

You may well imagine that it was no easy task. Your young friends will understand very well that it must have been embarrassing to meet with popular political leaders from various sections of the country. It would embarrass any young man. But it was a part of the duty of the profession which this lad sought to learn, and he went about it systematically and diligently, and within a few months he was as much at home on the floor of the house of representatives during the hour before the daily assembly as any of the veteran newspaper men there. With notebook in hand he would approach them with questions, wrote down their answers and produced a good budget of news every evening. He was complimented for his work and his salary was raised a little at a time, without any request being made by him, as a voluntary mark of appreciation of his work, and stimulated him to further endeavor. He familiarized himself with the executive departments, and gathered valuable news there when congress was not in session.

The day before Lieut. Gen. Schofield retired from command of the army, this young reporter, then but little past his nineteenth birthday, called upon the old commander in his office at the war department, and secured from him an interesting interview concerning his feelings and regrets at severing his connection with the army after a lifetime of service. Older and more experienced newspaper men failed to secure the lieutenant general, but he would not talk to any of them.



LEROY J. M'NEELY.

When Gen. Miles was placed in command of the army this growing young man prepared all the facts for a seven-column article in a prominent newspaper in the east, giving historical facts concerning all the commanders of the American army from George Washington to Nelson A. Miles. It was excellent work.

But the boy was now getting to be a man, and he was ambitious to work for himself. He sought and secured employment from a daily paper in Wheeling, W. Va., and proceeded to render efficient service, albeit his salary was meager. He still retained his connection with the newspaper man under whose training he had grown, but he reached out for himself in a commendable manner.

He became intensely interested in the affairs of West Virginia. Having ascertained at the navy department that within a year a number of new cruisers would be named after principal cities of the country, this young man filed an application for the city of Wheeling, soliciting the secretary of the navy to name one of the new cruisers of the navy after the principal city of West Virginia. His application was placed on file, but nothing would have come of it but for the energy and determination of character which the young man displayed. He wrote articles about the application, incited action on the part of the citizens of Wheeling, and then urged Senators Faulkner and Elkins to go to the secretary of the navy and request that one of the cruisers be named Wheeling. They did so, but had little hope of accomplishing anything by their requests.

But the young reporter was hopeful, earnest and audacious. He kept track of the proceedings in the navy department, and when it was known he was about to be named he called upon Postmaster-General Wilson, who had been a West Virginia congressman for 12 years, and urged him to see the secretary of the navy in behalf of his application and that of the citizens of Wheeling. In compliance with this request the postmaster-general saw the secretary of the navy and suggested the propriety of naming a cruiser after the city of Wheeling. And it was done.

When you remember that the men of experience in public life have the courage to approach a member of the cabinet with suggestions, particularly concerning a proposed important executive action, you will realize that this young man exhibited considerable moral courage and displayed an unusual amount of self-reliance. He was seeking nothing for himself, asking no individual favor, but was pressing the claims of a promising city to recognition in an important matter. He wisely and sagaciously discerned the necessity of political influence to accomplish his object, and hence called upon statesmen who had been honored by the suffrages of the people of West Virginia. Moreover, he urged them to go to the front. His last aggressive movement deserves particular praise.

I knew that Postmaster General Wilson and Secretary of the Navy Herbert had served together in the national house of representatives for at least half a score of years; and that their personal and political relations were of the most cordial nature. He knew that if the postmaster general could be induced to make an earnest plea to the secretary of the navy, his request would most likely be granted. Therefore he sought the postmaster general and the two cabinet officers named and solicited his interest in the case. By so doing he clinched his arguments and appeals and achieved success in his undertaking. You may well believe that this young proud young man when he was able to telegraph his paper at Wheeling, that one of the new cruisers had been named Wheeling.

On Wednesday evening, November 10, the city council of Wheeling passed resolutions of thanks to the secretary of the navy, to the senators, to the postmaster general, and also to Leroy J. McNeely, the young newspaper man who originated the idea and fostered it until success crowned it. It is believed that this is the only instance in which any one newspaper man has been influential or potential in securing executive action favorable to any city in the matter of the naming of a cruiser for the new navy. Therefore the honor has been conferred in compliance with the action of municipal and state authorities, petitioning through their congressional representatives. In this instance the originator, promoter and guardian of the idea is a young man and he but barely attaining his majority.

A COSTLY PUBLIC GIFT

The Newark News printed the following editorial Friday anent the proposition of the trolley magnates to tear up the county road without recompense to the tax payers:

Westfield avenue is the best road from Elizabeth to Plainfield—as it has good reason to be—since $100,000 having been spent in the paving of it. A company which desires to build an electric railroad connecting the two cities seeks permission to lay its tracks on the avenue. That will mean the tearing up of the pavement, the practical destruction of the road so far as the purpose of making it a good driveway, the purpose for which the large expenditure was made, is concerned. Under all the circumstances, and with full recognition of the undoubted service a trolley road will give to the territory in question, it does appear as if the bestowal of the franchise would be a very costly public gift to the company. No back roads nor mud roads are wanted by the trolley. It demands the best roads going, and so far it has had lots of success in securing them.

TO MUCH RETICENCE.

Speaking frankly, it is a bit surprising to view the policy of the gentlemen who are going actively ahead in the movement looking towards a consolidation of the city and borough, in their attitude to the public press. Though they depend in a great degree on the co-operation of the newspapers to further the plans which they hope to see consummated, there was a profound air of reticence surrounding the meeting Tuesday, so far as an opportunity of acquainting the newspapers with its purport was concerned. No newspaper representative was invited to be present, though the proceedings were of the highest import to the public. Of course, a report was furnished to the papers this morning, but in a matter where there should be no individuality and in which the public is wholly concerned, it seems odd that it should have been so.

MAY NOT REAPPOINT MARX.

There is a likelihood that George Marx will not be reappointed by Mayor Bowe as keeper of the Poor. While we know nothing of Mr. Fisk's mind in this respect, it is said that he is not inclined to continue a naturalized citizen in office when there are other creditable applicants for the place. Israel D. TenEyck, who was a candidate last year, and Charles VanWinckle, a Republican worker, are mentioned as candidates for the

The progressive ladies of Westfield, Ind., issued a "Woman's Edition" of the Westfield News, bearing date of April 3, 1896. The paper is filled with matter of interest to women, and we notice the following from a correspondent, which the editors printed, realizing that it treats upon a matter of vital importance to their sex: "The best remedy for croup, colds and bronchitis that I have been able to find is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary corner Park and North avenues.

The preliminary examinations were held last October. The examination will be in calesthenics, free work, three moves on three different pieces of apparatus, and a potato race. It will be necessary to secure 65 percent out of a possible 100 per cent to secure a certificate. The examination will be conducted by Physical Director Heywood, of the association.

DANCE DEFIED THE GOLD

SECOND OF THE SUBSCRIPTION DANCES A SUCCESSFUL AFFAIR.

Though Without it Was Bleak and Freezing, the Casino Was the Scene of a Party Where Terpsichore Held Sway.

While the cold wind rattled the bare branches of the trees and the mercury fell dangerously near the zero point Monday, it was a very different scene in the Casino of the Union County Country Club. The second of the subscription dances, which take the place of the Assemblies this year, was being held. The room was tastefully arranged for the occasion as a drawing room with soft upholstered chairs, sofas, rugs, and the like. Soft cushions covered the window seats in the alcoves while the electric lights that line the walls at intervals were shaded with pink tissue paper, casting a soft glow over the dancers as they whirled and glided in graceful movement around the room.

The following patronesses received: Mrs. Orville T. Waring, Mrs. James T. Scott, Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mrs. John B. Dumont, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. John Doull Miller and Mrs. William J. Roome.

Among those present were: Miss Grace Cooley, Miss Gertrude Baker, Miss Wharton, of Pittsburg; the Misses Holly, Miss Holly, of New York; Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, the Misses Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Depew, Mr. and Mrs. Kleinek, Miss Bessie Gina, Miss Smock, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Saunders, Miss Hall, Miss VanBoskerck, Mrs. Orville T. Waring, the Misses Waring, Mrs. John Doul Miller, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Miss Huntington, Mr. Ames, Edward M. VanBuren, Miss Gertrude Andrews, Miss Minnie Wilson, Miss Middledith, Mr. and Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Roome, Mr. and Mrs. James T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Schoonmaker, Miss Chapin, of Pittsburg, Campbell Bakewell, of Pittsburg, Mr. and Miss Layng, of New York, Miss Tingue, of New York, Miss Hollins, of New York, the Messrs. Foster, of New York, Miss Ewing, Miss Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. P. V. S. Van Wyck, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Delaney, Rowland Cox, Raymond Lefferts, of New York, Henry Opdyke, J. B. Dumont, Jr., Rutherford Shepard, James Middledith, J. H. P. Wharton, Howard W. Beebe, H. Beeve Boskerck, Howard Huntington, Orville G. Waring, L. E. Waring, H. A. Patton, Percy Stewart, Walter McGee, F. L. Huntington, A. G. Henderson, Dr. F. Ard, Laurens H. Van Buren, Irving G. West, Samuel P. Hall, Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, H. C. Munger, S. C. Miller, T. R. VanBoskerck, F. R. Fish, Jr., Lambert Fish, Clarence Peck, Siegfried Arens and Frank Frost.

Elliot, of New York, furnished the music. The stage was fitted up like the rest of the room but the orchestra, instead of being there, was placed on the floor in front, surrounded with a partial screen of palms and potted plants.

Dinner, one of Max Wlertz's best, was served at midnight, after which the dancing continued until an early hour in the morning.

The dances are under the direction of Clifton Wharton, Jr., Orville G. Waring, Howard Huntington, Harry V. Borden and Howard W. Beebe. Mr. Wharton and Mr. Borden were not present Monday evening.

Councilmanic Conference.

There will be an informal meeting of the City Council on Saturday evening to discuss the city treasurership matter. This plan was adopted for the reason that the Council will hold its regular meeting next Monday evening, at which time the election of a new treasurer will take place. It now looks as though there was going to be a grand rush for the office.

There has been considerable wonderment as to who was going to occupy the little stores recently erected by Justice Vincent W. Nash on Park avenue near the Revere House. They have both been rented to Mrs. Volkman, who now runs her florist's establishment on the Crescent block on Watchung avenue.

Eyesight, How Preserved.

Most people are aware that defective eyesight is increasing at an alarming rate, but comparatively few realize that their headaches, dizziness and similar complaints may be due to eye-strain, and not to stomach or liver troubles as they may suppose. That many complaints of this nature can be immediately and permanently relieved by wearing properly fitted and adjusted glasses is an absolute fact beyond dispute.

It is extremely unwise, however, to entrust your best friends—your eyes—to one who is not thoroughly skilled in optical art when you require spectacles.

Many of our townspeople have their glasses made by the Messrs. Hahn, Opticians, of 26 East 23d St., New York, and recommend these gentlemen for the great care and skill they exercise in their specialty of making and fitting comfort-giving spectacles and eyeglasses.

That the Messrs. Hahn are deserving of confidence may be realized, when it is stated that many of the prominent oculists of New York and New Jersey recommend their patients to them when spectacles or glasses are prescribed.

Those who wear eyeglasses would do well to call at the establishment of Messrs. Hahn and examine their D. D. D. (don't drop down) eyeglasses; in this glass the advantage of spectacles and noseglasses are combined, assuring comfort and security to the wearer.

This firm also has a list of skillful oculists and gladly furnish the addresses of those who are painstaking and reliable to applicants who may desire the service of an oculist or eye surgeon.

We may add that the location—26 East 23d St., is a very convenient one, it being but a few doors from Broadway and almost facing Madison Square Park, in fact in the very heart of the Optical Centre of America. Take Sixth Avenue elevated, Broadway or Lexington Avenue cable cars.

THIS COON IS A FIGHTER.

STOOD OFF FIFTY MEN AND A DOZEN DOGS IN A HUNT.

Finally Put in a Stall With a Single Dog and the Latter Gave In After a Few Swipes From the Animal.

Nearly every man and boy in Avon Park and some from this city were up at Campbell's club house at Avon Park, Saturday afternoon, to attend the grand 'coon hunt that had been arranged for that time. Edward Campbell and some friends captured several of those little animals last week and it was their intention to release the coons on Saturday for a hunt. The dogs of the neighborhood were pressed into service to chase the raccoons.

The animal was released early in the afternoon and after he had a good start, the dogs were allowed to follow while the crowd of men and boys, numbering in all about fifty, followed on foot. The 'coon ran in the direction of his old home in Dark Lane and, for a few moments, threw the dogs off the scent. They found it after a hunt and the chase grew exciting. The animal was finally found in a tree and snared. He was then allowed to go in a neighboring field.

The dogs followed, but the 'coon began to get angry and turned to fight the dogs. Now the raccoon has a peculiar way of fighting, for instead of standing on his feet or sitting up, he lays on his back and waits for the attack when he uses his sharp claws with great effect on the necks and breasts of the attacking dogs. When the 'coon was brought to bay, the dogs formed a circle around the animal and growled and snapped at the 'coon, but without avail. At last one dog, braver than the rest, made a plunge at the 'coon, only to have his throat almost slit open. The men then tried to capture the 'coon with a forked stick. That was too much for the patience of Mr. Raccoon and he started for Ed Campbell, who was one of the group. Mr. Campbell fled with the 'coon in full pursuit. The dogs saw him go and joined in the chase. The coon took to a tree, and Campbell escaped just as he was preparing to climb a tree with unusual rapidity.

The coon was captured the second time and then released for another chase after which he was brought down to the club house for safe keeping. One of the men in the party had a dog that he wanted to back against the raccoon and bets were put in a stall together. It only took the coon half a minute to convince his opponent that he had had all he wanted and the dog left in a hurry, bleeding from several wounds that he had received in the short conflict.

Mr. Campbell now has three coons in captivity and one of them will be released next Saturday afternoon for another hunt.

CONSTABLE TAKEN FOR A BURGLAR.

Shot by a Justice Who Thought He Was Trying to Break Into His Barn.

Freeholder Noah Woodruff, a justice of the peace, of Roselle, Saturday morning shot and dangerously wounded Edward Stevens, chief of the fire department and also a constable. The justice mistook the constable for a burglar. A set of harness was stolen from the barn of the justice Friday night. Stevens is employed by the Central Railroad, and started home shortly before 2 o'clock. On his way he saw the barn door of the justice open, and Woodruff, who was on the lookout, thinking he was the thief, shot him in the neck. Dr. Pierson was summoned and he dressed Stevens' wounds, and the later was sent home. Justice Woodruff was greatly distressed over his mistake.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2702 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m to sufferers from catarrh will not be amiss if a cure can be offered. Ely's Cream Balm has become a favorite in all sections of the United States. Your cold in the head will be quickly relieved by it, and the severest attack of catarrh will yield to, and be perfectly cured by a thorough treatment. Catarrh is not a blood disease, but an inflammation of the passages of the nose and throat, due to climatic changes.

A Word or Two

The Difference

"I see no difference between H-O and any other oatmeal!" We know it. The difference is not to be seen. You taste, and smell, and feel the difference, though!

H-O

is different from all others, in that it is more sweet, smooth, delicate, digestible. Its preparation begins where the others leave off. It is twice cooked, once by steam, once by super-heated air. Thus half the work of digestion is done, and the system is never over-taxed or over-heated.

Be sure to get the package with the big H-O on the end.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE

GOVERNOR GRIGGS DID NOT NAME A SECRETARY OF STATE.

The Bicycle Rink Progress—Commissioners Appointed to Bring About Uniformity of Legislation—Make a Report.

Governor Griggs increased the suspense with reference to the filling of the position of Secretary of State by sending no names to the Senate Monday. There is just as much uncertainty as ever to who will be chosen, but the conviction is growing stronger that Senator Stokes is not to get the place. The Cumberland Senator does not give up, however, and says he will stay in the contest until the appointment is made.

State Coosul Kircher of the New Jersey Division, L. A. W., was at the State House and obtained the fixing of Tuesday, February 2d, as a date when the House Committee on Railroads and Canals will give a public hearing on Assemblyman Gledhill's bill providing that bicycles shall be carried on railroads free as baggage when the owner is a passenger.

The House has passed Senator Ketcham's bill making it unnecessary for the Law Judge of a county to sit with a Supreme Court Justice in a murder trial. Heretofore both Judges had to sit. The change is desired because the time up too much time of the County Judge, which is needed to give proper attention to other trials.

No other bill was passed by either House, but a big batch of bills were introduced in each body. The more important were anti-trust bills by Senator Daly, which prohibits combinations to restrict trade; a bill by Senator Reed, reducing the legal rate of interest from 6 to 5 per cent.; a bill by Senator Johnson to enable the Riparian Commissioners to prevent the destruction of the Palisades by the blasting of rock.

Assemblyman Lloyd, of Camden, introduced his bill providing for a marriage license law. Several attempts have been made at this kind of legislation, but all previous efforts have failed.

Each time the bill has been brought up it has been opposed by clergymen. There are a great many in New Jersey who claim that the present free and easy method of assuming marriage obligations is a disgrace.

The bills relating to marriage licenses that the moralists have favored have differed materially each year. These marriages are of a promiscuous sort. The records show that about 4,000 couples come to New Jersey annually from other States to wed—the majority from New York. It is probably for this reason that the bill introduced last year was to control the marriages of those from other States. Assemblyman Lloyd has not yet announced just what the particular provisions of his bill this year will be.

There are only four other States in the Union that have no marriage license law.

The New Jersey Commissioners appointed to bring about uniformity of legislation in the United States made their report at the session of the Senate Monday, at the same time submitting a draft of a bill relating to negotiable instruments.

The bill has been agreed upon at Saratoga by the Commissioners representing twenty-seven States, and is based to a large extent upon the British Instrumente act of 1882, which is now enforced in every English-speaking country but our own. It does not change materially the present laws of the State.

A similar bill will be introduced in New York, Massachussetts, Connecticut and other States. It was drawn up by John J. Crawford, of New York, and was approved by M. D. Chalmers, now in India, who drew up the English measure.

Stealing Papers.

For some time past those in charge of the Public Library have been annoyed a great deal with people who persist in taking both the local and New York paper from the reading room. If the guilty person is caught it will not be well for them.

SUPPORT FOR THE HOSPITAL

AMOUNTS GIVEN BY CHURCHES.

Entertainment Similar to the Kirmess to be Held in the Future.

A regular meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital was held last Monday, when chiefly routine business was transacted. The members discussed the advisability of holding an entertainment similar to the kirmess which was held a year ago, and it is quite likely that such an affair will be held. However, nothing definite was decided upon.

E. H. Ladd, Jr., the treasurer, submitted a report of the money received from the various churches in Plainfield. The report is as follows:

All Souls' church, $13.17; St. Mary's church, $40; Grace P. E. church, $76.14; Crescent Avenue church, $123.15; Seventh-day Baptist church, $16 31; Congregational church, $21.77; total, $320.55.

There are one or two churches yet to hear from, and it is expected that all the money will be received in a short time.

DEATH TRAP IS THIS BRIDGE.

FEW SEE THE DANGER WARNING.

Sign is Weather Beaten and Letters Almost Obscured.

Somebody is negligent or else the bridge over Bound Brook to New Brunswick would not be in its present condition, a menace to all travellers along that road who do not know the country very well. The bridge is a wooden structure, never very strong in its best days. Last fall it was condemned by the proper authorities of Somerset county and a new iron structure ordered build. It was deemed too late in the winter to have the change made then and it took some time to secure the proper iron girders for the bridge. So a small sign board was placed on the bridge with the inscription, "This bridge has been consemned and all persons crossing it do so at their own risk." The sign was placed on the side of the bridge where it might be noticed by the drivers if they chanced to look that way. At night, of course, it cannot be seen without getting a lantern and examining the bridge closely. Now that it has occupied that position for several months the board, on which the sign is lettered with a black crayon, has grown weather-stained and the lettering has grown faint until it is hard to read. There is no other method of warning the traveller of the danger in crossing the bridge and accidents are extremely liable to happen every time a heavy wagon rattles over the bridge. There is another road by which wagons and carriages can reach Bound Brook and those acquainted with the condition of the bridge usually take it, but to the stranger the danger is great. The material from the new bridge has arrived but the contractor is waiting for the weather to moderate before beginning work; meanwhile the danger remains.

SAID NOT GUILTY, BUT CONVICTED.

A Dunellen Young Man Sent to Jail For Three Months.

John Papp, 20 years old, of 1004 Forest avenue, New York, and John W. Johnson, 21 years old, of Dunellen, who were arrested on December 11, for stealing goods from their employers, Schiefflin & Co., wholesale druggist at No. 170 William street, New York, were tried Monday in Special Sessions. Papp pleaded guilty and was sentenced by Presiding Justice Jerome to thirty days in the City Prison. Johnson pleaded not guilty, but, the evidence being strongly strongly against him, he was convicted and was sentenced to three months in the penitentiary.

The Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford sent a written request to the Court asking lenity for Papp. He said he had known him for some time and believed he had been punished sufficiently.

Schiefflin & Co. reported that thefts still continue.

Mrs. Kleineeke's Tea.

A most charming afternoon tea was given Monday by Mrs. Auguste Kleineeke, of Franklin place in honor of her friends, Miss Wheeler of New York, and Miss Ewing of Philadelphia. Mrs. Kleineeck and her mother, Mrs. Depew, assisted by the guests of honor, received in the parlor. In the dining room Mrs. Stuart Patterson and Mrs. Harry Depew presided at the table, which was exquisetely decorated with red carnations, red candles and shades with smilax hung from the chandelier. Mrs. Patterson and Mrs. Depew were assisted by Mrs. Clay and the Misses Huntington, Yerkes and Patton.

Cut Himself With an Axe.

Zacharirh Wilson, of Harmony street, met with a a painful accident Monday afternoon while cutting wood at his home. With the axe raised in the air it caught in the clothes line, and in the attempt to get it loose it struck Mr. Wilson in the forehead, inflicting a deep wound. A physician was sought and it was found necessary to take several stitches in the cut. No serious results are anticipated from the injury.

RUMORS OF BIG DEALS.

ACROSS THE STATE BY TROLLEY LINES SOON TO BE THE THING.

Links to be Completed That Will Connect Jersey City and Philadelphia—Many of the Obstacles Have Disappearing.

It is reported that within a few months the links in the chain of trolley roads across the State of New Jersey will be completed, so that one may ride from Jersey City to Philadelphia. It is said by one who ought to know, that a Philadelphia syndicate had bought the rights of way and franchises of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, which had almost a complete catenation, passing through or touching all the important cities and towns in the State, and that one of the links, connecting Bound Brook with New Brunswick, is now in process of construction by the Raritan Construction Company. This line, it is stated, will be extended to Perth Amboy.

From Bound Brook the line, as originally laid out by the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, passes through Millstone, Kingston and Rocky Hill to Princeton, and thence to Trenton. East of Rahway the trolley system is complete from Elizabeth to Jersey City.

The New York and Philadelphia Traction Company had the consent of property owners to connect Rahway with Elizabeth via St. George avenue or Westfield avenue, but the Union County Board of Freeholders would not grant the franchise over the county roads, either by St. George avenue or Westfield avenue, which latter avenue would connect Rahway with Westfield. The county roads are macadamized, and are pronounced to be the finest in the country.

This action broke the connection, as it cut out a most important link. If the company could have reached Moffatt's Hotel, one mile north of Rahway, in Westfield avenue, it would have been all right, but the franchise was not granted. Several months ago a company organized in Elizabeth secured the right of way to connect that city with Rahway via Elizabeth avenue, which runs on the North side of and parallel with the Pennsylvania Railroad, about 200 yards distant from it.

It is said that when they apply for the franchise they will get it, as this road is not macadamized. It is stated that this section will be constructed in the coming spring, and then, with the completion of the other sections above referred to, the main arterial trolley system in New Jersey will be complete.

There are various companies in the line, but it is believed that in one of these great corporations or syndicates will, at some time not very remote, be the unifying power that will control the united trolley lines of New Jersey.

PRIMARY TEACHERS UNION.

Ideas For Sunday-School Instruction Propounded in a Novel Way.

Miss Rocap led the devotional exercises and taught the lesson at the meeting of the Primary Teachers' Union, held Monday afternoon in the Y. M. C. building. The lesson was on the subject "The Boldness of Peter and John," and Miss Rocap illustrated it by telling a story of a rich man who had an only son who enlisted and went to war. As time went on and the son did not come back, the father gave his servant instructions that whenever a soldier called at the door he must give him something to eat. One day a soldier called at the house carrying a paper for the rich man. On investigation it proved to be a message from the long lost son, and he sent a servant through his soldier friend. And thus, the speaker said, we must come to our Father through His son Jesus Christ.

The topic for discussion was "Shall we have sub divided classes?" The discussion was quite general and some were of the opinion that there should be, while others thought differently. The question was not decided unanimously by the members.

BEATEN AWAY FROM HOME.

Plainfield Catholic Club Bowlers Defeated at Newark.

The bowling team of the Plainfield Catholic Club was defeated in two games rolled on the alleys of the Institutes of Newark, Monday evening Their opponents were the Institute team and the latter only won after two hard fought games. Both teams rolled fairly well although no phenominal scores were made. The alleys were extremely cold and the members of both teams shivered most of the evening despite the two big stoves that roared away at one end of the alleys, which were located in the third story of the club house.

In all the games the Plainfield ever rolled with this Newark team, in past years, the Plainfield bowlers were victorious in all but one.

After the game a number of the Plainfield team and their rooters attended the ball of the St. Columbia's Society at Cruger's Auditorium.

Abner Bartlett is doing duty at present at fire headquarters.

Woman's Work

Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to tone, sustain, and renew the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. It is more because of this condition of the blood that women are run down.

Tired, Weak, Nervous

Than because of the work itself. Every physician says so, and that the only remedy is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer such as Sarsaparilla. For the troubles Peculiar to Women at all ages or seasons, climate or life, or resulting from hard work, nervousness, and impure blood, thousands have found relief and cure in

WENT WIDE OF ITS MARK

BULLET FIRED AT A CAT CRASHED THROUGH A WINDOW PANE.

Mrs. Charles Vail Narrowly Escapes Being Struck by the Missile That Came From a Revolver in C. Deucher's Hands.

When you shoot at cats be sure you hit the object of your aim, and don't do like one young man did last week, come near killing a person.

Charles Deuscher, a boarder at the home of Caleb Dickenson, of West Front street, was in the rear yard when his eyes spied a cat running for dear life. Of late the neighbors in this vicinity have been troubled a great deal with cats and whenever a good opportunity offers itself they are speedily put out of the way, and with this purpose in his mind Mr. Deucher called upon his revolver to perform the desired work. He was as quick as a flash, but still he was not quick enough, and the bullet went wide of the mark.

When the little piece of lead was found it was deeply embedded in a door in the home of Charles Vail, of Orchard place.

Mrs. Vail was in the room at the time and she was thoroughly frightened by hearing a heavy plate glass fall apart, just as the ball whizzed by her For a few minutes she was unable to account for the affair, but when she looked out of the window and saw the young man standing there with the revolver in his hand, the problem was solved. Mr. Vail was not at home at the time, but he returned soon afterward when his wife related her exciting experience.

The young man has been interviewed regarding the matter and he has promised to settle for all damages. Mr. Vail's house is directly back of the one occupied by Mr. Dickenson and the bullet did not have far to travel. It has been decided that in the future some other method for killing cats will be adopted and thus avoid all danger.

CAMERA CLUB AFFAIRS.

Gifted Members Will Entertain the Other Fellows.

The Plainfield Camera Club is planning to open the season for the club with a series of entertainments. The members have been hoping to do this for some time, but it has now been decided to hold the first entertainment about the first of February in the club hall in the Babcock building. The Midmer Glee Club, of this city, will give several selections and then Oscar Bunker Teale, who is a member of the club, will exhibit his skill as a prestidigatateur. Although it is not generally known, he is very expert at it and can show many wonderful tricks. Miss Anna Teale will also assist in the programme as a reader.

DINED MIDST YELLOW.

Councilman and Mrs. E. T. Barrows Gave a Dinner Party Last Week.

Councilman E. T. Barrows and wife, of West Eighth street, gave a dinner party last week at their home in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Walter McGee who sailed for Europe on Saturday. The affair was a thoroughly delightful one. The decorations were entirely yellow and were very pretty. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Walter McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McGee, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Ladd, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Andre s, Mr. and Mrs. Barrows.

IGNORANCE NO EXCUSE.

Lasser Fined $10 for Keeping a Nickel-in-the-Slot Machine.

The first indictment for maintaining a nickel in-the-slot machine ever tried in Middlesex county, and probably in the State, was tried in court before Judge Woodbridge Strong, last week. The prisoner was Leonard Lasser, who keeps a cigar and candy store on Somerset street. Lasser pleaded ignorance of the law as his defence. He was found guilty and fined $10, with costs, bringing the amount up to $35.18.

Retail Merchants in Session.

The nineteenth semi-annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Protective Association of New Jersey was held in New Brunswick last week. There were seventy-five delegates present from cities in all parts of the State. The visitors were welcomed by Mayor Nicholas Williamson. Reports of committees and officers were made at the morning session, and in the afternoon the election resulted in the choice of Peter S. VanAnglen, of New Brunswick, as president, and M. Lyanovich, of Paterson, as vice-president. Robert W. Barnes and J. A. Smith, of this city, were in attendance.

At Work in Earnest.

The Elizabeth and Westfield Traction Company has opened an office in Elizabeth, and the canvass for property holders' consent to lay tracks on Westfield avenue has been begun in earnest. Nearly half as many signers as are needed have been secured.

ARREST FOLLOWED FIGHT.

THE CASE THROWN OUT OF COURT.

Justice Newcorn Was Unable to Learn Head or Tail to the Affair.

The assault and battery case of George Lewis against Adolph Barry, came up in Justice Newcorn's court Thursday afternoon. The plaintiff was represented by Lawyer Swackhamer, and the defendant was represented by Lawyer Murphy. It appears that about a week before the two men met at the Swift & Co. beef house on East Third street, and in some way became engare in a dispute, which eventually ended in a fight. As a result Lewis got the worst of the deal and he commenced action against the man who had knocked him out. When the case was tried Thursday it seemed almost impossible to learn what caused the fight, and after the case had been heard on both sides, Justice Neweorn decided that the case should go to the city court, if anywhere, and he was not sure that there was enough in the case to have it tried there. The case was in consequence thrown out.

MUST PAY A COMMISSION

REAL ESTATE AGENT WINS A SUIT AGAINST A PROPERTY OWNER.

William Davison Claims to Have Engineered a Deal Whereby David Hand Sold a Lot—Latter Didn't Want to Settle.

The question of the commission is an all important one to the real estate agent, and any attempt to deprive him of it will be fought with all its strength. That is what William Davison, the Netherwood real estate agent, claims that David Hand, of this city, tried to do, and to prevent him a suit was commenced Wednesday afternoon in Justice Nodyne's court, and after hearing the testimony, the latter rendered his decision in favor of the real estate agent.

David Hand owned some property and some time ago he went to Mr Davison and asked him to look out for a purchaser for the property After waiting a short time, Mr. Davison found in Herbert L. Moodey, of Watchung avenue, a would-be purchaser. Mr. Hand and Mr. Moodey had a personal conference on the subject, which finally resulted in the two parties coming to an agreement, and the sale was consummated. Davison wasn't counted in the deal, and was given no commission.

He seriously objected to that, and demanded his commission from Mr. Hand. The latter refused to pay him on the grounds that he claimed that he had arranged the sale himself. Mr. Davison then consulted his lawyer, S. S. Swackhamer, and a suit was started as mentioned above by Mr. Davison, in which he asked for damages for his time and trouble spent in assisting in the arrangement of the deal. The case was tried yesterday afternoon and a verdict was brought in for the plaintiff.

JUNIOR COUNCIL INSTITUTED.

The New Lodge Located at Gallia and Started Off by State Warden Long.

Fairview Council, No. 218, Jr. O. U. A. M., of Gallia, Somerset county, was instituted Wednesday by State Warden F. A. Long, of Franklin Council, this city. The new council starts off with a membership of 18, and their officers are as follows:

Past councilor, J. Bormann; councilor, N. H. Heideloff; vice-councilor, H. Zeglio; recording secretary, R. Mc Kenzie; financial secretary, F. Kohl; treasurer, P. C. Voorhies.

The work of instituting was performed by the team from Franklin Council, under the direction of Captain Cook.

After the business of the evening a bountiful collation was served, and it was nearly daylight when the members from this city reached home.

SENATE LODGE'S INSTALLATION.

Recently Elected Officers Take Their Chairs.

District Deputy Hannock, of Newark, was present at the meeting of Senate Lodge, No. 3542, Knights of Honor, Thursday, and installed the recently elected officers in the lodge. The officers installed were past dictator, Thaddeus C. Smith; dictator, Benjamin P. Western; assistant dictator, John H. an Middlesworth; vice dictator, E. B. Ryder; reporter, R. A. Frey; financial reporter, John H. Doane; treasurer, E. G. Smith; chaplain, Edwin W. Conklin; guide, James R. Phillips; sentinel, Frank W. Dodge.

Three candidates were also initiated and one new member was elected to membership. The usual social entertainment followed and the members spent a very enjoyable evening.

Sunday Closing Law Enforced.

Summit Township officials have ordered Police Captain Stewart to inform all stores that are in the habit of keeping open on Sunday for the sale of confectionery, tobacco, cigars and temperance drinks that they must close. These stores do a thriving business on Sunday in the sale of cigars and tobacco, but it is not against these that the officials have directed their commands, but against the sale of "hard cider," which is sold largely on this day.

HYMENTIES A LOVE KNOT

A PLAINFIELDER TAKES A BOUND BROOK BELLE FOR HIS WIFE.

Alonzo Fowler Brokaw the Groom and Miss Emma May Giddes the Bride—Ceremony Performed at Bride's Home.

A charming wedding took place last Wednesday at the home of the bride's parents, Bound Brook, when Miss Emma May Giddes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abram Giddes, and Alonzo Fowler Brokaw, of Grove street, this city, were united in marriage by Rev. Mr. Dalley, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, of Bound Brook.

The ceremony was performed at 6:30 in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends. While the strains of the Lohengrin wedding march were being played by Miss May Conroy, of North Plainfield, the party entered the parlor, which was arranged with a profusion of evergreens and white lillies so as to form a bower.

The ushers, Elmer Giddes, of Dunellen, and Chauncey F. Stout, of Plainfield, cousins of the bride, preceded the party, and they were followed by Miss Jennie Stevens, of Hagerstown, Md., as bridesmaid, and Albert L. Giddes, brother of the bride, as best man, who were attended by Miss Addie L. Giddes, sister of the bride, and Clarence Brokaw, brother of the groom. The party then formed about the bower of flowers, where the ceremony was performed.

The bride was gowned in purple broadcloth trimmed with white satin and chiffon, and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridemaid was gowned in white organdie over white silk, and carried a bouquet of white carnations, while her attendant was gowned in white swiss trimmed with white ribbon, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations.

After the ceremony congratulations were offered to the happy couple and a wedding supper followed. The bride and groom left on the 8:15 train for an extended tour, and on their return they will take up their residence on Grove street in this city.

A costly collection of presents were received by Mr. and Mrs. Brokaw from their friends. The groom is a valued employe of the Plainfield Electric Light Company.

The guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Abram Giddes, parents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Brokaw, parents of the groom. Miss Amos Giddes, A. E. Giddes and wife, Nelson Giles and wife, Albert Giddes, Addie L. Giddes, I. W. Stout, J. H. Johnson and wife, Miss Nora B. Henderson, Mr. Chas. McNabb, Mr. and Mrs. M. VanPelt, Miss Katie Sebring, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dunn, Jacob Sebring, Chas P. Sebring and wife, Miss Nellie Martin, Geo. F. Gillespie, Albert Brokaw and wife, Bound Brook; Clarence Brokaw, Miss E. VanArsdale, Miss Annie VanArsdale, Miss Elizabeth VanArsdale, H. DeMott and wife, Kezzie DeMott, W. C. Smalley and wife, Chauncey F. Stout, Plainfield; Miss Bertha Anthony, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Anthony, Lamington N. J.; Rev. and Mrs. Gardner Ewing, Hawthorne, N. J; David West, Hanover, N. J; Mr. and Mrs. I. T. Giddes, Elmer Giddes, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Giddes, Miss Sadie Giles, Dunellen; Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Paddock, Mrs. W. Elliott, Miss A. Bowers, Brooklyn; Miss Jennie Stevens, Hagerstown, Md; Dr. J. V. B. Green, Mr. J. H. Giles, New York; W. Cook, L. Skinner, Mrs. C. W. Wilson, Clifford Giles, Fred Giles, Benjamin Giles, J. V. Giles, Bridgeport, Conn; Will Giles, Denver, Col.; Gardner Ewing, Jesse Ewing, Hopewell; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Perrine, Miss Martha Perrine, Martinville, N. J; Jacob Giddes, Benjamin Giddes, Amos Giddes, Liberty Corner.

MANAGER WILLEY TO LEAVE.

Unable to Make a Profit Out of Music Hall at Present Terms.

Unless there is some change in his intentions between now and February 6th, George H. Willey will retire as manager of Music Hall on that date. Mr. Willey has been manager of the theatre since the opening of the present season and though he has worked hard and has presented a very fair lot of attractions, and had arranged for the appearance of some of the best companies on the road before the end of the season, he finds he is under too heavy expense to make both ends meet and at the same time make a fair profit from the enterprise. He has been negotiating with C. H. Stillman, owner of the hall, to make some concessions, but the latter is not disposed to do so and Mr. Willey declares his intention to retire as soon as the contract is filled for the last show that he has booked.

Lost $40 in a Raid.

A Park avenue and East Front street merchant were among those who were caught in the raid at Hill's pool room on Waverly road, Thursday. The Park avenue man lost $40 in the shuffle and excitement but the East Front street man came out a little better and got his checks cashed.

BLACK FACES AND JOKES

CRESCENT WHEELMEN WILL HAVE A GREAT MINSTREL SHOW.

The Rehearsals Now Going On—An Old Time Funny First Part—To End With a Genuine Cake Walk For a Prize.

The Crescent Wheelmen's minstrels are still a thing of the future, but the prospects for a successful show are very bright and everything points to an evening of pleasure and delight The show last year was excellent, but it promises to be better on this occasion. The funny things will be funny, the spectacular effects will be up to date and the music and songs will be new and catchy, which makes up for a multitude of other things.

The general plan of the show has been arranged and some of the details have been looked after. The committee are now busy directing the efforts of the wheelmen who are thoroughly interested in their work of trying to make the event the success of the season. Rehearsals are held almost every evening and progress is being made by the different participants in the proposed entertainment. The first rehearsal in Music Hall was held last evening.

The general plan of the minstrel show will be practically the same as that of last year. First will come the regulation first part. The audience will be greeted as the curtain rises by the chorus, dazzling in their fancy costumes, and indistinguishable, due to a plentiful use of burnt cork. A word from the interlocutor, George H. Wiley, will start the grand overture by the orchestra and the chorus, while a double quartette of dusky minstrels will execute a little drill, followed by a dance. Then the grand finale and the overture is over and the end men have a chance to shoot off their jokes in the most approved style. Six solos will be interspersed in the witty remarks of bones and tambo. They will all be something new and attractive, while the soloists include most of Plainfield's best masculine voices.

Part second will be devoted to the specialties which have not been definitely decided upon as yet but they will include a new bare back act by Robert Whitaker, as described in the last Light Company.

The grand ending of the show will be the cake walk which is promised to be the feature of the evening. It will be given by ten couples from the club, dressed most gaudily as the swellest "cull'ed" ladies and gentlemen. Men like S. P. T. Wilbur will float about on the arm of someone else about the build of Frank Jones, who will impersonate the lucky escort. Under the guidance of the interlocutor of the other scene the long procession will move about the stage and then line up against the wall while the individual couples will be given a chance to show their own specialties in the line of walking and make an attempt for the cake, for there's going to be a real cake in the show and the contest for it will be real. That will end the night's programme and if the people of Plainfield are not satisfied by that time then there will be something radically wrong with them.

A CHRISTIAN WOMAN DEAD.

Mrs. James H. Line Succumbs to the Ravages of Bright's Disease.

The death of Mrs. James H. Line, of Duer street, occurred Friday at 12.25, after a long and serious illness from Bright's disease. During the past few months she had not been out of the house and towards the last she was only conscious at times. At the time of her death she was in an unconscious condition. During her long illness she was extremely patient. She was a faithful member of the First M. E. church, and whenever she was able she always attended the services regularly. In her home life she was a loving mother and her carefulness in looking after the household duties when able was a marked feature of her life.

Mrs. Line was the daughter of the late W. F. Harris, of this city, and she was born in Plainfield fifty years ago. Last summer she went to Newburg-on-the-Hudson, to visit her sister. The trip did not seem to do her much good, for afterward she became worse.

A FAMILY RECEPTION

A Pleasant Affair at the House of Thomas Wesley.

A pleasant family reception was given at the residence of Mr. Thomas M. Neely, of Watchung avenue, Thursnight. The guests spent a delightful evening. The entertainment consisted of singing, music and dancing. A supper was served for the guests at midnight. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Kenney, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Berkaw, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. David Kenney, Mr. and Mrs. James E. Baily, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carney, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Kenney, Mr. and Mrs. James Harper, Mr. Joseph Gavin, Miss Laura Powers, Mr. Dennis Gavin, Miss Eliza Gavin, Miss Ella Mullen, all of this city and the borough. Music was rendered by Mrs. O'Reilly.

"THE TRAIN," HE YELLED.

PORTER MARTIN RESCUES A WOMAN.

She Was Rushing Headlong in Front of an Oncoming Blue Liner.

There was a narrow escape from a fatality at the North Avenue station which was only prevented by the quickness of Edward Martin, the genial porter at the station, Thursday. The eastbound local train, due in Plainfield at 8:48, has just pulled into the station when the westbound Blue Line flier, due at 8:44, came up to the station four minutes late. As soon as the train for New York reached the station, a woman who has been visiting at the home of Frank W. Miles, of Somerset street, started for the train. She did not notice the other approaching train and was about to step directly in its path, when Mr. Martin came to the rescue. He had taken the situation in at a glance and caught the woman by the arm and dragged her away. Completely astonished by such treatment, the woman, who had not yet seen the approaching train, struggled to escape from Mr. Martin's grasp.

"The train," he shouted, and then she saw her narrow escape from perhaps fatal injury, and returned to the platform.

AFTER MAYOR BEN AGAIN

AN EFFORT BEING MADE TO GET HIM TO ACCEPT A RENOMINATION.

Ex-Councilman Emmons Declines to Allow His Name to be Used for the Mayoralty—Gossip About Other Officers.

The pulse of the borough government is beating so regular that one would never think that a very important election is near at hand. The minds of those usually interested in this part of the affairs of the borough have been taken up with other things, consequently there has not been much time for anything else. The election is going to take place, however, on Tuesday, March 9th, if everything moves along in the natural way.

The first position to fill is that of Mayor, for the term of B. A. Hegeman, Jr., will expire at that time. Now, Mr. Hegeman says that he will not take office again under any consideration, but he has made a most efficient official and his friends will not give up hope. They say that he must "go again" and they will not take no for an answer. Perhaps the unusual quietness of the party leaders is due to the fact that they are sure they can get His Honor to accept another term. Thus far, no one has appeared, who is anxious for the office, and P. A. Emmons, the genial and well-liked boroughite, has declined the honor most emphatically. The coming year for the borough will be a most important one, for more than likely the question of annexation will come up, and those who do not favor it are very anxious that the chief executive should be a man that is with them on that score. In this respect, the present Mayor is all right, as well as in many other respects, and a change is not desired by them.

The next change in the list is in the council, which will be vacated by Messrs. Peck and Valiant. Now, as far as can be learned these two councilmen have signified no intention of going back again, at the same time they have expressed no desire to retire from the office. In regard to a change in this body the sentiment seems to be that it is possible that new men would not carry out the party's ideas. The above two men are considered to be very conscientious and exceedingly conservative in their movements and if a change is made it is feared that something very different may be secured.

There is one commissioner of appeal to be elected and a Justice of the Peace to take the place of Mr. Karet, who has moved out of the borough. As yet there has been no great rush for these offices and there is not likely to be, as the money consideration is so small.

In a Serious Condition.

William McCarthy, of Westfield, received word Friday that his daughter Nellie was ill at the Harlem Hospital. When he arrived at the hospital he found his daughter in a precarious condition, suffering from the results of a criminal operation. The girl has been employed in Plainfield for several months past, and had not been seen much by her family. She was taken to the hospital on Monday, and her symptoms aroused the suspicion of the hospital physicians, but her condition was so desperate that she could make no statement.

Must Stand Trial.

Judge Fitzgerald, of New York, Wednesday handed down his decision overruling the demurrer to the indictments against the officers of the American Tobacco Company. The charge made in the indictment was that the officers were guilty of a conspiracy. Among the men indicted is Josiah Brown, of this city. The indictments were filed last May Joseph H. Choate and William W. Fuller represented the tobacco men. The men under under indictment will now have to stand trial.

TRIBUTE TO THE DEAD

THE FUNERAL OF MRS. A. I. MARTINE LARGELY ATTENDED.

Sermon by Rev William E. Davis who Eulogized Her Life and Efforts in Loving Terms—Interment at Fresh Pond.

Probably never before in the history of Dunellen has such a concourse of people gathered together as that which met in the Presbyterian church Friday afternoon, when the funeral of the late Mrs A. I. Martine, the wife of the pastor of the church, took place. The edifice was filled to its utmost capacity with relatives and friends of the family. Many who had known her in life had gathered to pay their last respects to her memory.

At the house a brief prayer was offered, after which the remains were then-borne into the church on the shoulders of four of the elders, A. J. Whitney, M. Rarick, T. C. Bodine and J. Low, and deposited in front of the altar. Rev. Dr. Hart, pastor of the Dutch Reformed church, at Neshanic, and a life long friend of the deceased, conducted the service, and Rev. Mr. Orchard, pastor of the M. E. church, at Dunellen, offered prayer. A quartette composed of Mrs. Abbott, soprano; Miss Adele Harris, contralto; E. Low, tenor, and Edward Taylor, bass, rendered beautiful and appropriate music. Rev. Mr. Peterson, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, at New Market, read the Scripture lesson, and Rev. William E. Davis, pastor of the Dutch Reformed church at Lebanon, preached the sermon. The preacher paid a fine tribute to the departed dead, whom he characterized as a true Christian woman, a kind and loving wife and mother, and one endowed with the riches of Christianity. No one could tell the sincerity of her Christian life which in trouble it was her support, and in joy it was her great pleasure to make others happy. None were ever better fitted by nature and grace to fill the honors of wife and mother. Untiring in her efforts she was truly helpful to her husband in administering the Gospel; wise in counsel, cheering in disposition, she lifted burdens from the shoulders of the pastor. In social life her every expression was to give joy and pleasure to these about her.

Rev. Mr. Hart, of Neshanic, followed with a few remarks, and Rev. Mr. Fletcher, pastor of the Baptist church at New Market, made the concluding prayer. The choir then sang "Looking this Way," and Rev. A. F. Todd, of Dunellen, pronounced the benediction.

An opportunity was then given relatives and friends to look for the last time upon the features of the departed.

The remains were taken to Flemington this morning for interment in the family plot.

A MILITARY DISPLAY.

High School Cadets Ready to Show How Accomplished They Are.

There has been lots of hard work done by the members of the Plainfield High School Cadet Company and the cadets are now planning to give their relatives and friends a chance to see what they have accomplished during the winter. An exhibition drill will be held on the evening of Thursday February 22, at the Jersey Cycle Academy, when the cadets meet for drill every week. Each member of the company will be given the privilege of inviting a certain number of his friends to attend the drill, and it is the intention of the officers to make the drill a strictly military affair. A sentinel will be detailed at the door to receive the guests.

The company's treasury is to be used to go to the expense of hiring the academy, but Captain Smith assures everybody that the evening will be a warm one.

Westfield Firemen Incorporated.

Articles of incorporation were filed Thursday, with County Clerk Howard, by the Exempt Firemen's Association of Westfield. The officers named were: Christopher W. Harden, president; Albert Wilcox, vice-president; Irving I. Ross, secretary; Dr. Wilbur Gale, treasurer; H. B. Kurtz, C. P. Wilcox, J. P. English, Isaac Seeley and J. W. Wilcox, trustees.

A Missing Contract.

The following corporations were organized at Trenton Wednesday: The Pasco Grande Mining company of New Market, Middlesex county, with a capital stock of $12,000. The paid-up stock is $6,000 and the incorporators are John E. Whiting, Boston, Mass.; D. F. Blackford, New Market, and Benjamin F. Conway. It will acquire timber and mining lands.

An Evening at Euchre.

The members of the West End Euchre Club met at the home of Miss Minnie Smith, of West Front street, Friday. About twenty young people were present and played euchre until 10.30 o'clock, when refreshments were served. Mrs. Wyckoff won the lady's prize, Mrs. Robert Laughlin won second prize. Harry Conrad won first gentleman's prize and Mr. Wyckoff won second prize.

THE TREASURER RESIGNS

ALEX TITSWORTH RETIRES AFTER SEVERAL YEARS SERVICE.

His Feeble Health Induces Him to Relinquish the Duties of Public Office—His Place to be Filled by the Council.

Alex. Titsworth, one of the oldest elective city officials of Plainfield, in point of continuous service, resigned from the office of City Treasurer in the following letter to Mayor Fisk Monday afternoon:

Plainfield, N. J., Jan. 20th, 1897.
To the Honorable C. J. Fisk, Mayor of the City of Plainfield:

Dear Sir—On account of my feeble health I find myself unable to perform the duties of the office of treasurer of the city of Plainfield, and I therefore feel compelled to tender to you my resignation as treasurer, to take effect immediately.

Yours respectfully,
A. Titsworth.

Mr. Titsworth succeeded the late Jeremiah Van Winkle as City Treasurer, and has been filling the office in a satisfactory manner for twelve years, being elected frequently without opposition and always by large majorities. Last December he was elected by the largest majority on the Republican ticket, having only one opponent in the Socialist-Labor party candidate.

Mr. Titsworth is in the cigar and confectionery business on North avenue, and has been in ill health for some time.

In consequence of the above it will be necessary that a special meeting of the Common Council be held very soon to take action on the resignation of Mr. Titsworth, and it is possible that the meeting will be held on Tuesday or Friday evening of this week.

FUNERAL OF MRS. LINE.

Sad Obsequies Over the Remains of the Marshal's Wife.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. Line were held from the house, Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and there was a very large attendance of relatives and friends. Rev. Cornelius Schenck, D.D., officiated, and made remarks appropriate to the occasion from the text "Cast Thy burden Upon the Lord." He offered words of comfort and consolation to the bereaved ones and told them to put their trust in the Lord who does all things for the best. At the close of the remarks Mr. Schenck offered a beautiful prayer, in which he invoked the Divine blessing on all present as well as the afflicted ones.

The floral tributes were many and very beautiful, and consisted chiefly of cut flowers. There was also a wreath bearing the word "Peace."

Interment was in the Plainfield avenue cemetery.

PROMISED TO DO BETTER.

Sentence Was Then Suspended on Harney Tracy by Judge DeMeza.

Barney Tracy, who was arrested some time ago for purchasing liquor for two small boys last Christmas Day, was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza last Monday. The two boys, one 14 years and the other 11 years old, were present and one said that Tracy had received his money and got the whiskey which the boys had drank with very disastrous results.

Tracy did not remember anything about it and the Judge finally suspended sentence after Tracy showed a desire to do better in the future and leave such matters alone.

SLIPPED AND STRUCK HIS HEAD.

D. N. Groendyke Injured as He Was Getting Into His Carriage.

D. N. Groendyke, of Mercer avenue, North Plainfield, was quite severely injured while returning from the morning service in the Crescent Avenue church, Sunday morning. He had descended the steps leading from the edifice and was about to step into his carriage, when he slipped and fell on the icy pavement, striking on the back of his head. He was rendered unconscious by the fall, and was rapidly taken to Dr. E. W. Hedge's office on the opposite side of the street. Upon examination it was found that no bones had been broken, but the patient was suffering from the shock.

—Sometime ago the borough authorities decided to lay a stone walk in front of the First Church of Christ, on Grove street. As yet the walk has not been put down and the people are wondering whether it will be.

TWO LEAGUES TALKED OF PLAINFIELD LIKELY TO HAVE RATTLING GOOD BALL TEAMS.

Ted Sullivan, at the Head of the State League, Visited This City Saturday to Interest the Cranks in His Scheme.

From present appearances, Plainfield will see more of baseball this coming season than it has for several years. There are two leagues being arranged, in both of which it is hoped that Plainfield will enter a team. One is the New Jersey State League, organized under the National agreement, an association of professional clubs which will give the people in the cities in the league several exhibitions of baseball a week. The other is a league composed of semi-professional teams, to play only on Saturdays and holidays.

The movement to organize a New Jersey State League has been already noticed in these columns, as has also the fact that a team was to go into the league from this city if possible. The principal promoters of the proposed league are Ted D. Sullivan and Pat Powderly. Mr. Sullivan came to Plainfield Saturday afternoon and paid a visit to the Daily Press office where he had a conference with the sporting editor of The Press relative to the league and the chances of Plainfield being represented in it.

Mr. Sullivan explained some of the plans of the proposed organization and the steps already taken to place it on a firm foundation. The league is expected to consist of six clubs, probably Trenton, Plainfield, Elizabeth, Millville, New Brunswick and Bridgeton. The teams are to be composed of professional players and they are to play almost every day. Each club will play two games at some other city at a time and, in case the city is some distance from the home city, the schedule will be so arranged that the visiting team will stop at the city in the league which is nearest to it before returning home. The schedule will be so arranged as to give each team at least two games a week in their own town, or perhaps more. By making the distance to be travelled between the games as short as possible, the expenses will be materially reduced.

Each home club will give a guarantee to the visiting club, or in case one third of the gate receipts exceeds that amount, then the third will be turned over to the visiting team. On holidays the clubs will divide the gate receipts. The umpires are to be appointed by the league and paid by the two clubs playing. The officers of the league will be a president, a secretary and treasurer. The first two will have most of the work of the league to do, looking after the scores, the umpires, protested games and the like and will receive salaries.

It is expected that the clubs in the various cities will be supported by stock companies and it was in relation to this that Mr. Sullivan came to Plainfield Saturday. While B. A. Mumford, Jr., has been talking of going into the league, he has taken no action in the matter as he knew very little of the plans of the proposed league, outside of the fact that it was a State league. Accompanied by the sporting editor, Mr. Sullivan went to see Mr. Mumford and consulted him regarding the matter. As a meeting of the league is to be held in Trenton this week, Mr. Sullivan would like to have Plainfield represented. After all the matter over with Mr. Mumford, the latter decided that it would be impossible for the team which he is organizing to go into the league as most of the players can only play on Saturday afternoons and holidays.

Mr. Sullivan said the promoters of the league were very anxious for Plainfield to have a team in the league as the reputation of the people of this city as baseball cranks is well and widely known. He was sure that a team rightly managed would be a financial success, as well as a success from the baseball point of view, and he hoped that the citizens would take hold of the matter and form a stock company and push the scheme through with their old-time vigor. Mr. Sullivan has several well-known baseball enthusiasts in mind, one of whom he will select to try and push the formation of a club in this city, for he believes that the Plainfield people have not lost all their love for the game and will turn out and give generous support to a good team, should it be formed.

The other league in which Mr. Mumford's team will probably enter, is being formed of semi professional teams form this part of New Jersey to play only on Saturdays and holidays. The teams that are likely to go into this latter movement are Plainfield, Orange, Bergen Point, Elizabeth, Matchen and Dunellen. The details of this league have not been completed yet arranged, but will be published in the course of a month.

Surprised at Bound Brook.

A surprise birthday party was given by Mrs. E. F. Spaulding in honor of her daughter, Miss Florence L. Spaulding, Saturday evening, at her home in Bound Brook. There were a number present from this city, Somerville and Bound Brook. A party of nine went from Plainfield in a wagonette to attend the party.

SHOVING QUEER MONEY

THOMAS CALLAHAN RECEIVED A COIN THAT WAS NO GOOD.

Reported to the Police Too Late and Later Were Unable to Capture the Crooks—Noticeable Defect Was Light Weight.

Though the police were unable to obtain positive evidence of more than one case, it is believed that considerable counterfeit money was passed in this city Saturday afternoon.

It was about 3:30 o'clock when a man walked into Thomas Callahan's grocery store on Richmond street and asked for a can of condensed milk. At first he drew out a roll of bills to pay for it, and then, as if suddenly struck with the thought that he had some silver, he delved down into his trousers pocket and brought up a handful of coin. He picked out a shiny silver dollar and received ninety cents in change. Then he walked out, crossed the street and met a companion. The two walked off towards Front street.

They had not yet disappeared from sight when the thought commenced to dawn on Mr. Callahan that the dollar did not seem to have its usual weight. He dropped the coin into his hand again and raised his hand up and down in a slow, methodical way as a man will do when guessing at weight. The dollar seemed to be unusually light in weight. It was finally compared with a genuine coin and quickly the contrast between the two could be seen. Outside of the weight it was a very good counterfeit. Mr. Callahan did not notify the police for a couple of hours.

After he did, however, Sergeant Kiely notified all the merchants in the city to be on the lookout for the "shovers of the queer." The fellow who passed the coin was described as being of medium height and weight and wearing a moustache. He was attired in a blue overcoat, derby hat and his shoes were covered with mud.

The police scoured the city for several hours looking for the culprits, but they were non est. Roundsman Frederickson visited the Clinton avenue station at 5:30 o'clock, and there was informed that a man answering the description of the above was about the station a half hour before, but had gone in the direction of Dunellen sometime before the officer arrived.

No further trace was secured.

F. H. Hebard, the Watchung avenue druggist, on investigating his cash, also found a counterfeit dollar, but when it was passed on him or by whom he has not the slightest idea.

TOOK HENS AND CABBAGES.

A MIDNIGHT RAID AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

Peaceable Citizens Wake up to Find Themselves Victims of Thievery.

Saturday night was cold and stormy, but it did not deter the evil disposed from making their rounds at Scotch Plains in the absence of any authorized "cop" and while the good people reposed peacefully "in the arms of Morpheus," Some rascal raided John Cook's hen roost that night and carried away a big, black Spanish rooster, and to make matters worse, his stock of well preserved cabbage was reduced to the extent of some 200 heads. It is evident that the thief or thieves had a wagon to carry away their booty. The cabbage had been buried with the roots up and they were torn bodily from the ground. The snow yesterday morning covered up the wagon tracks, so nothing was left by which the thieves could be traced.

In connection with the above, it may be stated that John F. Miller, Superintendent for John Cook, had some valuable yellow pine timber carried away the same night, and Billy Lee's well-guarded hen roost was broken into, but a well-trained bull-dog frightened away the marauders before accomplishing their design.

SEPTEMBER WEDDING ANNOUNCED.

Marriage of Jennie Shepherd and S. C. Terry, Jr., Solemnized Long Ago.

The many friends of Miss Jennie Shepherd, of Warren street, and Samuel C. Terry, Jr., of East Third street, are now congratulating them, for they were married Sept. 27th, 1896, by Rev Mr. Kerr, at the home of the latter in Elizabeth. A few days ago the facts became known and it caused quite a surprise. Both of the contracting parties are well-known in this city and have a large circle of friends. For the present they will live at the home of the groom on East Third street, and in the spring they will go to housekeeping.

—A leader's corps was organized at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium on Thursday evening by a number of the members. John Lewis was elected president and C. E. A. Haywood secretary. The colors selected were blue and white.

—B. A. McCullough, of North Plainfield, who is refitting the interior of the old Catholic church in Trenton, expects to complete the work within the next fortnight. Adolph Lewold and Leopold Kuntz, of this city, are superintending the work. The material is all gotten out at McCullough's mill in North Plainfield, and is all ready for joining together when it arrives at the church.

CAN'T PAY PARSON WELLS

LATE CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATE'S SALARY IS OVERDUE $300

Some of His Flock at Liberty Corners Were Offended When He Went Into Politics—Now They Wants New Pastor.

There is one remark oftener heard in the little hamlet of Liberty Corner, these days than any other, and that is that "preaching and politics won't mix." Liberty Corner consists of some sixty buildings, many of them unoccupied, with two stores, two blacksmith shops and a little tobacco shop representing its business interests.

It is in Somerset county, about five miles from the railroad, and first attracted the attention of the outside world last fall, when the Rev. John A. Wells, the pastor of the Presbyterian church there, accepted the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Third district and stumped the district against his successful rival, Benjamin F. Howell, of New Brunswick. There is only one church in the village, but ever since election the attendance has been steadily on the decline, and last Sunday there were hardly a score of parishioners in their pews, and, what is more, the income is falling off all the time, until the congregation now owes the pastor $300 back salary, and the elders have called upon him and confessed their inability to see their way to paying it.

There are those who say that all this trouble is due to the fact that many of the flock didn't like the idea of having their minister in politics, but Mr. Wells says this has nothing at all to do with it, and points out as a vindication of his conduct that he polled the full democratic vote of the Liberty Corner district and several Republican votes besides. He attributes it all to the poverty of the community, owing to the demonetization of silver and the recent death or removal of many of the more prosperous members. He says there is no one in the church who is worth $10,000.

When he received the nomination he applied for a four weeks' vacation and it was granted without objection, and he was careful never to speak in Liberty Corner nor attend any meetings there during the campaign, as he thought that would be improper. A great sensation was caused in the township by a report that after a meeting at New Brunswick he had spent the evening as the guest of R. H. Becker, a saloon keeper of that place, but when he came home he explained that while Mr. Becker sold liquor he did it by the wholesale and was a highly respected business man. He was the president of the local Bryan club, and Mr. Wells said he didn't know the nature of his business until he was within his doors, where former Governor Abbott and General Franz Sigel, he declared, had also been entertained.

Mr. Wells' salary is $600 and the debt has been accumulating for about three years. He told the elders that he was willing to forgive it, if necessary, and would stay on at any salary at which he could live, and the matter will come up at the parish meeting on February 7th, when it is expected that there will be a general expression of opinion of the pastor's recent course before it is settled. The elders of the church are: John Ferdinand Boyle, John Hayes, William A. Compton and H. H. Apgar. All are farmers except Mr. Compton. He is a commercial traveller.

Mr. Boyle lives near the church and he said, Sunday, there had been considerable dissatisfaction engendered by the minister's activity in politics, and, for his own part, he wanted another pastor. He said that when Mr. Wells started on his stump he tried to get another to take his place, and when he told the clergyman the circumstances he refused to fill the pulpit while the dominie was abroad in such work, and the result was that they had no minister at all until after the votes were counted.

FINED FOR HIS SON'S INDISCRETION.

A Rabbit Penned Up on the Premises of Henry Myers at Mountainside.

A few days ago a young son of Henry Myers, a poor farmer of Mountainside, five miles from this city, captured a wild rabbit and penned it up in the barn, the little fellow intending to tame it as a pet. He did not know that he was violating a game law by doing this, and in some manner Game and Fish Warden Brown learned that the rabbit was being held on the premises. He made an investigation and thereat arrested Myers for violating the game laws. Myers was taken before Justice Collins at Westfield where he claimed that he did not know that the rabbit was a prisoner on his property. Under the law, however, Justice Collins fined him $10, Saturday.

Police Examined.

The present members of the police department have again been through an examination. It took place last Friday evening and the pedigree of every man was obtained. This was done to secure additional evidence in making up the slate for the coming year.

NO INTENT OF WRONG.

MEYER LEICHTENTRITT EXONERATED FROM A SERIOUS CHARGE.

Commissioner Whitehead Declared That When He Opened Sherman's Letter It Was Natural and No Wrong Intended.

Meyer Leichtentritt, manager for the firm of L. Sternburg & Co., of this city, has been fully exonerated from the charge of tampering with the United States mail, preferred by his former employer, Louis Sherman, of the Sherman Outfitting Company.

The story of his arrest was told in the Press at the time and Friday he was arraigned before Commissioner Whitehead at Newark for a hearing. Mr. Leichtentritt was represented by his counsel, Ex-Judge Henry, of Newark. Mr. Sherman was present at the hearing. He gave as his reason for preferring the charge that his former manager should have known the envelope was addressed to the Sherman Outfitting Co. on account of the color, which was blue, and therefore he must have opened the letter knowing that it was not meant for him. The addressed envelopes sent by the company are blue and Mr. Leichtentritt knew it from experience.

Mr. Leichtentritt explained that the company by which he was now employed used envelopes of that color and other colors and he had a blue envelope of the same tint as the one he opened by mistake and it was addressed to L. Sternburg & Co. Several times during the hearing Mr. Sherman tried to withdraw the charge but the Commissioner declared that once started the examination must be completed.

After hearing the testimony of both sides, the Commissioner dismissed the case, declaring Mr. Leichtentritt not guilty of the alleged crime. The mistake was one, he said, which even he was liable to make and that the circumstances in the case of Mr. Leichtentritt were specially exonerating as he had formerly been manager of the Sherman Outfitting Company.

Mr. Sherman admitted in the hearing that, although Mr. Leichtentritt had handled funds to the amount of several hundred thousands of dollars for the Sherman Outfitting Company, he had never found his accounts a cent out of the way.

SOULS LOST BY MILLIONS.

NEED OF MISSION WORKERS GREAT

Robert Galley Points Out Where Christianity Does Not Flourish.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue church held its monthly missionary meeting last Friday. The meeting was led by R. B. Schoonmaker, who introduced Robert Galley, of Princeton, and turned the meeting over to him.

Mr. Galley spoke words of encouragement and cheer in favor of the work of Foreign missions as well as the following words of inducement for others to give themselves to the work of saving the unconverted in foreign lands:

"The church is now at the time of its 'Kadesh Barnea.' Yes, all the world is now open to receive the gospel of Christ. Everything is ready for us to 'go out into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.' Shall we go and obey this command? or shall we, like the children of Israel, disregard God's commands and lose our 'promised land,' our great opportunity of promoting Christ's kingdom. India, China, Africa and the countries of South America have been opened by the cost of life and it is our duty to carry on the work so courageously begun. Many persons may say: 'Why don't the Christian nations go into these dark nations and convert the inhabitants by introducing their machinery, printing presses and other implements of civilization?

"My dear friends these things will never do the work. It can only be done by the works of the church of God.

"There are in China alone 250 million souls who know not Christ. Two hundred and fifty million. We cannot realize what that number means. There are 913 walled cities in China into which no missionary has ever gone. One person of every three in China dies without Christ.

"Oh, the need of our labors is indeed very great and the call is very clear and plain 'Go ye unto all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'"

Coming Event.

A letter from Fred S. Dunn, who has been at Echo Mountain and Pasadena, California, for nearly three years, states that he expects to start for Plainfield the first week in February. His relatives and many friends here will be glad to see him again. He comes by way of Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, to Chicago thence by B. & O. Royal Blue Line.

—Laine, the Park avenue barber, has arranged to move his shop into a portion of the place now occupied by Rogers, the North avenue cycle dealer. The change will be made in a short time.

Floyd Weaver, of Belvidere, was a guest over Sunday of I. C. Vanatta and family, of East Third street.

WENT UP IN FLAMES.

IN TRYING TO PUT OUT THE FIRE, JOHN LUERSSEN WAS BURNED.

A Lantern Overturned in the Hay Loft and the Whole Structure Was a Mass of Flame in a Few Moments—Live Stock Rescued.

The most serious fire that has occurred in the borough for a long time past broke out last Friday at 5:45 o'clock in the barn owned by Christopher Wise, 90 Grandview. John Luersen, a man employed by Mr. Wise, had occasion to go up stairs in the barn with a lighted lantern, and while there the lantern was overturned, and set fire to the hay, which in an instant was one mass of flames. Luersen tried his best to put the fire out but he failed, and it was barely that he escaped with his life. As it was, his hands and hair were severely scorched. There were eight horses in the barn and several wagons, and it was with the greatest difficulty that these were rescued.

Very soon after the fire broke out an alarm was sent in from Box 122 by E. E. Pope, Jr., and it was not long before the department arrived and had water on the fire. The flames were confined entirely to the barn, which was totally destroyed, as was also a quatity of hay which was packed away in the loft. Among the things destroyed were two sets of double harness, one set of single harness, a mowing machine, several sewing machines and a number of screen doors which were stored away for the winter. The illumination, which could be seen for a great distance, was thought by many to be a more large conflagration. It required about three hours hard work to put the fire out and the borough firemen did noble work in handling the fire and thus saved some valuable property near by.

It is estimated that the loss on the barn and contents will be about $600. The insurance on the same is $200.

LITTLE PEOPLE ENTERTAINED.

Primary Scholars Enjoy an Affair all by Themselves.

The members of the primary department of Miss Scribner and Miss Newton's school on LaGrande avenue were given a very enjoyable party by their teacher, Miss Lyon, at the school Friday afternoon from 4 to 7 o'clock. The first hour was spent by the children in dancing and playing games under the direction of their teacher and the other teachers in the school. Miss Lyon was also assisted by Mrs. Lowe, Mrs. Mead, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Booth, Mrs. Fredrick, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Robert, and Mrs. Northrup. There were about thirty children present at the party.

At five o'clock they gathered in the lower rooms where refreshments were served and each of the children was given a favor which contained a fancy cap. The caps were put on and the children sat down around the little tables where they were served with the refreshments. The chocolate was served in dainty little souvenoir cups which were given to the children as mementoes of the occasion.

The older pupils at the school had been invited to attend the stereopticon entertainment that brought the party to a close. It was given in the rooms of the first floor and consisted of a number of views from all over the world. The lantern was managed by Clement Morgan while Rev. S. P. Simpson gave a very interesting talk on the different views as they were shown.

Ruth Fredericks gave a reading between the two parts of the entertainment.

CAME IN THEIR FINEST.

Drum and Fife Corps Surprise Their Drum Major, Frank Manchester.

Frank Manchester, drum major of the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, was seated in his home on Lafayette place last Friday, when he suddenly heard the sound of drums and fifes. He went to the door to see who it was and to his astonishment he found there the entire corps which had marched over to give him a surprise party. And a complete surprise it was. A number of young ladies had been invited by Mrs. Manchester, who was in the secret, and they soon arrived.

The members of the corps had met at the rooms on West Second street in their new uniforms, worn for the first time, and then taking the trolley car to Lafayette place marched up to the home of their drum major to give him this little surprise. Everybody admired the new uniforms, which are of grey cloth, trimmed with black braid, and with military collar, and the corps presented a very handsome appearance in them.

There were about fifty present and soon they were gliding about to the inspiring music of Eyer's orchestra from Newark. The dancing lasted most of the evening with an intermission while the refreshments were served. Mrs. Manchester had everything prepared and her husband was fairly dazed by the succession of surprises. The members of the corps were out for a good time, however, and the evening passed away very enjoyably to all.

ABOUT THE ANNEXATION

get a low rate it is simply necessary to put the valuation up and vice versa, but no such juggling has occurred in our case. The best judgment obtained from those who ought to be well informed on this subject is that valuations in the city are generally a little below 50 per cent while in the borough they are a li tle above 50 per cent. Union County tax rate for last year was 53 cents on the $100, Somerset county tax rate was 54 cents on the $100. Both of these rates are high —that in Union because of her good roads and that in Somerset because of floods and bad roads. Another mistaken idea prevails as to the comparative expense of maintaining the city. The city rate for 1896 is 50 cents on the $100, this includes police, lights, Board of Health and road or street expenses. The corresponding items in the borough foot up 53 cents on the $1.00, so that in these two important items of "City" and "County" taxes the present rates are lower in the city than in the borough even at existing valuations. These figures may be verified by anyone who will take the trouble to compare the assessors tax bills for 1896. In some other items the reverse is true, as for instance in the Fire Department tax the rate in the city is .22, while it is only .15 in the borough. State and special school taxes in the borough foot up .78, while those in the city including "Bonds tax" are .86. These figures only prove one thing, and that is that taxes in Plainfield and North Plainfield are about equal, and so the question of inequality of taxation can exert no influence against consolidation.

"It has been said that the borough is better off as it is, controlling its own affairs, while if joined to Plainfield it would be but an outlying ward. The borough is too big in property, too strong in influence and already too near the main arteries of the city to be cut off with a shilling in the distribution of spoils. It will not be to the interests of the city to neglect so strong a limb of its being, and as the greatest growth of cities is usually to the westward, we might expect increased development and growth in the borough, thus adding taxable property. The borough with, perhaps, four members in the City Council would be able to hold her own until that time when all lines of separation would be lost, and Green brook would become but a peaceful creek in that amphibious trail called Cedar brook.

"Let us look at some of the reasons in favor of consolidation:

"1—It is one of the fundamental maxims of business and Government that two men should not be employed to do work, which can be done equally as well by one. Two Mayors, two Councils, two clerks, two attorneys, two tax assessors, two collectors, two street commissioners, two chiefs of police, two fire chiefs, two overseers of the poor, are unnecessary in this little circle of ours. It is simply extravagance in time and money. Not one of us would think of keeping up such an organization in his own business.

"2—Joint co operation in building and maintaining sewers and other improvements would reduce the per capita expense and aid in getting the best results. A community of twenty thousand might afford to go to tidewater for sewage disposal, while one of half th population might not. Plainfield' present system is probably the est under existing circumstances but think of the folly of North Plainfield building its own system to tide water, or maintaining separate disposal beds! Are the intelligent taxpayers of the borough ready to buy property in the face of the fact that the city's beds are big enough for two? Will they be willing to employ men to take care of them when the men employed by the city can attend to both? The alternative is to go to tide-water at an expense which makes it prohibitive. Yet who will deny that the borough must in time be sewered? It will not do to rely forever on our gravel soil. It is difficult to convince intelligent people that one portion of a town with cesspools is as good a place to live in as another with sewers.

"3—The administration of justice is retarded by the present condition. The authority of the city and borough police stops at the county line, so that criminals escape capture by flight across the brook. The only magistrates in the borough are justices of the peace, hence important civil and criminal cases must go to Somerville, an inconvenience and expense in time and money. Plainfield has only a city court which has many limitations. Consolidation would probably entitle the city to a district court for cases now tried in Elizabeth. Need one ask for a better reason for union than that it will aid in the administration of justice?

"4—Municipal improvements are retarded by the lack of political co-operation between the two towns. Much of the delay in opening up Watchung avenue was due to this conflict. The streets in the city which lead to the brook are in bad condition, because of neglect and a feeling that if anything is done our neighbor will get the benefit of it. Sycamore avenue in the borough has recently been cut through to Front street at private expense, and it will probably be a difficult matter to get the chairman of the street committee in Plainfield to accept and care for the little spur on his side because those foreigners in the borough will get all the benefit and should pay the tax. No such conditions would arise if we were united. If a bridge is needed across the brook it will not be built until the two boards of chosen (and very precious) freeholders are brought together each in their respective county seats. Think of this kind of home rule! A board of freeholders in Somerville and another in Elizabeth passing on the question whether or not Plainfield can have a bridge for one of its streets!

"5—Free access to the public schools and to the public library is much to be desired. The High School of the city is not free to borough residents. A free library is a fruitful source of cultivation and enlightenment; it is open to the poor as well as to the rich, and the charge which is made for residents of the borough, even though it be small, is nevertheless a barrier to its general use.

"6. The laws that govern cities are not the same as those that govern boroughs, hence where the two are practically merged in one there is an inequality of conditions. The difference in the saloon license tends to drive the saloon into the borough. The laws compel them to close at eleven o'clock at night in the city while in the borough they keep open till twelve and sometimes later. After eleven at night the city empties its saloon refuse into the borough. I have known this to result in so much disorder as to require a special officer to look after the regions of the bridge at night.

"7. A single Board of Health would probably clean the filth from the brook and maintain it in a proper condition. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, and in spite of laws, threats and wrangles the brook is still the same foul and unkept thing —an open letter.

"8. One fire department with all that this implies.

"9. One police department.

"10. Lower taxes because of the increase in the per capita.

"11. The borough is now contributing to build up and extend the business district in the city and without getting any benefit from taxation.

"12. The population of Plainfield is 13,629, that of North Plainfield, 4,879. The influence of Plainfield would be extended The rating is now too low because it is based on the population of the city alone, while in reality the borough should be added. Post offices and other privileges are based on population.

"But you will ask how can union be brought about? The friends of this movement are united only in their desire for consideration by that means which is the most equitable. An act of the Legislature should be the first move, next a vote of the people. Four plans have been proposed, as follows:

"1—Consolidation without changing the county lines.

"2—To take a slice from Somerset county thereby bringing North Plainfield into union.

"3—Adding Plainfield to Somerset county.

"4—A new county."

Attached herewith is a map which has been prepared in aid of this movement and which shows county and municipal lines. Much progress has already been made in cultivating public opinion.

All present were enthusiastic in their determination to promote the consolidation of the City and Borough.

"My daughter, when recovering from an attack of fever, was a great sufferer from pain in the back and hips," writes Louden Grover, of Sardis, Ky. "After using quite a number of remedies without any benefit she tried one bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and it has given entire relief. Chamberlain's Pain Balm is also a certain cure for rheumatism. Sold by T.S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner of Park and North avenues.

THROUGH ITALY BY BIKE.

REV. C. E. HERRING RELATES SOME OF HIS INTERESTING EXPERIENCES.

May be Romantic to Find One's Own Way, But Exciting Sometimes, too, So He Advises Tourists to Get a Guide.

"Under the Sunny Sky of Italy" was the subject of Rev. C. E. Herring's illustrated lecture given at the First Presbyterian church, last Tuesday before a large and interested audience. In one respect the lecture was a decided novelty, for it was unlike most lectures of a similar character. The views were undoubtedly the finest ever witnessed in this city, and they were ardently admired by everyone.

At the start, Mr. Herring told his audience that if anyone ever expected to take a trip abroad he would advise them to secure a first-class guide by all means. He then recommended that they travel by wheel, for it is not only an inexpensive method, but there is an element of freedom about it. One of the great advantages to be gained by this method of travel is that one becomes acquainted with the inner life of the people, their ways and means of living and the language they speak. He said that he and his companion, Fred Bettman, gained a great deal of information by traveling in this way.

A superb view of a handsome cathedral was shown, and Mr. Herring said that a most peculiar thing about it was that the front doors were used for billboards.

An amusing view was that showing the women washing their clothes by the side of the river. In this view there were no less than twenty-five women performing this sort of work, and in connection with this, Mr. Herring said that the Italians seem to adopt extremely hard methods for doing their work.

The speaker gave a thrilling account of a night spent on a mountain in his attempt to reach the top. He was obliged to push his wheel nearly all night and at a late hour he sought shelter at the home of a man who treated him grandly. During the night there was a terrific thunder shower which caused great floods all through that section.

Of Florence, Mr. Herring said, he was very much disappointed, for he had expected to see a great deal more than he did. With Venice he was more than pleased, and especially so with St. Marks.

A peculiar habit practiced in Italy is in the serving of milk. Instead of this commodity being delivered in wagons, the cows and goats are driven along the street and if anyone desires milk the owner stops in front of the house and milks the cow or goat, and in this way serves the milk.

In conclusion several views of a local nature were shown, including Park avenue and the interior of the First Presbyterian church. At the latter place the speaker left his audience, after thanking them for their kind attention.

At an early date Mr. Herring will give a lecture on Rome, which no doubt will be fully as interesting as the one given last evening.

—According to a recent report of the treasurer of the Town Improvement Association this organization has $102 63 in the bank.

THEATRICAL.

O'Dowd's Neighbors, announced to appear at Music Hall presented by Murry and Murphy's comedians, headed by the inimitable Mark Murphy, promises to be one of the best entertainments that has visited our city for years. The comedy enjoyed a long and successful run at both New York city and Chicago and was heartily commended by the press and approved by the public. A large number of new plays were launched on the theatrical boards last year and but few of them are to be again seen this season. O'Dowd's Neighbors, however, are among those who revisit us and from the excellent impression made on the former visit, it no doubt be anxiously looked for by all old friends and many new ones. The organization is as usual headed by Mark Murphy, who has been surrounded by one of the strongest acting companies that could be procured.

Magician Kellar is the only man who ever took a conjurer's show through India and around the world. India is the hot-bed of street fakirs, necromancers and magicians, of all sorts, from the poorest to the most expert of the wonderful Mahatmas, and Mr. Kellar saw them all. His narrations of their weird work are as interesting as tales from the Arabian Nights, but some of the adventures he met, he does not look back upon with pleasure. When in Burbmah he was invited to go to the capital and give an entertainment in the royal audience hall, before the king. The acceptance of the invitation entailed a journey of 700 miles up the Irrawaddy river, from Ranzoon to Mandalay and thence to the Court of Ava. The king expected to see a magician who performed simple tricks, after the manner of his own magicians, but when Mr. Kellar presented some of his spiritualistic cabinet seances, the old monarch declared that he was in league with the devil and caused him to be arrested and detained as a prisoner, together with all of his assistants. After ten days Kellar and his company escaped to Mandalay, with the assistance of Rev. Mr. Walsh, an American missionary at the court of Ava, but all the magical paraphernalia and the cabinet which got him into trouble, are still in the hands of the old king's successor at the palace. Kellar comes to the Music Hall, Friday evening, Jan. 29.

Mothers whose children are troubled with bad colds, croup or whooping-cough will do well to read what Dr. R. E. Robey, of Olney, Mo., says on this subject. He writes: "For years we have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and always keep it in the house. It is regarded in our family as a specific for all kinds of colds and coughs." Sister Ford Presented With a Jewell.

At the meeting of Minerva Temple, Tuesday, the officers previously elected were installed by Supreme Representative and staff, after which P. C. Sister Bowman, on behalf of the temple, presented to Sister Ford a handsome Past Chief's jewel, expressing their united regard.

—There will be a dance at the Park Club on Friday evening.

CRESCENT MINSTRELS.

A FAIR SIZED AUDIENNCE WITNESS A CLEVER SHOW.

Considering the Short Time in Which to Arrange the Features the Performance Was Presented in Very Good Shape.

A fair sized audience attended the minstrel show of the Crescent Wheelmen in Music Hall Tuesday. The heavy snow storm came at a most inopportune time for them and as a result seriously affected the financial end of the show.

The show itself was very good, parts of it more so than others, but taken altogether it was a very creditable performance, especially when considering the short time in which it was arranged.

The staging and costumes were excellent and attracted many favorable comments. The singing in the first part was done by the local organization, the Midmer Glee Club, and it served to show the people of Plainfield what an excellent glee club there is in the city. The part taken by the club was very satisfactory.

After every one had shaken the snow off their wraps and taken a look about Music Hall to see who was there, the curtain rose. It was a pretty sight that met the eyes of the expectant audience. In front were the vocalists, in the costume of the seventeenth century courtier, with the smiling interlocutor, George H. Willey, clad in an elaborate suit of the same fashion, in the center of the group. They were Wm. E. MacClymont, Musical Director; Geo. Smith, H. M. Clark, Herbert Schutt, Edward Clark, A. H. Cornish, William Holmes, B. T. Barnes, Wyatt Barnes.

On the sides were the "bones" and "tambos," all clad in brocaded black, silk knickerbockers and cutaways, with white ruffles at neck and knee. The burnt cork and the wolly wigs made them scarcely recognizable as they danced out to the front after the opening bars by the orchestra. The dancers were A. F. Baker, Barry K. Lister, J. A. Ramsey, A. A. Cannon, H. C. VanEmburgh, N. R. Titsworth, Walter Place, Alonzo Titsworth.

The orchestra, in colonial costumes, occupied a position in the rear of the stage on a battlement, half hidden by statues supporting electric torches which added to the brilliancy of the scene.

As the curtain rose the grand overture began. A medley of popular songs was sung by the vocalists while the "bones" and "tambos" glided to the front of the stage and went through a well-executed dance, arranged by Mr. Willey for the occasion. Then the "Monarchs of minstrelsy" were introduced, and Messrs. Telbert and Marks made their appearance at the sides.

"You're so good, daddy," was sung by Robert M. Clark assisted by the rest of the chorus. While Telbert was getting his breath, Marks started the fun by telling the interlocutor some of his marvelous experiences. Telbert gave a parody on "Home, Sweet Home," in a very touching manner and then told about his sister who was trying to get on the Plainfield police force as her only chance to catch a man. William Holmes sang "Maggie Grady" with much spirit, and then Marks told his little jokes and sang,

"The Black Wits," Charles W. Runyon and Charles H. Lyman, next arrived on the scene resplendent in the most gorgeous costumes of blue silk with white silk waist coats. The Midmer Glee Club gave a well rendered selection and then Runyon expressed a desire to say something. After some questioning, he innocently told the interlocutor that the people of Dunellen were moving up to the Plainfield sewer beds so that they might always have a scent in the house. He also told how Farmer Orson Martine had started a yeast mill to raise votes for his next campaign. Then he started his hearers with the statement that there was going to be sleighing on Front street on the Fourth of July. His reason was that they were going to have Frost on the streets all summer. He ended with the topical song about "My Girl."

George Smith gave the solo, "You'll be sorry when I'm gone," in a pleasing manner and then Lyman took the floor. He had a most wonderful story to tell of his experiences in Philadelphia which seemed extremely lively for William Penn's little town. Then he fairly captured the audience by his rendition of that negro ditty entitled "The New Bully." The singing was all right but it was that original little move of his that so delighted the audience and he was obliged to repeat it again and again.

A very sad little ditty, "The Catastrophy," was given by the Midmer Glee Club and then the curtain fell on A GANG OF BURGLARS.

DEPREDADORS SEEM TO BE EXPERIENCED IN THEIR WORK.

Their Entrance Into Nelson Runyon's House Was Followed by a General Turning of Everything Upside Down

From the events of the last few weeks, it is evident that there is an organized gang of burglars at work in this city. From their methods and the class of their plunder it appears that they are not novices in the art. Silver and jewelry, which might be identified, is left alone as the marauders seem to prefer money and clothing.

The exclusive announcement of their visit to the residence of ex-Judge Nelson Runyon, of East Ninth street, in Tuesday's Press, told of their last attempt. What time they came there is not known as none of the occupants of the house were awakened by the sound of their movements on the first floor. The discovery of their visit was made in the morning when the dining room, parlor and hall were found in a very different condition from that of the evening before. The overcoat belonging to Councilman William N. Runyon was thrown on the floor and the contents of the pockets, mostly papers, were strewn all over the hall. An overcoat and a valuable pair of gloves belonging to Carroll L. Runyon were missing. Nelson Runyon's overcoat had not been disturbed.

The card case had been turned upside down in the parlor and several other things were disarranged. In the dining room, the drawers in the buffet had been searched and their contents scattered about. The shaker to the kitchen range was found on the table.

The entrance had evidently been gained through the kitchen as the window and the door were found unlocked and open. It is supposed that the window had been left unlocked, as there were no signs of force on the woodwork. On the ground outside of the window, the Christy bread knife stuck up in the snow, point down.

Some small change which had been left for the milkman, was also missed.

The silver in the buffet was still in its accustomed place.

The residents of Westervelt avenue have been troubled a great deal of late with persons who have attempted to gain an entrance to their houses. No house has as yet been robbed, but there has been several narrow escapes from it.

CRACK TEAM ALL WILL BE.

INTEREST IN THE STATE LEAGUE.

Plainfield Will be Represented by a Creditable Team.

The New Jersey State Baseball League has been making a steady progress in forming their details for the great league. Players are being hunted up by the managers of the various teams and grounds are being fitted up for the league. The games will start about May 15th and continue throughout the season. Ted Sullivan, of Washington, is the prime mover of the League. He has been working with untiring integrity during the past month in arranging matters definitely. He says with a short circuit the railroad fare between these towns will make the League an assured success. Plainfield, Trenton, Millville, Elizabeth, Bridgeton and Atlantic City will comprise in all probability the circuit. In Atlantic City a stock company is being formed to build a new base ball ground at the inlet and in course of a few weeks the ground will be formed and the summer residents of Atlantic City will be treated to a beautiful baseball diamond.

Millville will be under the direction of Mr. Horan, the well known baseball manager of that city.

In Plainfield the town is enthusiastic over their share in the League. A team will play under the management of the Plainfield A. C. and their players will be in first-class order and Plainfield will undoubtedly be represented by a fine team.

Elizabeth, one of the League, will have Carl Tobolt an old U. of P. graduate who has held the bag down in big teams and been a favorable adjunct to the varsity football team. His knowledge of base ball cannot be doubted. He had managed the Trenton last year and played in various positions in the team. He has signed several fast players and will be able to announce his whole team within a short time.

The Trenton team, which is under the management of Pat Powers and Ted Sullivan, will be a strong team for the Capital City. The final arrangements with the Trenton Oval has not been as yet completed.

A slight illness detains Miss Mary VanEps, of Franklin place, to her home.

PARK'S HAD LOW SCORES

DEFEATED IN BOTH GAMES LAST NIGHT BY THE CRANFORD'S.

Visitors Did Not Bowl a Remarkable Game, and Their Victory Was Therefore All the More of a Sting to the Team

There is sadness in the Park Club camp, for their bowling team lost two games to the Cranford team last Tuesday in this city, and all because they had hard luck. The visitors did not bowl a remarkable game, and for this reason the home team feel their defeat much worse. They could not seem to bowl a strong game, and in spite of their best efforts, which were not extra good, they went down before their adversary very easy. The games were void of any special interest, and the attendance of spectators was small. Thus it was that the Park's received little encouragement. Below will be found the scores of the two games:

DEFEATED THE VISITORS.

Orange Valley Bowlers Not Able to Cope With the Catholic Club.

The first two games of bowling in the Diocesan series between the Orange Valley Y. M. C. A. and the Catholic Club, of this city, took place on the alleys of the home team last Tuesday, and there was a large number of young men present to witness the sport. The visitors bowled well, but they were outclassed by the home team.

The first game was unusually exciting, inasmuch as it was a tie up to the last man, when Carty, of Plainfield, made a strike and won the game by three pins. The building fairly shook from the cheers, and congratulations followed his winning play. The individual scores follow:

Plainfield Catholic Club.

	1st game	2d game

Thus it will be seen that the home team worsted the visitors by a small margin in the first game, but in the second game they went in to win and recorded a total of 150 points in their favor.

The visitors were a fine appearing and gentlemanly lot of young men, and after the games cheers were given by both the visitors and the home team.

Y. M. C. A. DEFEATS SCOTT'S.

The Press Works Men Fail to Put Up a Good Game.

Two games were rolled on the Y. M. C. A. bowling alleys last Tuesday by the regular team from the Y. M. C. A. and the team from the Scott Press Works. The Y. M. C. A. boys won both games without trouble. Their score was pretty low in the second game, but the visitors were in harder luck, and the home team won by the easy margin of 64 pins. Bristol made the high score of the evening, rolling 170. The individual scores were as follows:

Arranging for An Evangelist.

There will be a meeting of the official board of the Grace M. E. church on Wednesday evening, February 10th, at which time it will be decided what course will pursued in regard to the special meetings which the members of the church have been considering. It will also be decided what evangelist will be called and when the meetings will commence. In the meantime the members of the church will prepare themselves for the meetings which no doubt will be held.

APPOINTMENTS HELD UP

GOVERNOR SAYS HE WILL NOT MAKE THEM FOR SOMETIME YET.

Senator Reed's Blue Envelope Bill Passed by the Upper House—Bills For Aid to Industrial Education—Other Business.

The Legislature Tuesday completed its fourth week. Thursday afternoon the Senate Committee on Railroads and Canals will give a public hearing on Gledhill's Bicycle Baggage bill, which compels the railroads to carry wheels without charge. On Saturday afternoon the House Judiciary Committee will give a hearing on Assemblyman Wild's bill reducing by one-half the salaries of all State officers who receive over $2,500 a year, provided no such salary shall be made lower than $2,500. The Governor, Chancellor and Supreme Court Justices, who are protected by the Constitution, are excepted by the bill.

The Senate Tuesday morning passed the Reed bill, requiring official envelopes used at elections to be of blue paper.

Senator Daly introduced a bill providing for State control of all streams of potable water in the State, and their reservation for a water supply for the municipalities. It is similar to bills introduced annually for several years. Senator Ketchem introduced a bill providing for State aid to schools for industrial education. When $5 are raised in any city for the purpose, the State contributes a like amount, and annually thereafter an amount equal to that raised by the municipality.

Among the bills introduced in the House was one providing for the erection, by the State Board of Education, of a normal school in Hunterdon county, and appropriating $50,000 for the purchase of a site.

Another, by Mr. Goldenhorn of Hudson, prohibits the removal of employees of educational departments of cities for political reasons.

Mr. Seovel of Camden introduced five different amendments to the game laws, and Mr. Righter of Morris a bill prohibiting the distributing of ballots outside the voting booths, requiring that ballots shall be designated by an emblem as well as a name, and permitting election officers to aid illiterate voters in preparing their ballot. A bill introduced by Mr. King of Passaic requires foreign corporations to pay a tax of 2 per cent. per annum on premiums received for insurance on property located within the State. Mr. Jackson of Essex introduced a bill fixing a penalty of $200 for soliciting candidates for office to purchase ball or picnic tickets.

Gov. Griggs reiterated the statement that he would not make the looked-for appointments for several weeks. He made an exception in the case of the successor to Supreme Court Justice Van Si kel, but gave no hint as to his intention in that case, though it is believed Justice Van Sickel will get another term, notwithstanding he is a Democrat. The probable action of the Governor over the Secretaryship of State causes a great deal of gossip. It seems to be settled that George Wurts is to be made Secretary and his place as Banking and Insurance Commissioner given to William Bettle of Camden. The opposition to Mr. Bettle is similar to that against Mr. Payn in New York for the same place. It has been understood that ex Sheriff John B. Toffey of Hudson county was to be made Supreme Court Clerk, but opposition from a rival faction in his county has developed, and Joseph L. Munn of Essex county is now said to be slated for the place. All the appointments will be sent in at one time.

A MISSION TALK.

Young Presbyterian Ladies Enjoy a Profitable Meeting.

The Young Ladies' Missionary Society of the Presbyterian churches met Tuesday afternoon in the chapel of the First Presbyterian church, and after a brief business meeting the members listened with a great deal of pleasure to an address by Mrs. F. E. Hoskins, nee Miss Eddy, of Sidon Seminary. Mrs. Hoskins is spending a year in this country with her relatives, and she expects to return to her work at the expiration of that time. She related many interesting things regarding her work in foreign lands.

After the talk the jug breaking took place, and almost $35 was received therefrom. This is considered very good, for the jugs were not all brought in. Following this part of the programme tea was served by the young ladies and a social time was enjoyed by all. The attendance was excellent notwithstanding the storm.

A Police Manual.

The Police Board has just issued a very complete and up-to-date manual, for use in the government of that department in the city. It also contains much useful information.

DOES A VACANCY EXIST?

INTERESTING QUESTION OF WHO IS THE STREET COMMISSIONER.

No Successor to Robert Meeker on Account of the Hitch Between Mayor and Council—Not Covered by Ordinances.

The seems to be some doubt in the minds of the councilmen as to whether Robert A. Meeker is street commissioner yet. His term has run out but no successor has been appointed and the general impression was that Mr. Meeker held office until his successor was appointed. Councilman Frost, chairman of the streets committee, has been looking up the matter in the ordinances relating to it and has found nothing that applies to the matter. Mr. Frost remained in Plainfield this Tuesday to personally direct the removal of snow where it was necessary.

A gang of men were sent to the city park early in the morning to remove the snow from the sidewalks and crossings about the property which the city owns. The regular gang of men and carts was put to work on the crossings on Watchung avenue and then in removing the extra snow in Park avenue, near Front street, which blocks traffic and fills up the gutters.

Most of the crosswalks were in good condition this Tuesday, but as the mercury rose, they changed from hard packed snow into slush, and the walking began to grow very unpleasant. The city employes were set at work cleaning them off, and the men will be kept busy removing the slush and snow from the crossings all over the city until the necessity of it ceases.

Roundsman Frederickson started on his rounds this Tuesday notifying those who had failed to have their sidewalks cleaned off that it must be done at once. In many cases the snow was packed on the walks so that it was almost impossible to remove it, and the pedestrians had a rather slippery time of it in consequence.

THE DAM WILL BE SAFE.

A Competent Civil Engineer Draws Plans That Does Away With Danger.

E. Woltman, the well-known civil engineer, who inspected the plans of the dam which the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company started to build at Washingtonville and found them to be unsafe, has prepared new plans and these will be carried out under the supervision of his assistant, a man of large experience. There will then be no question about the safety of the structure and the reservoir thereby created will be a splendid place for cutting ice. Work will be commenced very shortly and completed as soon as possible.

Mr. Woltman sailed for Europe on the steamship St. Paul this Tuesday and will return in about three weeks.

FROM CLERK TO PROPRIETOR.

Charles H. Hall Purchases the Crescent Pharmacy.

Charles H. Hall, who has been connected with the Reynolds and the Armstrong pharmacy, corner of Park and North avenues, for the past five years, has consummated the purchase of Hebard's Crescent pharmacy, Watchung avenue and Fifth street, and will take possession March 1st.

Mr. Hall is a graduate of the New York College of Pharmacy of the class of '92, and is a thoroughly practical druggist. He will devote his whole time to the new venture and will without doubt make it a success, being fully acquainted with the details of the drug business.

A St. Valentine Festival.

The St. Valentine festival to be held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church this afternoon and evening, under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches, will be a notable event. The members of the band have worked hard to make the affair a success. All kinds of sweets will be on sale and in the evening a very fine programme will be presented. The hours will be from 5 to 10 o'clock.

Borough Enterprise.

King's fish market on Somerset street, next to Arnold's grocery, is a model of neatness, and the fish, oysters and clams that he is selling are the finest, no better stock being obtainable. The borough should support Mr. King in his undertaking by inspecting his market and buying his goods, which are sold and delivered as low as first-class goods can be sold.

Danced the Night Away.

A large gathering of friends enjoyed themselves at the home of Mr and Mrs. Peter VanFleet, of 705 West Front street, last Tuesday. Dancing was the principal amusement of the event, music for which was furnished by Samuel Frazee. The affair did not break up till early in the morning.

THE CHURCH OF ROME.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT AND FEELING AS VIEWED BY DR. RIGGS.

A Studious Resume of the Power and Growth of the Papal Church—Requires No Argument to Prove It a Vital Force.

Quite a number of enthusiastic university extension students braved Tuesday's storm, and attended Dr. James F. Rigg's lecture on "Religious Thought and Feeling; the Church of Rome," the fourth in the series on "Vital Forces in Modern History," which was delivered in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

In his talk on the Church of Rome, Dr. Riggs said:

It requires no argument to show that rel gion is a vital force in modern life, but the notion may be vague and confused. It is of the utmost consequence therefore that we should clear up this notion, and make sure exactly what we mean. It is natural that Protestants should criticise the Church of Bome, but historically that great church is the mother of us all. Christ promised to be with His people always, and we dare not say He was not present in the Roman church during those centuries when it, the only church that existed, was in the long battle with ignorance, sin, and temporal despotism, the champion of human rights. We have many hard words for the Church of Rome during the period of the reformation, but it was only the existences of that church that made possible the reformation and its results.

The evolution of the papal power is one of the most astonishing features in European history. The fact that a messenger of Christ, a clergyman, should absorb power till he became greater than any king, is amazing. With one word the Pope could lay all France under an interdict, so that none of the services of the church could be performed, and yet he was no force of arms. He spoke and men obeyed.

Some of the popes were men of supreme genius, with the keen instinct that enabled them to do what the times required. Of these great men, three stand out pre-eminent, and are known in history as the "architects of Papacy." They are Nicholas I, Gregory VII, and Innocent III. Each of them was a master in public life, and each left his mark on the religious consciousness of Europe. Nicholas I, called the Great, was a man of great talents and energy. He reigned 858-867, and carried on a long struggle with political foes. Gregory VII, known as Hildebrand, ruled 1073-1085. He was successful at every turn. He enforced celibacy, rebuked simony, forbade lay investiture, and humbled the Emperor Henry IV at Canossa, in 1077. Innocent III, whose personal name was Lothario Conti, ruled 1198-1216. He carried the substantial power of the papacy to its greatest height, though the pontificate of Boniface VII is noted as the culminating point of papal pretension.

Side by side with this development of papal power came the new force of the friars, and various monastic orders. At first, from the sixth to the ninth century, they were a decidedly beneficient factor in society. Then they multiplied rapidly, and almost in vain. You remember the substantial truth when it says, 'there were the Benedictines, Cluniacs, Sistercians, and Carthusians; the three military orders, the Hospitallers, the Templars, and the Teutons; and the four famous mendicant orders, the Franciscans, Dominicans, Carmelites, and Augustinians.

It is a grave injustice to these centuries to imagine that they were a mere wilderness in the realm of emotion and spiritual feeling. Had it been so the noble hymns of the Latin church could never have been written. Great hymns of the sort which live and come down to us ringing through the centuries, filling our cathedrals with solemn music today, cannot be written to order by anyone. They are the outcome of deep feeliag, combined with strong and clear thinking. In one way or another an age must be great if it can produce a truly great hymn. And the work of those days can safely challenge scrutiny. The world will never consent to give up the inspiring lines of the Dies Irae, the Te Deum Laudemus, and all the host of them.

And always, though we dissent earnestly from some of the tenets taught by Rome, yet we stand with that great historic power firm as a rock against materialism, against paganism, against the brutal notion that deifies mere secular power. The mighty truths we hold in comtion with them, the great essentials of religious thought and feeling, are a wonderful fortress of sacred things, and for many centuries the custodian of that fortress, he who kept the keys in more senses than one, was the Bishop of Rome.

DECEIVER EVER.

BY GWENDOLEN OVERTON.

Carey Churchill Carter Channing, first lieutenant, Nth cavalry, died so long ago that most of his story is forgotten, though it was a very great wonder at the time. Everybody connected with it is dead also—his mother and the other young women—and so must first lieutenants have filled his place since then that no one's heart is likely to be wounded by repeating it.

He was a superb great fellow as all the men in his regiment were said to be in those days—of the big, blonde, and brave type, knowing neither fear nor failure, and his fascination was something that has become a tradition in the service. So many girls—aye, and married women, too—had loved him that the shoals upon which he had touched were strewn with wrecks.

The hearts of all those women had been broken, actually broken, not just dented a little, as is usually the case in such affairs; their lives were all ruined, and Carey Channing kept himself free of blame. Not one could say "he should have done thus or so," he never committed himself, he never acted in a compromising fashion in the presence of a third person. But the women who had nearly come to the desert of disillusion, followed the elusive pillars of the smoke of his words and the fire of his looks, never again passed beyond into the land of content across the wilderness. They despised themselves in that pitiful way that is hard on men have, but they loved him always—for such is the way of their kind.

It had been his good fortune to have dealings only with women who either thought of him alone, forgetting themselves, or with those who gentle took to denounce him. Then, too, he had managed well; there was never any definite proof. But in the early summer of '85, the pitcher that had been carried ninety-nine times to the well narrowly escaped being broken.

The bride of Capt. Morton, having seen fit, with due encouragement, to fall in love with him, threatened to become unmanageable. She was a most wonderfully attractive, feminine little thing, but she was neither of the self-immolating nor of the concealing sort. Having lost her heart, she lost her head, and Channing was in much danger of having his methods exposed.

His captain advised him: "Channing, you'd better take a leave and get out for a bit."

"Why?"

"Well, it's a delicate subject, but Morton's an old friend of mine, and I don't want to see his wife disgrace him."

"But what have I done? I am as innocent as a baby; and besides I think you are mistaken."

"We all exonerate you. It's not your fault; but I am not mistaken. It's evident to the whole post. Take my advice and go see your mother like a dutiful son."

Channing was flattered, but he was also frightened; nevertheless, he was undecided.

There was a hop there that same night. Morton was there, and it was her actions that determined Channing to take Capt. Lytton's counsel. She was already in the hoproom talking to the latter when Channing appeared, and the moment she saw him, standing full and proud and indifferent in the doorway, she grew so white that the whole room noticed it, and she trembled visibly. She realized her paleness and knew that Capt. Lytton's quick movement to put himself between her and the watching eyes had been unavailing.

Her own soft eyes filled as she raised them piteously. "You see what a spectacle I am making of myself, I can't help it. I've tried hard. There's nothing for it but to go away or break down."

"Poor little girl! Come away, then."

"If you will just take me home, and tell Dan I—" she stopped, losing the thread of her words, for Channing was approaching.

Capt. Lytton offered her his arm. "Come, quickly," he said.

"Just wait a minute, please—just till I tell Mr. Channing I can't stay for our dance."

She had flushed up and her eyes were brilliant. She put out her hand to Channing, drew it back, and again stretched it forth, confusedly.

He took it and pressed it—yes, she was sure he pressed it, almost. "The third you promised me, wasn't it?"

"Yes, I think so," she answered.

Capt. Lytton turned on his heel and walked away.

At the end of the third dance, while they strolled together up and down the line, Channing experimented to see how far she would go. To his consternation he found that she would stop at nothing short of blazoning her infatuation from the housetops. A scandal was not what Channing wanted. He was very gentle with her, but she spread and said all manner of foolish things, until Capt. Lytton came upon them and took her home.

Very soon after this the lieutenant went on to visit his mother. She was a Virginian, of the conventional poor but proud order; and she lived on what had once been the kitchen-garden of the family estate. Quite as often as not she was on the point of hunger, when there was no demand for the needle work of her quivering old fingers. Her son did not contribute to her support. All of my beggarly pay, and more, too, goes to keep up appearances. My regiment is great on esprit de corps. I'd like awfully well to help you, mother, but I must hold up my end of the row. I am a Channing." And she loved him all the better.

While he was with her in the summer of '85, through sheer lack of excitement he became enamored of a certain Anna Trafford. He asked her to marry him—quite the last thing he would have expected himself to do—and she, being completely fascinated, consented without even a decent amount of hesitation. It was arranged that in the late fall she should join Channing at the town nearest his post, and there be married.

In September, the unhappy Mrs. Morton having gone hopelessly away to another garrison, the lieutenant rejoined his regiment. He mentioned the fact of his engagement to no one, but proceeded promptly to lure on another woman, a girl of gorgeous beauty, a hot-blooded brunette, with the eyes of a Jael, the brow of a Madonna, and a sensitive, well-made mouth. She was the only daughter of Col. Ross, motherless, and betrothed to one Lieut. Hawthorne, who had loved her since they had been babies making mud-pies together on the sun-blasted parade-ground of Camp Thomas. She broke her engagement, and she broke young Hawthorne's heart; but her own turn was to come.

In November, giving way ungraciously enough to Anna Trafford's pleadings, Channing granted her permission to join him at the railroad town. She was very poor, and he was consistently cruel and self-sacrificing. Now she clamored, and would not be quieted until a mortgage was raised on the wretched little house that was all in the world her mother and crippled sister, Dan, possessed. He sent her a ticket with the money, and ten days after the receipt of Channing's letter she was at the meeting-place—alone.

She spent a day and two nights in the mean little depot hotel, very nearly out of her mind with loneliness and fright, and at last an acknowledged distrust. Then Channing's mother arrived, and an officer met them with an ambulance. Channing was dying of a fever, the mother told her. The doctor had telegraphed for her without her son's knowledge, the day after the girl had left the village. Then Anna reproached herself for her suspicions with unreasoning bitterness.

The drive to the post took two days, it was a horrible experience for the officer. The road stretched on, on, on, across desert and bad lands, where even the greasewood and mesquite was burned by the terrible sun. The old woman sank from the dust and the heat into an almost senseless state. The girl, being young and strong and alive, fought with the strangling dust, grasped, twisted her small hands, and bit her lips in a perfectly silent struggle. Sometimes, as the lieutenant sat opposite her, he wished that they could cry or make a sound.

The beautiful daughter of Col. Ross was standing by Channing's bed alone, when the doctor led the mother and her companion aside. The lieutenant had been dead 20 minutes. The dark-eyed woman did not turn, she had forgotten everything in all the world, save only Channing's face. When the southern girl dropped down at the bedside and remained for her husband, she started.

"Is the poor thing crazy?" she asked, dully, of Mrs. Channing.

"No. But she was not married to him. Only she was to have been married at Santa Isabria, two or three days ago; it was where he sent for her."

"That can't be true, because I am his wife."

Mrs. Channing caught at the bedpost with her shriveled old hand. "Nonsense!" she said.

"Indeed, it is true. Aren't you his mother?" She put her arm tenderly about the bent shoulders. "I thought you were. You look like him. He and I were married last night at midnight, when they told us he was going to die."

"Anna, my poor child, Anna! You're no right there. Get up. This girl's his wife. He didn't love you. He married her. He married her—last night."

It was cruel, but Mrs. Channing had gone mad.

For five years afterward Col. Ross cared for the insane mother of his daughter's husband—even when his daughter was dead.

But until Channing was buried in the graveyard on the hill, where the coyotes dug up the mounds at night, and the prairie dogs barked shrilly, and the snakes glided along the dry, baked earth into their holes—until he was buried there the two women stayed by their dead. Then the old mother faltered. The girl believed he had been ensnared on his death-bed; the wife, that he had never loved the childish, pretty Virginian. Yet neither—out of pity—spoke her convictions.

Watching over his mother they sat in the room where he had died, and listened to the thud of the soldiers' feet as they marched by outside, following the young officer's flag-covered coffin. Then there was a long, long silence. They were both thinking—the wife with her beautiful head in her hands; the girl, looking straight at the wall; the old woman muttering and scratching at her gown with her crooked fingers.

Suddenly came the sound of a far-off volley of musketry. The girl jumped up. "What's that?"

"The firing over his grave."

In a moment it came again. The girl stood swaying. The wife sat with her head still bowed. It was no new sound to her.

A pause—then the last volley. The girl fell, and the woman, lifting her head, stared stupidly at the pretty, dead face, at the fixed, childish eyes, that they were open—then she wife with her beautiful head in her hands; the girl, looking straight at the wall; the old woman muttering and scratching at her gown with her crooked fingers.

A HOPELESS CASE.

BY CLARA MULHOLLAND.

"It will pinch me sore, Lydia," said Mr. Waddilove, sadly. "Things are in a bad way with me just now, and it will be a great expense."

"We must make sacrifices sometimes for the sake of our children, James," replied his wife, severely. "I wonder you could hesitate for a moment."

"Do you? Well, don't, and I can't see the necessity for such a move. Why shouldn't the girls be happy at home? Why should they require a season in London? What good will it do them?"

"Had I not spent those two months in town with Aunt Susan long ago, James, I'd never have met you."

"Humph," he grunted, "how do you know? You were my fate. I'd have met you somehow."

Mrs. Waddilove shrugged her shoulders and smiled; then, folding her arms upon her lap, sighed heavily.

"I'm not a believer in fate. I pin my faith on opportunity."

"Well, who knows, as opportunity may arise."

"Here? In this quiet country place, where no man comes from year end to year end? Impossible. Miriam and Selina are 23 and 22. They are pretty, fair, attractive girls, but their youth is passing, and if they go on as they are doing, they must live and die unknown and unsought. We shall have three old maids to provide for—"

"Don't, little Madge, too. Well, you do look far ahead. The child is barely 18."

"O," with a quick decision, "she is a hopeless case. A plain girl like Madge is as well in the country as in town. Fate or opportunity would do little for her. But the others are different."

"Very," he said, grimly. "So you would not take Madge to London?"

"Of course not. She will keep house and look after you."

"Yet she would enjoy the theaters and the various sights. At 18—"

"It would be a waste of money to take Madge, and she is quite happy at home."

He smiled, and the expression of his face changed; his eyes grew soft and tender.

"Thank God, yes. And Madge and I will be very happy together."

"She was always your favorite; so it's a good thing you are not likely to lose her."

"Yes," thoughtfully, "and yet, if anyone came to know her and her sweet, bright nature, he—"

"Don't be absurd. Sweet natures don't count for much nowadays. Beauty or money is a necessity. As Madge has neither—"

"Poor little girl. Then the love of her old fathers must suffice. When do you think of going?"

"At once," Mrs. Waddilove cried, rejoiced to find him give in so easily. "Lady Grantley has a ball on Thursday. Mrs. Townley one on the following Monday, and cards are sure to turn up. As soon as Miriam and Salina are seen invitations will pour in. They will both be engaged before the end of the season, of that I am certain."

II.

The Manor house was flooded with sunshine. Every window was wide open, and every room full of the scent of roses, the perfume of new-mown hay.

Mrs. Waddilove and her two handsome daughters, Miriam and Selina, had been gone some six weeks, and as yet showed no signs of returning. Madge and her father had grown accustomed to their absence, and felt no very strong desire to see them come back. They were the best of friends, these two, and perfectly happy in each other's society.

In the presence of her mother and her good-looking sisters, Madge had been shy, quiet and reserved. But alone with her dear old father, whom she adored, the gayety of her heart asserted itself, her whole nature expanded, and she became what she had never been before—a merry, laughing, bewitching little maiden.

With such a pair of dancing dark eyes, and such a bright, happy face, who could call my Madge plain?" thought her father one day as he watched her flit backwards and forwards among the roses. "How I'm glad she did not go to London. Somehow, the world might rub off the bloom—bring sorrow to her loving little heart—and I want her to be happy always."

Across the lawn came one of the gardeners in hot haste.

"If you please, sir," he said, pausing in front of his master, "there's been an accident, just at the gate—a gentleman thrown from his bicycle by a—"

"Dear me, dear me, is he hurt?" cried the old man, starting up.

"I'm afraid, sir, he's sprained his ankle. He seemed in pain."

"He must come in, Madge," he called. "Madge, get the vinegar, bandages; there has been an accident. I'm going to bring the man in. Get everything ready."

"Yes," answered Madge, and laying aside her roses, she ran into the house.

III.

Three weeks later Madge strolled between the lime trees, a tall, fair man by her side.

"You are walking better to-day," she said. "I think your ankle is almost well."

He sighed and dug his stick into the sward.

"I fear so."

Madge laughed merrily. "How ungrateful! And surely a sprained ankle is not a pleasant thing?"

"It has been a piece of real good fortune to me," he replied, earnestly, "for through it I made the best friends I ever had—you and your father."

"I'm glad you think so, and I assure you we're looking up with a bright, sweet face, Father and I feel it was a lucky accident for us, Gilbert. We have had a pleasant time since you came to us."

"And I? O, Madge, if you could only realize what it has been for me! Since my father and mother died, when I was nine, 18 years ago, I have known little but loneliness; and I came down to the Warren for the first time since I came of age, never guessing the delightful invigadors I should find there. That evening I went out on my bicycle to while away an hour, when luck, in the shape of a clumsy van, bowled me over in front of your gate. But now the happy time is at an end, and I feel that I must go home."

"Yes," Madge sighed, "I suppose you must. And, you see, perhaps it is just as well. Mother and the girls are coming back, and then things will be different."

"But you will be the same?"

"I?" blushing and dimpling. "Not quite; everyone, even the dear old dad, changes when they are about. You see, our positions are not what they are when far away. We are no longer master and mistress. We go nowhere, see no one, speak when we're spoken to—"

"O, Madge!" He reddened and looked at her in dismay. "That's rather much. But I'll tell you what—you and your father must come and pay me a long visit. My home is charming. I've got servants and horses, and—and everything to make you happy, and we'll have all our nice time over again."

"It—it sounds delightful. But," her lips trembled, "mother would not allow me to go. You see, I am not out. I am the youngest. Miriam would go. She's the eldest, and very handsome, with a tall, slight figure, fair hair, blue—Her eyes filled with tears. "O, you—you will surely like Miriam, and—and forget your poor Madge."

"You know I won't," he cried, vehemently. "And I don't want Miriam, and I don't care whether she's handsome or not. I want you. And, what's more, I'll insist upon your coming."

Madge gazed at him in open-eyed astonishment.

"You don't know mother, Gilbert," she said, solemnly. "Not one of us dare turn the word with her, and if she told me—"

"But if it—if it—if the Warren was to be one day your home," he stammered, catching her hand and drawing her towards him. "If—O, Madge; we have known each other three whole weeks. We have spent hours of the day together, we have talk over everything. You know me, all about me, bad and good, and I know you"—his voice shook with emotion—"and I love you."

"O, Gilbert," she gasped. "Gilbert." Then, springing from him, "Don't tell you. But if you could become my wife?"

"Poor, plain little me?" she raised her eyes, then turned them quickly away, her face crimson, her whole frame trembling, her heart full of a new-sweet joy.

"To me, as you stand plus and always, you are beautiful, for I love you above everything on earth. Madge, answer me."

"Yes," she whispered low; "yes"—then laid her face upon his breast.

The following afternoon, some three or four hours earlier than they were expected, Mrs. Waddilove, Miriam and Selina arrived at the Manor house.

As he stood watching his men stacking the hay, Mr. Waddilove was informed that his wife and daughters had come home, and, without an instant's delay, he hurried to greet them. The three ladies were tired after their journey, and answered his various inquiries with but scant courtesy. Then, as Madge did not appear to welcome her, her mother became extremely irate.

"My dear, she has gone for a walk," her husband said, soothingly. "She—she will not be long."

"A walk alone at this late hour? You are a strange person to have charge of a young girl, James. I suppose Madge has done exactly as she pleased while I was away? But that will soon be changed. Out for a walk alone—"

"She is not alone, dear," he began, knowing full well she was with Gilbert, and wondering how he should break the news of her engagement to her mother. "She—she—"

"Well, this sort of thing must be put a stop to."

"Yes, yes, of course. But have you any news for me, Lydia?"

She glared at him. "None," she answered shortly.

"Then your time has been wasted. The opportunities were of no avail? Miriam and Selina have made no conquest."

"You are rude, Mr. Wadd—. And I am glad the poor girls have gone upstairs."

"I don't mean to be rude, dear. I am content to keep my daughters at home. I was only following up the conversation that led to your going to London. I believed it a sweet, bright nature, and felt—"

"You put faith in what you called beauty—and opportunities. Without boasting or in any way annoying you, I wish to say, without taking any credit to myself, that my ides was the right one; that here, in our house, Madge and I have been more successful."

Mrs. Waddilove flounced over to the window.

"Pray explain—"

She stopped abruptly and put up her pince-nez, as a slim little girl in pink muslin walked across the lawn in close conversation with a fair, blue-eyed man.

"Madge?" she cried. "And who, pray, is her companion?"

"That," he said, hurrying to her side, "is Gilbert Hastings, the wealthy young owner of the Warren, and our Madge's affianced husband."

"Good heavens." She sank into a chair with a cry. "But—but be generous, James. Do not triumph over me too much."

He took her hand and pressed it to his lips.

"Nothing, my dear, is farther from my thoughts, and I am very glad that you have come home to rejoices with me as our child's great happiness."—London Sketch.

THE HOURS.

Nothing each hour there always flies another
More like the first than brother unto brother,
And thought can never find the first one or the last
In endless future nor in endless past.

No ending to the line and no beginning,
Simply the clock at time forever ringing.
A solemn fog bell tolling everlastingly
Above the wan waves of a lethal sea!

What does it mean, this ceaseless, sad procession
Of hours? No halt, no change, no retrogression.
No haste, no swerving, no delaying, no retreat,
Each like the last as pendulum beat to beat.

The earth and moon grow ever old and older,
And human hearts grow warmer or grow colder,
While stealthy death creeps up all ties to sever,
The hours move in unbroken file forever.

For they alone are free from all mutation,
Exempt alike from death and from creation;
They pass, and pass, and pass, and passing testify
To infinite and imminent eternity.

CAP'N DICKEY'S CAPTIVES.

How His Crew of Cripples Recovered in a Night.

One Day Late the Schooner Hester Sailed Into Bristol Harbor with Rum, Molasses, Sundries and "Cinq Hommes."

The only words that Capt. John Dickey, of the Bristol schooner Hester, had understood were "cinq hommes."

"Fire on 'em," he muttered. "That's odds for the frog-eaters."

And in the depths of his gloom he fell to cutting off a pipeful of tobacco.

Truly, Capt. John couldn't be very sanguine. He had sailed from Boston several days before, bound for Bristol town, or ancient Pemaquid, with a general cargo for the storekeepers of the settlement, and alas! a French privateersman had overhauled him away off the mouth of the Kennebec. The Hester had fled, but her flight was about as nimble as the scuttling away of an old hen floundering through a barnyard to escape a tormenting dog. The Hester was all right for conveying rum, molasses, and other necessaries—broad of beam and tight of seam. But she couldn't run away. Her blunt nose bumped against the waves, her heavy sides smashed clumsily down upon the brimming swell. The tough old bird spread all sail and bowled along, like a Brahma scudding before the wind with tail spread, but up came the privateersman, his frisky nose dipping, his eyes like fire, his teeth the glint of the wave, and the spume whizzing through the lee braces.

"Schooneire, ahoi!" shouted a little man from over the taffrail, his knurly, red nose gleaming from under his cap. The premier had edged up on the Hester's quarter, and Capt. Dickey and his men were surlily eying the small craft.

"What do you want?" roared back the captain, hoarsely, just as though he didn't know all too well.

The man with the knurly red nose screamed back:

"Heat' to; stand by for bot'!"

Capt. Dickey didn't heat around at once, however. He turned to Mate Constant Judkins.

"S'pose we've got to, Jud?" he remarked, gloomily. "Course you know what it means. We're gobbled."

"Yes, and it's just as well to be gobbled whole as piecemeal," remarked Mate Judkins, carefully throwing his quid to lee.

This was wisdom. So in a moment or so the Hester came slapping and clanging and foaming around into the wind. Not a moment too soon, for the privateersman's long Tom had taken a rather determined squint at the mainmast of the schooner.

Then Capt. Dickey, listening attentively and with saturnine face, heard a gobble of French, in which he distinguished "cinq hommes," and that alone, for he wasn't a linguist.

"Sink 'em," he growled; "wal, come along and sank 'em more if you want to."

Constant Judkins listened to the gobble with puzzled face.

"I'll may" he questioningferous, rap'n," he asked, "who's this 'ere Sank Orm who is coming aboard?"

The captain didn't smile. "I heard 'em say in We-we lingo," he explained, "that they're going to put five prize men aboard us, and the Lord only knows where they'll take us!"

The crew of the Hester were four—the skipper, the mate—Ozarias Hodson, A. B., able-bodied seaman, and Bersal Joquith, cook, and before the mast.

Now, as the captain strode forward front of the house to see about throwing over the stern ladder, he saw Ozarias Hodson sitting on a rope coil in the waist, with head tied up.

"What ails you?" snapped the skipper.

"Toot'ache, sir, and dum'd bad, too!"

Ozarias evidently was more distracted by toothache than by a privateersman. Bersal Joquith, who had had the livelier suspicion that the privateersman would pop a few shots at them by way of exercise and practice, dodged out of sight into his sanctuary.

Just as Capt. Dickey threw over the stern ladder a thought struck him.

"By gingo!" said he, and he jumped as though he had suddenly taken in a mouthful of that condiment.

He threw a hasty look over the side. The privateersman was just getting the long boat in the water with the "sank'ome" and their sea chests.

"Jud," he called back to the mate, "make fast the wheel and dodge down here into the waist under the lee of the bulwark."

Judkins looked surprised, but he did so.

"Come along below," commanded the skipper, and both men followed him down in his bunk they found the cook.

"Boys," said the captain, "there ain't time to go into long explanations, but I want you to know right now that you're all in awful bad shape, and I'm the only man about ship who can keep on his pegs."

The amazement on the faces of the three gradually grew into shrewd intelligence as they stared into the twinkling eyes of the "old man."

"Tell us what the trouble is with us," requested Bersal, and we'll be the actors." Follow your lead in about two flips of the flying jib."

"Wall," said the captain, "I ain't as good a liar as I wish I was, but I guess it'll be likely enough if a truck fell and smashed your jaw, Ozarias, fracture your collar-bone and broke Bersal's leg, eh?" And the skipper extended a grin from his wrinkles.

"Hain't that putting consid'able responsibility on one truck, cap'n?"

"Don't ain't no telling what a truck will do on a rampage," cheerfully replied the captain.

Forthwith he bundled the toothachy Ozarias into his bunk and made him wrap more elaborate bandages about his shoulder.

Then he obliged Bersal to remove his trousers, and hastily but neatly he strapped a bit of board upon the cook's leg, bandaging it with strips from his dishcloth.

"I'd kind of like to know the nature of my complaint," broke in Constant Judkins, "so that I can be practicin'."

The captain pondered. "I suppose I might have your arm broke," he said, dubiously, "but I guess Constant's very well knock out the whole crew. We've got to have a little variety, for them frog-eaters are suspicious cusses. Ever have yaller janders?" he asked of Judkins.

"No."

"Well, all you've got to do is to lay still and haul your mouth down. I'll daub on a little slush," and the captain skillfully rubbed some of the yellow oil over the mate's face.

"Now look sick, all of you," said the captain as he prepared to go on deck and receive the prize crew. "It'll help you to look sicker if you recollect that the frog eaters have a way of slitting throats when they suspicion shenanigan."

Of the Frenchmen who came over the rail none could talk English, and the captain could talk French. Yes, he could—he could say "Bong shur," but he loftily forebore.

However, when the new arrivals looked around suspiciously for the crew, and unslung their cutlasses and appeared to apprehend ambush, the captain, with many waves of his hands and much "we-ing," led two of the five below with an air like a rooster gallantly conducting pullets to a worm banquet. In pantomime he explained the sad plight he was in, and, his crew groaned dolefully at the proper times. He tried to explain to the Frenchmen low glad he was they had come and taken the Hester at this time of danger. The men didn't appear to catch that part of the story, however. But the captain didn't care. The prize men were evidently thoroughly convinced that below decks was just the hospital it claimed to be, and after much ineffectual jargon and much gesturing they made the captain understand that he was to stay down and nurse his men. The captain was a good nurse. He must have worked the faith cure on his devoted crew, for the deep gloom of the dog watch three very determined-looking convalescents sneaked barefooted at his heels as he wormed aft in the shadow of the Hester's bulwark.

The night was made for the enterprise. Twas pitch dark, and from the murk of the west a humming breeze sung in the shrouds and murmured down out of the hollows of the sails. One Frenchman was at the wheel and one pendulumed back and forward at the binnacle, the compass of which was doubled up on a coil of rope in the lee of the house and the other two were presumably below. All the men on deck were unarmed, for it wasn't to be supposed that they would attack the arsenal to protect themselves against a nautical invalids' home. So Capt. Dickey's miraculously healed bodyguard had little trouble in downing and tying all three before their supprise was over.

The only casualty was when a squirming Frenchman trod upon Bersal's bare foot. In his anguish the cook let out a howl that started the two men below on a rush for the deck. They bobbed out of the companion-hatch like two jacks-in-the-box, saw the situation and as quickly jerked themselves back.

They stayed barricaded in the cabin till the schooner came up into Bristol harbor, 24 hours later, with a bone in her jaw and the wind whistling through her rudder. Capt. Dickey would, in the kindness of his heart, have fed the garrison in his cabin on plum duff and salt horse; but every time he tried to explain his wishes through the cabin door they would poke their gunbarrels at him. The poor chaps evidently thought their companions had been made way with, and that the bluff-faced old skipper was cajoling them to a similar fate.

When the cargo, that "shan't help" roared Job Brisman, from the wharf as he waited to catch the line and fling it over a spiling.

"Rum, molasses, sundries, and Frenchmen," shouted back the captain; "and if you'll bear a hand with a plank we'll unload the Frenchmen first."

And all Bristol flocked down to fling a sarcastic "polly voo" at Capt. John Dickey's unhappy captives.—Lewiston Journal.

Keeping Broth.

All soups can be preserved in a good condition for some days by taking great care, when freshly made, to skim well, and to remove every particle of fat from the surface. The broth should be kept in a very cool larder and uncovered; in very hot weather it should be strained every day, and poured into a perfectly clean vessel.—Albany Journal.

A PERCEPTIBLE TIDE

Peculiar Results of a Thrilling Study of Character.

Optic Read Tells How a Wise Man's Best Girl Took Advantage of Her Lover's Inexplicable Dullness.

[Written for This Paper.]

When Lagmon set about a thing everyone knew that it would be accomplished with a wholesale thoroughness. He was a sort of experimental scientist. He came to Chicago about two years ago, expecting to take a professorship in the university—came with strong letters from the big men at Harvard—but upon examination it was found that he presented too smooth an average; that he had no pronounced specialty; no active identity with the great institution was refused him. He took up his residence in a large apartment house and braied himself with all sorts of experiments.

Living in the same apartment house was a charming young woman—a sort of "Middle-march Dorothy," a sweet creature with a great respect for learning. In the parlor one evening a number of thinking people met to discuss the hygienic possibilities of the dry earth system, and it was then that Lagmon and this young woman met each other. He made a speech as dry as the subject under discussion and this so charmed the girl that she sought his acquaintance. It seemed to have been a case of agreement at first sight. She knew that all dullness was bulged out with wisdom, a mango stuffed with knowledge; he knew that any handsome and sweet young woman who could listen to him was intended to be his wife. It was late at night before any of them got stonied. For a time their meetings were measured by weekly doses, when the society assembled to discuss dry earth, but after awhile they began to take long walks in the park and on the lake shore to search for the perceptible tide. One evening when they had failed to find the perceptible tide, upon whose existence Lagmon had staked his reputation, they returned to the park and seated themselves on a rustic bench.

"Oh, I know it's there," he said.

And looking at him sweetly, she replied: "Who could doubt it?"

"No sane person, dear," he rejoined, "but you must remember that the mind of the public is turned by the crank of ignorance."

For a time they were silent, watching the shadowy "wheels" that sped past them. "Don't it strike you," he said, "that from your vast amount of work you ought to realize something tangible. Don't you think you could invent something?"

He came within one of smoking at that, but he didn't. He swallowed and then said: "Elizabeth, I am not a mechanic. I might make a wheelbarrow and sell it to a contractor on the drainage canal, but I am not a carpenter."

"I know, dear, but that doesn't do away with the need of an invention."

"Elizabeth, I shall not turn in discontent upon your wisdom. An income does seem to be necessary in this town of rabid materialism."

"I think that must be necessary anywhere, dear," she replied.

She was silent, looking upon the "wheels" that sped past them. "If he could only invent a bicycle. But she was afraid to suggest it. It would make him angry; he would declare again that he was not a mechanic.

He let his brain work for quite a while. The production of a popular novel would be an easy thing. It would simply be writing one. And what should play so wisely as wisdom? He would not put his name to it; that would throw discredit upon the perceptible tide.

"Elizabeth, to give you an example of the awfulness of the human mind, I will say that my plan is already laid. My scheme is almost perfected. It is like the vine that came up in a night, but I will see that the coming of the sun does not wither it. And dear, you have been through it each day to help me with this book. Just listen to me a moment and I will give you an example of the quickness of a thought in a mind at play. In the meshes of my mind—huh, how my thoughts help! The meshes of my mind I hold a man that will make a startling character. You don't know him, but you shall. He is a tall, gaunt personage with a big nose; he is not particularly well-dressed, merely in a hap-hazard way, but his influence over woman is wonderful. I put my mind on him and for a long time studied him, not that I ever expected to use him, but that I strove to get at the secret of his social success. I can discover nothing in him and so it is useless for me to try, but you with your keen discernment can find his secret. I will make an appointment to meet him and will introduce him to you. Then you can bring your part of the work. You may meet him as often as you think it necessary, write down your impressions from time to time and send them to me. What do you think of the idea?"

"Delicious!" she cried. "And so novel, so like a newspaper. You see, I will go out as a reporter to bring in this character, and by keeping him actually flushed with life we can indeed startle society with him. Dear, I can see an income."

The name of this character was Tom Pugney, and the next day he was introduced to Elizabeth. He awkwardly shook hands with her, said that he had heard the "professor" speak of her and then, without any seeming cause, laughed like a horse. And as his merriment rolled and swayed Elizabeth thought that there must be a perceptible tide in his mirth.

Lagmon left them together and went away to muse over the minor characters of his book. The next night there was a meeting of the Dry Earth society. Lagmon was to have read a paper on "Dust as a protection against the early cut-worm," but excused himself on the ground—the dry ground—that another week of less importance but possibly of more interest had been given him. In a corner of the room he met Elizabeth and asked her regarding the progress she had made. She smiled and handed him a written report. "He has his second visit this evening," she said. "Possibly it does not exist at all, but with regard to this I cannot as yet decide. The first impression was not agreeable. I thought that his laugh was unnecessary, but after a while I fancied that there was some little music in it. He does not choose his words well, but as a rule women do not like well-chosen words. They prefer the careless utterances of impulse rather rather than the chosen sentences of thought. In appearance he is surely awkward, but women can forget awkwardness in a man easier than men can blind their eyes to ungainliness in a woman. This is as far as I have progressed."

"Good," said Lagmon. "I am delighted to see that you are so thorough. Oh, you'll get at his secret after awhile. When are you to see him again?"

"Day after to-morrow night."

"Good again. That's right, rush it, but above all hold to your thoroughness. You have already given me a dazzling glimpse of him, and I feel assured that you will have a blinding presentation. That isn't bad, eh? Oh, we've got him."

A few days later Lagmon was busy in his library, measuring his plot and diagramming his thrills when Elizabeth entered. "Oh, you're busy with another report, eh? Just in time, got a place for it right here."

She handed him a slip of paper and he read the following: "He does not agree with everything that a woman says. This gives a chance for discussion and is therefore pleasing, since nothing is more tiresome than the person who accepts everything one says. He professes to have been a pronounced cynic, but lets you see that your influence is curing him. He discovers what a woman thinks is wit and laughs at it. He laughs at the idea of love."

"Oh, you are getting at it," the novelist declared. "And what a character he will make."

"I am so glad you are pleased, dear," she said.

"Pleased! Why, I am delighted. You may not know it, but you are helping to make the great American novel. This one character will capture every critic in the country. But we must not let the work get cold."

Her next report was encouraging. "His smile which had at first escaped my notice I now find is pleasant," she said. "It holds the merest suggestion of sadness, and of tenderness withal. Once or twice I thought that I caught a glimpse of his real secret, but perhaps it was a mere fancy. But I am now convinced that he has a secret power. He shrewdly discovers something about a woman which she herself has not known herself on and which she thinks has been kept hidden—and then comments upon it. To most women this is delicious. He blunders a compliment—or one that I think is that it was strong upon his mind and that he uttered it by accident. This is charming. He declares that he is not emotional, but I know that he is. He tries to hide it, but cannot."

The novelist leaned back after reading the report and contentedly scratched his head. "We've got a fortune here," he remarked, nodding at his work. "But we must not let it get cool. I think you've got him. When do you see him again?"

"To-morrow evening."

"And I shouldn't wonder but that will finish him."

The next evening he sat in the library, waiting for the girl.

There came a tap at the door. "Come in," he cried. A messenger boy entered. She had sent her report, and this is the way it ran: "I have at last found his secret charm and it is his love for one or mine for him, I hardly know which. After awhile I may know exactly. You are welcome to the work that I have done for you. There is a perceptible tide in the affairs of man—but I will not quote. My husband sends his regards."

OPPOSING EDITOR POTTER.

J. Alfred Potter, editor of the Cranford Chronicle, is subject to all the trials and tribulations that fall to the lot of country editors—from receiving complaints of irate subscribers who fail to receive their paper to having libel suits with his landlord—but when he was nominated by the President last week for the postmastership at Cranford, it was considered that that honor and emolument was sufficient balm for all the disagreeable things that arise in the conduct of his business. But it appears that there are still aggravating things to overcome before he takes possession. Editor Potter has not been especially politic in his treatment of some of Cranford's officials, and now they are bestirring themselves to prevent the confirmation of the nomination made by the President. In fact, his nomination came as a great big surprise to all of them, because it was not even hinted that he wanted the office. A long petition had been liberally signed by Republicans and Democrats asking that John L. Derby, Republican, be retained, but it was a waste of effort it seemed. James E. Martine, of this city, was Mr. Potter's political backer.

THE MARX APPOINTMENT.

While in this country it ought not to be so, yet it is a fact that the appointment of George E. Marx as Overseer of the Poor is considered by many as a serious slight on several estimable citizens who have long been identified with the community and who no doubt could fill the office with equal ability, seeking the place as they did. No matter how good an official Mr. Marx has been there is no denying that his recent naturalization as a citizen of this country makes his appointment an unpopular one. It was hinted that Mayor Fisk was not inclined to continue him in office, and therefor his appointment came as one of the big surprises of last Monday's Council meeting.

SENATOR REED'S BILLS

Senator Reed introduced a bill in the Legislature Monday authorizing boards of freeholders in all counties to enter upon private lands for the purpose of removing obstructions from any stream or to change its its course, upon written consent of the owner of such land, to pay for same from county funds. He also introduced a bill enabling towns and villages, under act of May 12, 1890, to condemn land through which it is necessary to run sewers.

AN UNKNOWN QUANTITY.

Of course, it is neither here nor there, but it would be interesting to know what James E. Martine would have done if he had been in Mr. Fisk's place Monday. Certainly, he could not have stirred up any more dissension, and not half as much disappointment, as has the man who defeated him.

THE CITY HALL SITE.

There seems to be a strong sentiment about town that the corner of Park avenue and Fifth street is not a proper place for the location of a city hall. The building, it is argued, and not without good reasons, either, should be more in the centre of the business district. While, of course, it is the proper thing for the Council to acquire property for the structure at just as little expense as possible to the city, it is nevertheless a fact that a few thousand dollars more spent in purchasing property more centrally located would meet with the approval of the people in general.

NO POLITICS IN IT.

In the discussion of his blue envelope bill in the Senate, Tuesday, Senator Reed explained that the white envelopes used at present frequently were overlooked by the voters owing to similarity in color with the ballots, which often made quite a little bunch. Election officers had complained to him of the difficulty. He added jocosely, that there was no politics in the bill. Senator Daly remarked that if the act would relieve the Republicans in their peculiar malady of color blindness, he would gladly vote for it.

GIFT OF A SCHOOL FLAG

JUNIORS PRESENT STAR AND STRIPES FOR LINCOLN BUILDING.

The Flag to be Presented When the Building is Completed—Money Matters Considered by the Board of Education

There was very little business to be transacted at the meeting of the Plainfield Board of Education, last Tuesday, and what there was to do was done very expeditiously. The Board was in regular session for a half hour and then retired into executive session.

The meeting was called to order by President Probasco, with Dr. Jenkins and Mr. Lovell present. Mr. Abbott arrived at the meeting just as the Board went into executive session. The reading of the minutes and the regular order of business was put aside to allow the Board to receive a committee from Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M. The committee consisted of Firman Long and Peter Bogert. Mr. Long acted as chairman. In a few words he renewed the offer of the Council in formal terms to present a flag to the new Lincoln School, upon its completion. The Board unanimously accepted the offer with thanks and the committee then retired.

The minutes were then read and approved and Mr. Lovell acted as temporary secretary in the absence of the regular secretary, Mr. Lounsbury, and read the long list of approved bills which were ordered paid. In the same motion, it was decided to pay the semi-annual interest due March 1st on the mortgage of $12 000, on the Franklin school, which amounted to $300 and also $1,000 of the principal.

Mr. Lovell read a communication from the city treasurer, A. Titsworth, in which he stated that he had received $16,993 04 from B. Holmes, county superintendent of schools, and had deposited the same to the credit of the Board, $10,000 in the City National Bank and $6,199.04 in the First National Bank.

A communication from City Collector Bird was also read. Mr. Bird reported that he had collected school taxes amounting to the sum of $1,475.-51 during the last month, which, with interest amounting to $31.65, made a total of $1,507.16, all of which had been deposited in the City National Band.

A request from Architect Carr was read in which he asked that $100 be allowed him on account for the building of the Lincoln school. The request was considered by the Board and, on motion, granted. The Board then went into executive session.

COME OVER, URGES REED

FAVORS GREATER PLAINFIELD IF CITY GOES TO SOMERSET.

Pledges His Support to the Consolidation Movement if the City Will Join the County He Represents in the Senate

There seems to be a a feeling on the part of some of the borough residents that in the event of consolidation, North Plainfield will be swallowed up by her better half, and would become merely a ward or two of the Greater Plainfield. Others seem to think that Somerset county would lose something by the bearing, whereas, indications seem to point that it would be just as well for Plainfield to be annexed to Somerset county, and it is known that a great many people on both sides of the brook look upon that scheme as feasible. Senator Reed has written a letter to ex-Mayor Saunders that defines his position in regard to the consolidation, which is as follows:

January 6th, 1897.

Hon. W. L. Saunders,
Plainfield, N. J.

My Dear Sir:—Relative to our recent conversation regarding the "Greater Plainfield," I am free to say that I favor the consolidation of the city and borough, provided it be accomplished by bringing the former into Somerset county. This seems to me to be the only feasible plan, and also to produce more beneficial results than any other. You may assure those interested in the matter that if the accomplishment of this plan be seriously and systematically undertaken, I will cheerfully render any assistance in my power toward its success. In this connection, allow me to state that from my point of view, it seems important to proceed slowly, and avoid premature attempts to force matters. A general and definite public sentiment on both sides of the brook, in favor of a definite scheme of consolidation, is, to my mind, a condition precedent to any attempt at legislation.

Very sincerely yours,
Chas. A. Reed.

Senator Reed's proposition is thought to be a good one by many people, and it is understood that it is in accord with the approval of ex-Mayor Saunders and others in this city and the borough, as they look upon it as the most practical and feasible plan yet presented.

A GOOD LETTER.

From the Clerk of the Circuit Court.

Fernandina, Fla., Feb. 28, 1896.

Mr. J. George Suhrer, Druggist, City.

Dear George:—Please send a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I would not feel easy if I knew there was none of this valuable Remedy in the house. I have given it a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children. Yours respectfully, Geo. E. W——. Sold by T. S. "UNCLE DAN'S" SEVENTY-THIRD.

Mr. Roberts Had a Complete Surprise for His Birthday Sunday.

"Uncle" Dan Roberts, of North avenue, had a genuine old-fashioned birthday celebration Sunday in honor of his seventy third birthday anniversary. The affair was a complete surprise to him, as he had no idea of what was was going to take place. The celebration continued all day, and there were several relatives and close friends present to enjoy the festivities, among whom were his son, William Roberts and wife, of Tobyhana, Pa., Eli Veal, supervising engineer of the D. L. and W. Railroad, and his daughter, Miss Veal, of Moscow, Pa., Henry Beck, supervising engineer and Engineer Mahoney, of the Jersey Central, of Jersey City; Miss Jessie Roberts, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Roberts, Mr. and Mrs H. Roberts and Helen Roberts.

The table was appropriately arranged for the occasion, and in the centre was a large and handsome cake, around which was placed seventy-three lighted candles.

"Uncle" Dan looked just as young as he did many years ago, and he was congratulated not only by those present but by many who sent complimentary letters.

Special Trip to Washington.

The inauguration ceremonies next month are to be especially elaborate, and the entry of Major McKinley into the presidential office will be an attractive spectacle. Thousands of persons from all points of the country will gather at the national capital, and in order to place the trip within the reach of people of moderate means the Central Railroad of New Jersey will sell tickets especially for this trip at considerably reduced rates. $8 00 for the round trip. The tickets will be good to go on March 1, 2, 3 and 4 and for return on March 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8, allowing patrons of that road an opportunity to spend a few days at the capital, besides the day of the inauguration.

Henry Leal, of Central avenue, is able to be out again after an illness.

PAID TRIBUTE IN TEARS

LARGE ATTENDANCE OF FRIENDS AT HENRY SMITH'S OBSEQUIES.

Rev. Dr. Lowry Delivered the Funeral Sermon and in It Gave a Clear, But Modest, Reflection of the Dead Man's Qualities.

The funeral services of the late Henry Smith were held Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the First Baptist church, and there was a large gathering of relatives and friends. As the funeral cortege proceeded up the aisle of the church, an impressive dirge was played on the organ by Howard Case, organist of the church. The singing of "Asleep in Jesus," by Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Bessie Blair, Mr. Smith, and Wyatt Barnes, preceded the Scripture reading by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, who followed with a few words appropriate to the occasion. In part the doctor spoke as follows:

"We are called here today to pay tribute of respect to our late brother and to weep with those who weep. Dr. Horr, who had visited our brother only a few days ago, has since passed to his last resting place. He went just a little while before our brother. This church reminds me of him who had passed away, for he was chairman of the building committee when the church was erected. This pulpit also reminds me of him, for it was his gift. He was my brother and my friend."

Rev. Dr. Robert Lowry, who was an intimate friend of the departed, then spoke somewhat as follows:

"I think it is a rare thing for a minister to find himself in a position so peculiar as that in which I find myself this moment. I not only stand in the presence of the dead but in the place of the dead. Not for me was this function, but for him who but a short time ago passed to his last resting place. It was for his pastor to say the last words, but instead, other men stood by his coffin and repeated his last words over him. A peculiar solemnity gathers around this bier and fills this house. Already our brother and his pastor, who was to have been here, have clasped hands; already their spirits have mingled, and they have sat down and talked it over as they did at Bergen Point.

"And so it is that this cold voice must say a few words. I say them willingly and cheerfully, and with high and sweet appreciation. It is my function to put away from one, but one that invites. There are times when a minister stands before a coffin with peculiar solemnity. So it is today. I suppose I never shall be able to forget this man, who is indelibly impressed on my mind, and it shall remain while personality remains. I am forbidden by this man to eulogize him, for he has said 'Don't talk about me, but talk about others,' and how like him that remark sounds. You know him. Some of you have been consorted closely with him; some are officers of Christ's church as he was.

"For nine years we stood together, I don't know how I could have done my work without him. He was an honest church member and a true man. The last conversation I had with him showed conclusively that he was willing to die or live, just as the Lord willed. A few days before his death he wrote a message which I now hold in my hand. The text is 'The Five Ones,' as follows: 'One life to live; one life to die; one heaven to gain; one hell to shun; one way, through the Blood of Christ; come to Jesus.' The message then quoted several verses of Scripture, among which were "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and Thou Shalt be Saved," "The Wayfaring Man Though a Fool, Need Not Err."

Rev. J. W. Richardson offered a fervent and earnest petition to the Throne of Grace at the conclusion of Dr. Lowry's remarks, after which a quartette sang "My Jesus as Thou Wilt."

After those present had viewed the form of the departed one, the remains were interred at Hillside. Those who served as pall bearers were C. W. McCutchen, Theodore French, R. M. Stelle, C. A. Haynes, O. B. Leonard and Albert Day.

The floral tributes were very beautiful and consisted of a sheaf of wheat and choice cut roses.

Funeral of Miss Wiggins.

The funeral services of the late Miss Wiggins were held from the house on West Front street Sunday afternoon at 3:45, and they were conducted by Rev. C. R Barnes, who spoke very appropriately to the living and urged the necessity of preparation for death. He then drew a beautiful picture of the Christian life of the departed, and spoke of her first Sabbath spent in Heaven. Preceding the remarks of Dr. Barnes, E. E. Runyon sang very effectively "Asleep in Jesus," and at the close he sang "Nearer my God to Thee." There were many floral tributes, which completely covered the casket. The remains were interred beside the sister of the departed in the Plainfield avenue cemetery. Those who served as pallbearers were ex-Councilman H. A. Weber, Robert Patterson, Joseph Randolph and Andrew Love, Sr.

The Difference

"I see no difference between H-O and any other oatmeal!" We know it. The difference is not to be seen. You taste, and smell, and feel the difference, though!

H-O

is different from all others, in that it is more sweet, smooth, delicate, digestible. Its preparation begins where the others leave off. It is twice cooked, once by steam, once by super-heated air. Thus half the work of digestion is done, and the system is never over-taxed or over-heated.

Be sure to get the package with the big H-O on the end.

CHASED BY DETECTIVES

WHITNEY FRAZEE LED IN A TRAMP OVER A ROUGH ROAD.

To Foreat the Expressman From Boarding a Train With Packages They Dogged the Footsteps for a Number of Miles

Whitney Frazee, the package expressman between this city and New York, insists that he played a good joke on the Central Railroad Detectives Blackford and Dougherty, Saturday afternoon, while the latter claim with much persistency that Frazee was the principal victim of his own peculiar machinations.

The fight between the detectives and package expressmen on the road is an old tale known to every one along the line. Frazee has been waiting the chance to evade the detectives and arrive in Plainfield in his old-time form, that is, carrying the packages on his person. He selected Saturday for the day.

Instead of taking a ferry boat at Liberty street, he went across on a Pennsylvania ferry boat, and at Jersey City took a trolley car for Forty-ninth street. At Forty-ninth street there were no detectives to prevent him from getting on the train, and he rode as far as Roselle, the terminal of the local which he boarded.

At Roselle he waited with his pack at the station platform for a train to this city. The station agent's attention was drawn to Frazee and his big package and the latter thought to display his vigilance by telegraphing headquarters that a messenger was at Roselle intending to outwit the railroad company by doing what they had forbid.

Detectives Blackford and Dougherty were notified at Elizabeth to proceed to Roselle and prevent Frazee from carrying out his intentions. They caught the train which the expressman intended to board at Roselle. They found Frazee on the platform at Roselle ready to get on.

"You can't get on this train," said one of the detectives to Frazee.

Frazee knew it was useless to try it then.

"Well, I'll walk home then," replied Frazee.

And suiting his word he started off with about 150 pounds of weight in his accumulated packages. The detectives orders from the railroad company are to follow expressmen and see that they do not board a train at any other station. True to their duty, they followed. Frazee struck out on the county road with a rapid stride. The detectives dogged his footsteps, but their was a good deal of raillery between the three as they went trudging over the frozen snow. The walking was anything but good. Frazee struggled along in pretty fair shape with his heavy load, for he was use to long walks and heavy loads. The detectives followed him breathing hard. They passed through Cranford and reached Westfield. Frazee was very near winded. He saw a Plainfield delivery wagon. He hailed it, dumped his packages into it, boarded a train at the station and came into Plainfield without accomplishing what he had started to. The packages arrived in due time with the delivery wagon.

Frazee claimed that the detectives were completely tired out, and that he felt like a fighting cock.

The sleuths say that the walk was exhilarating and that Frazee was winded.

At any rate, it was a good joke on some one.

Rabbits Liberated.

A consignment of live rabbits for the Union, Middlesex and Somerset County Game Protective and Propagating Association arrived here Saturday. They were duly liberated on the leased ground of the association by Beers Haurand and Percy C. Ott. The entire lot were in fine condition and they demonstrated their appreciation of liberty, by a frolic some run before seeking shelter in the brush. The association expect to liberate about twenty-five rabbits per day for the next two weeks.

BURGLARS DARING ACT.

TRIED TO PUSH IN A DOOR HELD BY HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Prowlers Broke the Locks But Were Frustrated by the Bravery of Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin and Screams of Other Occupants.

On one side of the door were three desperate men demanding admittance and on the other, Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin, trying to hold the door against the attacks of these midnight depredators.

"Police! Fire! Murder! Help!" yelled the other feminine occupants of the house and then the three strangers fled while Patrolman Vanderweg allowed no grass to grow under his feet as he ran in pursuit.

Such were the incidents that made Monday night a rather memorable one to Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin, of 942 Park avenue. It was about 3:30 o'clock this morning when Mr. Goodwin was awakened by his wife with the startling intelligence that there was somebody in the hall. The door was fastened with a hook and screw-eye. While the husband and wife were stirring about preparatory to investigate the cause of the strange noises, there was a crash at at the door and the screw-eye was snapped. Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin made a rush for the door and held it with their combined weight. Then the three burglars began to try to push it open. Gradually the door was forced in and a gruff voice shouted:

"Hold up your hands!"

Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin had nothing to say but kept their weight to the door. Meanwhile the noise had awakened the other occupants of the house and a window went up with a bang. Then there issued screams that were heard by Patrolman Vanderweg at the corner of Park avenue and Seventh street. The officer started on a run for the scene.

The unbidden guests heard the screams very distinctly and stopped their efforts to force the door of Goodwin's room. The screams continued and the door was shut and bolted. Then they concluded that it was time to depart. They were seen by the officer as they left the yard, a block away, but were soon lost in the darkness.

They had made their entrance at the kitchen window and had ransacked the rooms of the lower floor. Nothing was missing, however.

A CREDIT LEAGUE ORGANIZED.

Local Merchants Seek Protection Against Dishonest Debtors.

The business man of this city and the borough have combined for their protection against the delinquent and dishonest debtor classes. Monday there was formed in this city an organization of business men called The Plainfield Credit League, having its office in the First National Bank building on Front street. The League will secure reports on the financial condition of any person inquired about by its members and will also undertake the collection of debts and attend to other legal matters for its members.

The officers who will serve the League for the first year of its existence are the following well known business men: President George L. VanEmburgh; vice president, Edwin H. Holmes; secretary and counsel, Irving L. Brady; board of managers, A. M. Griffin, H. O. Howell and Herman Schwed, of Schwed Bros. Membership in the the League will be open to all classes of business men, professional and mercantile, and inasmuch as there is no entrance fee charged it is anticipated that most of the business men of Plainfield will join. Lists of the different classes of debtors will be kept up to date by constant additions, and it will be made very difficult for any person blacklisted by the league to obtain credit in Plainfield.

TOOK THE OATH OF OFFICE.

Newly Appointed Officers Sworn in by Mayor Fisk.

William Robinson and Maurice Higgins the new policemen appointed at the City Council meeting last Monday, went to the home of the Mayor after their appointment, and took the oath of office. The other appointees took the oath of office Tuesday. This was done owing to the fact that the Mayor will leave tomorrow for Atlantic City for a brief stay.

She Asks For a Divorce.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Barnaby Mills, who resides at Plainfield, Monday brought suit before Chancellor McGill, at Jersey City, for divorce. She and her husband, Albert M. Mills, who is a prosperous merchant of Camden, were married in 1883.

MAYOR FISK EXPLAINS

TELLS HOW HE CAME TO APPOINT COUNCILMAN RANDOLPH.

There Seems to Have Been a Misunderstanding Between His Honor and the Members of the Street Committee.

The unlooked-for hitch in the council proceedings last Mondy has caused considerable talk about town and those who were present at the meeting or have since heard of the difference have been somewhat at a loss to know just what to make of it.

Tuesday a Daily Press reporter called on the Mayor and ascertained his side of the case, which is as follows:

At the conference of the councilmen last Saturday evening the name of Isaac F. Randolph, who is at present a councilman, was unanimously agreed upon for street commissioner, and the latter had decided to accept the place. After this had been agreed upon Mr. Randolph asked the Mayor if he thought that the streets and sewers committee would have any objections to his having an assistant, and that assistant should be his son, Charles Randolph. Mr. Fisk said that he did not think that the council would have any objection to such a plan, and that the committee was given power to secure such help as would be needed.

After leaving the Mayor, Mr. Randolph met the members of the above committee, and to them he stated about the same thing. But Mr. Barrows and Mr. Frost understood from the remarks of Mr. Randolph that his request for an assistant took the form of a demand, and that he wanted his son appointed at a salary of $700 a year. This the committee would not grant. Later Mr. Randolph saw the Mayor and stated that the committee had misunderstood him. He said that he did not ask that his son be appointed at that salary, but that he receive the same pay that Mr. Meeker's men did when working by the day.

The Mayor said that he would send his name in, but it was necessary that he resign from the Council. Mr. Randolph said that he was going to do that anyway, for he did not want the position of Councilman. It had been thrust upon him and he did not want the office.

At the meeting last Monday the appointment of Mr. Randolph as street commissioner and his resignation as a councilman was in the hands of the city clerk. In some way or other the two papers became mixed and it so happened that the appointment was presented first. This was received with not a little surprise by the members and it was temporarily laid on the table. The facts were communicated to the Mayor who at once asked for the privilege of withdrawing Mr. Randolph's name, and the same was granted. Nothing will be done with the appointment until the next meeting of the council.

The difference is solely one between Mr. Randolph and the Street and Sewers Committee, and not between the former and the Mayor, as some have been led to suppose.

TROLLEY UP THE MOUNTAIN.

RIGHT OF WAY SECURED YESTERDAY.

Will Be Built Over the Spencer, Closson and Gordon Properties.

John H. French and F. A. Smith, representing the Consolidation Traction Company, went to Washingtonville Monday for the purpose of ascertaining the most feasible way by which the trolley road could reach Mountain Park Inn from Washingtonville. They decided that the best route is through the Spencer property, as it has a greater minimum grade to the hundred feet than any other route which has been considered. The right of way through this route was obtained yesterday afternoon. There will be a roadway of from twenty to thirty feet over which the trolley will run, which will make a fine driveway from the valley to the inn. The driveway will run through the Spencer, Closson and Gordon properties.

The committee having in charge the raising of money for the widening of Somerset street for the extension of the trolley are meeting with great success, they having raised the largest part of the required $500 to do the work. It is expected that any deficiency will be met by the township and this matter will be brought up at the spring election in March.

A few months ago, Mr. Byron Every, of Woodstock, Mich., was badly afflicted with rheumatism. His right leg was swollen the full length, causing him great suffering. He was advised to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first bottle of it helped him considerably and the second bottle effected a cure. The 25 and 50 cent sizes are for sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

Slipped and Fractured His Leg.

W. T. Purviance, of 132 Crescent avenue, met with a serious accident while walking on East Ninth street, Tuesday at 9 o'clock a. m. He slipped on the ice on a crossing and fell fracturing his right leg above the ankle. He was attended by Dr. Endicott and Dr. Keeney.

Woman's Work

Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to tone, sustain, and renew the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. It is more because of this condition of the blood that women are run down,

Tired, Weak, Nervous.

Than because of the work itself. Every physician says so, and that the only remedy is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I employ no agents and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shops, myself and my son doing by far the greater portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same quality and same stock any cheaper than I can.

TRACING INFANT LINES.

RESEMBLANCE OF JUVENILE PICTURES TO MEN AND WOMEN.

Unique Pastime Invoked at a Party Given by Miss Ida Spicer in Honor of Her Cousin—Each Brought Likenes.

An enjoyable social gathering was held at the home of Miss Ida Spicer, of West Fifth street, last Thursday, in honor of her cousin, Miss Jennie Spicer, of Westerly, R. I. Each of the guests was asked to bring the first picture he or she had had taken when a child. Most of the guests brought the pictures and the latter were then arranged in a line without names and all tried to guess the identity of the original of the picture. This was the occasion for no end of fun, and there was lots of excitement in trying to trace a resemblance between the pictures and the guests. There were forty pictures in all, and Miss Luella Clauson was the most successful of all in guessing. She guessed twenty-nine correctly and was given the first lady's prize, a china bon-bon box. Frank Clauson was the best guesser among the men, having twenty-four names correct on his list. He received a photograph portfolio.

The room was then darkened and the guests were called upon, one by one, to stand in front of a lamp and cast their silhouette on a screen, while the rest tried to guess their name from the profile. After all had been guessed refreshments were served and all those present enjoyed a little social chat.

Among those present and who were represented in the photograph gallery were the Misses Addie P. Jackson, Marie Newman, Lucy Dunham, Matie Green, Evelyn M. Lewis, Lena Tomlinson, Lena Clauson, Lulu Lewis, Elizabeth Allis, Ernestine Smith, Ida Randolph, Mabel Mitchell, Lulu Clauson, Ethel Titsworth, Gussie Clauson, Madge Sutphen, Mabel Marson, Edith Davis, Anna Wooden, Bessie Titsworth, Jessie Utter, Ida Spicer, May Ross, Nellie Spicer, Maud Mosher and the Messrs. Marc Clauson, Everett Kimball, Frank Smith, Frank Clauson, Nathan Lewis, Harry Maxson, John Sutphen, George Wooden, Frank J. Hubbard, Arthur T. Spicer, Asa Randolph and Robert Randolph.

HER HOME PRE-EMPTIED BY FRIENDS.

Mrs. Olive Wyckoff Given a Party by Her Many Friends.

Miss Olive Wyckoff, of East Sixth street, was completely surprised last Thursday by a few of her friends and an evening of pleasure followed. Those who planned the surprise were Miss Minnie Stiglitz and Frank Wyckoff, and they had it so arranged that the party was to meet at the home of the Misses Mills, of East Fifth street. In the meantime, the surprised went to the home of her sister, Mrs. Runyon, for the purpose of spending the evening, but the latter persuaded her sister to return home for something, and when she arrived she found that the house had been completely captured by the young people. After all had regained their composure, the balance of the time was passed in playing games of all sorts, and at a late hour refreshments was served. Those present were Miss Minnie Wiman, Miss Minnie Stiglitz, Miss Ella Conover, and Julius Williams, John Stoker, Wm. Wimans, S H Feuner, Mr. and Mrs. Welsh.

The Birds of New Jersey.

"The Birds of New Jersey" is a book which has just been issued by the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners of New Jersey. The book is a handsome octavo volume of 278 pages, of which thirty-one are full page illustrations gotten up expressly for this work and made either from specimens in the state that purpose or taken from the American Museum of Natural History in New York city. The work was compiled by Charles A. Shriner, Fish and Game Protector of this State; and was carefully revised by Witmer Stone, the Curator of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. For the purpose of disseminating the information contained in the work as cheaply as possible to the general public the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners has placed the book on sale at the low rate of $1 a copy. Address all orders to Charles A. Shriner, Paterson.

Officers Presented With Jewels.

Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., held a very pleasant meeting last Thursday, and there were several surprises. After the initiation of three candidates and the reception of one proposition, Past Masters Rogers and Newcorn were each presented with jewels emblematic of their office. The recipients responded by making remarks suitable to the occasion. Following the meeting refreshments was served.

T. A. B. Dance.

The T. A. B. Society gave a dance last Thursday in their hall on West Fourth street, at which a pleasant time was enjoyed by all. The committee of arrangements was: C. J. McCarty, chairman; T. Corrigan, D Mack, Edward McCue, C. N. Powell. Deanie Keefe was floor manager and Michael Keefe and James Monahan the assistants.

CONTEMPT NOT INTENDED.

CONGER WAS ON THE WRONG TRAIN.

County Clerk Explains That He Was Carried Past Somerville.

Sheriff Litterest Friday morning, under an order issued by the Somerset County Court, escorted County Clerk John H. Conger, of Middlesex county, to Somerville. The order was an attachment of the person for contempt of court. The County Clerk failed to file an accounting in the estate of James Wood, who died some years ago at Bound Brook. Mr. Conger's wife is a daughter of Mr. Wood. Mr. Conger and Mrs. Wood were the executors of the will.

When Somerville was reached Mr. Conger explained to the court that on the day the order to show cause was returnable he and his counsel started for Somerville. At New Brunswick they boarded the wrong train and when Somerville was reached the train was travelling at the rate of sixty miles an hour and did not stop until it was clear across the State. There was no train back which reached Somerville until after court had risen. He thus explained his failure to the accounting.

The court accepted the explanations and allowed the accounting to be filed, but did not discharge the contempt proceedings, although he intimated he would do so.

FINEST SODA FOUNTAIN.

RANDOLPH TO HAVE THE MOST ELABORATE IN THE COUNTRY.

Will be Constructed of Onyx and is Designed Especially for Mr. Randolph—Equipped With Every Convenience.

Plainfield is soon to see the handsomest soda water fountain in the country. That is no idle boast but a fact. The fountain is to be put up in Randolph's pharmacy on West Front street and while there are larger ones to be found in this country, there are to be found none that will equal it in design and beauty. It is the only fountain ever made completely of onyx and it will be a valuable one, indeed.

The new fountain was designed especially for Mr. Randolph and is a triump of decorative art. It will be a beauty in design and large enough to answer the requirements of the store. The fountain will be twenty-one feet five inches long. It will have thirty-six one gallon jars for the different syrups, and two two-gallon jars for chocolate. There are four draught arms for dispensing soda water and eight smaller ones for mineral waters. One of the latter will be devoted to city water so that a glass of water can be obtained at any time. Two others will be devoted to whipped cream. The syrup jars are arranged in two groups, one on each side of a central grotto, which will be one of the features of the new fountain. It is a recess in the middle of the fountain, lined with mirrors and handsomely decorated in marbles and onyx. In the center of the grotto is to hang a fancy globe which will be illuminated at night by three electric lights behind it.

The counter is to be Knoxville marble, while the syrup tanks are to be faced with slabs of onyx, bounded with silver. Eleven Welshbach burners and electric lights will be placed on different parts of the fountain and inclosed in fancy globes.

The upper structure will be built in cabinet form, but completely of onyx, while fancy carvings will adorn it. Two large mirrors will be placed over the tanks, a round one over the grotto, and tall narrow ones at each end. A large clock, framed in onyx, will be placed in the centre of the top. The fountain will be ten feet high. Underneath the fountain will be the marble refrigerator and porcelain ice-cream cabinet. The front the counter will be made of onyx and white Italian marble, with the top of the latter. A metal floor will be laid behind the counter, and the wooden fixtures of the store will be decorated in accordance with the rest of the fittings.

The fountain is now being constructed by Charles Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, and will be placed in position about the middle of March.

WENT FOR A PAPER, LOST HIS LIFE

Gauld Struck by a Royal Blue Liner and Instantly Killed.

George Gould, formerly a blacksmith at Roselle, was instantly killed Friday morning at Roselle station by a train of the Royal Blue Line, that was fifteen minutes late.

Mr. Gould was employed in the Central Railroad shops at Elizabethport and resided in Union township. He went to the station to take a train to his work and crossed the tracks to the news-stand to get a paper. At this moment the express came whirling along. Gould became confused, and before he could get out of the way the train was upon him. His body was tossed high in the air and his skull fractured. He was dead when picked up. Mr. Gould was fifty-six years old and a widower.

George and Charles Gould, of this city, are his sons.

WELCOME TO A PASTOR.

BETHEL CHAPEL EVIDENCE THEIR HOSPITALITY TO REV. MR. TILTON.

The Affair in the Hands of Stephen A Ginna, the Superintendent.—Dr. Richards Made an Address Just to the Point.

The members of Bethel chapel gave a hearty welcome to their new pastor, Rev. Mr. Tilton, and Mrs. Tilton in the chapel, last Thursday. The ladies of the chapel had fitted up a cosy reception room during the day in which the pastor met and shook hands with many new friends.

The reception included a musical and literary entertainment and the several numbers on the informal programme were heartily applauded. It included piano solos, "Tam O'Shanter" and "The Midget" by Alfred White; a recitation, "The Welcome Raven," by Miss Lillie Jones; recitation, "The Model Church," Miss Edith Johnson; a song, "The teacher and the boy," by Walter Peterson and a soprano solo, "I love you too well," by Miss Kingsley. Stephen A. Ginna, in a few well-chosen words, introduced Rev. Mr. Tilton, who expressed his appreciation for the hospitality already extended to both himself and Mrs. Tilton. "We are reminded," said he, "of the patriarch Abraham, who looked from his window and saw three strangers, and he bade them enter and enjoy his hospitality. You have welcomed us to your homes and to your hearts, and we desire to show our appreciation of your hospitality. We hope as we go with you that we may be helpful."

Mr. Ginna called upon one whom he characterized as "Father Richards," of the Crescent Avenue church. Dr. Richards said this was the second pleasant service he had attended that day. During the day he was at work in his study when a carriage drove up and a young couple alighted and after the usual formalities they were pronounced man and wife.

In behalf of the whole church he extended a cordial welcome to Rev. and Mrs. Hilton and assured them that they will find a hearty welcome in Bethel chapel. Coffee, chocolate, cake, candy and fruit were then served in abundance, and Miss Lulu Douglas rendered some sweet piano music during the evening.

The reception committee consisted of Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Fisher, Miss Euphemia Dorsey and Miss Charlotte Dorsey.

The following ladies served tea, coffee and chocolate: Miss Phillis Holland, Miss Charlotte Dorsey and Miss Mary Brown. Those who passed the refreshments were Miss Bertha Anderson, Miss Mamie Hull and Miss Emma Marcellas.

A MARRIAGE RECEPTION

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Terry Honored by Their Acquaintances

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Terry, Jr., of East Third street, who were married last September, were given a reception last Friday, by Mrs. Andrew Mattis, of 301 Madison avenue, aunt of the bride.

The first part of the evening was devoted to playing progressive euchre, the prizes for which were won by Garrett Mattis and S. C. Terry, Jr. At 10 o'clock a dinner with fourteen courses was served. Following the dinner Mr. and Mrs. Mattis presented the bride and groom with an elegant dinner and tea set.

The floor was then cleared for dancing which was continued until an early hour this morning.

Those present were: Miss Jennie Brokaw, Miss Minnie Wiman, Miss Maggie Shepherd, Miss Kate Griffin, Miss Laura Johnson, Miss Katie Johnson, Miss Henrietta Johnson Miss May Bellis; Wm. Wiman, Winfield Coddington, Jacob Shepherd, Wm. Messler, Garrett Mattis, Harry Mattis; Mrs. James Southard, and Mrs. George Shepherd, mother of the bride.

GIVEN IN HIS NAME.

A Pleasing Parlor Meeting Arranged by the King's Daughter's.

A pleasing parlor entertainment was given last Friday at the home of Councilman and Mrs. John Valiant, ot Myrtle avenue, under the auspices of the Golden Rule Circle, King's Daughters. The object for which the entertainment was given was to raise money to assist in the support of the city nurse, and the collection which was taken during the evening was most gratifying. The following excellent programme was finely rendered: Instrumental trio, Misses Valiant and Van Fleet, recitation, Miss French; vocal solo, Miss Alice Carroll; violin solo, Dykeman Winckler; recitation, Miss Pond; vocal solo, Miss Grace Carroll; piano solo, Mrs. Johnston.

The president, Mrs. Most, had charge of the affair, and Miss Lizzie Hoagland and Bertha Stevens and Miss Minnie Marsh, composing the literary committee, arranged the programme. The refreshment committee consisted of Miss Lizzie Valiant and Miss Clara Van Fleet.

The collection amounted to $5.55, which is excellent considering the number of very young people present.

DEFEATED THE COUNTRY CLUB IN THEIR OWN HOME.

The Defeated Ones Put Up a Good Game Though and Made Things Interesting For the Visitors From Over the Brook.

In whist, bowling, billiards and pool the champions of the Park Club, of the borough, and the Union County Country Club, of this city, met last Thursday at the home of the Country Club. It was the occasion of the annual contest between these two clubs and finally resulted in a complete victory for the Park Club representatives who won in each of the four different contests.

Two years ago these clubs met twice, once at each of the club houses and the result was a tie, each club winning two events at each contest. Last year the contest was postponed from one date to another and finally given up for the year as it was then too late in the season.

Although the Parks won every contest, last evening, it must not be thought that they had an easy thing of it. On the contrary, the fight was a very close one and the Park's had several narrow escapes from defeat. Especially was this so in billiards and bowling when the Park's almost met their match. There were several games played in each contest but the result was decided by the aggregate score in all the games. Had it been otherwise, the score would have been somewhat different, as in two of the contests the clubs broke even, although the Park's scored the greater total number of points.

The Country Club house was a lively place with all the different contests going on. Besides the participants in the various contests, a score of the rooters of the Park Club came over to see the fun and encourage their friends on to victory.

The first of the four contests to be completed was the billiard match. The Park Club was represented in this by Augustus Van Deventer and Charles H. Lyman while the home club had only one representative, George A. Chapman. Two games were played, Mr. Chapman playing against each of the Park Club men. The first game between Van Deventer and Chapman was exciting and the Plainfield man kept close to his borough opponent. The Park Club man made an extra effort at the end and left his opponent nine points behind. Chapman and Lyman played a game that was still more exciting. Lyman obtained a lead toward the last and was within one point of going out when luck seemed to go against him. Rather than be missed easy shots, but at last Chapman braced up and went out with Lyman only one point behind.

The scores were as follows:

PARK CLUB. First Game.		COUNTRY CLUB. First Game.
Aug. Van Deventer	100	G. A. Chapman	91
Second Game.		Second Game.
C. H. Lyman	99	G. A. Chapman	100
	199		191

It has been planned to let two entirely different teams play two games, but neither of the clubs had ten available men with them. The regular team of the Park Club, except Ball, whose place was filled by his father, rolled in the first game against the Counties. It did not make the slightest difference to the latter team, however, for they took the lead at the start and proceeded to give the Park bowlers a lively race. The home team led almost all the game, and finally defeated the Parks by 26 pins.

The score for the first game was as follows:

PARK CLUB.		COUNTRY CLUB.
VanBuren	182	Beebe	183
Ball	139	Smith	114
Rushmore	149	Jackson	132
Worth	132	Kinney	138
Thiers	124	Fleming	136
	726		703

The visitors woke up for the second game, and after making several changes in the team, started in to turn the tables on the Country Club team. The Parks secured a lead in the first frame, and held it to the close, winning by 40 pins. VanBuren put up a great game, and more than made up for the hard luck that Murray had in upsetting the pins. The score was as follows:

PARK CLUB.		COUNTRY CLUB.
VanBuren	196	Beebe	135
Wilson	180	Booth	137
Rushmore	149	Jackson	134
Smith	135	Kinney	139
Murphy	124	Fleming	131
	735		696

Total Aggregate Scores:

	Parks.	Counties.
First game	699	726
Second game	735	696
	1434	1422

Teams of two represented each club in the pool match. The Country Club had H. G. Runkle and H. M. Stockton as their team, while the visitors were Elston M. French and Roger W. Erickson. In the first round, the clubs each won a game, but in the second the contestants were changed, and the Park combination proved too strong for the home team, while the Parks took both games. The scores were as follows:

PARK CLUB.		COUNTRY CLUB.
E. M. French	100	H. G. Runkle	72
Second Game.
R. W. Erickson	88	H. M. Stockton	100
Third Game.
R. W. Erickson	100	H. G. Runkle	93
Fourth Game.
E. M. French	100	H. M. Stockton	87
	388		352

The last game was a particularly exciting one as Stockton at one time had the lead, and it was only by great playing that French finally recovered the same.

Three of the "big four" of the Park Club came over to play whist, and they had no trouble, with the aid of Senator Reed, in defeating the home team at whist by a score of 12 to 5. The Park team consisted of Messrs. Rogers, Townsend, Howell and Reed. The Country club team was made up of C. W. Beebe, F. C. Kirchoff, J. P. Mason and E. C. Perkins. The score by rounds was as follows:

	PARK CLUB.	COUNTRY CLUB.
First round	5	0
Second round	5	0
Third round	2	5

Suffering in the South.

Sometime ago the women of Warren chapel sent a barrel of useful articles to Miss Francis Ufford, who is doing missionary work at Abermarle, Stanley county, N. C. Yesterday, Mrs. William Wilson, of the borough, received a reply from Miss Ufford regarding the barrel. The latter expressed her gratitude for the articles, and said that they would be put to the best possible use. She also said that many were suffering in that locality for the necessaries of life, and the articles received would go a great way in helping those in need.

A LIVE BULL THE TROPHY

VALUABLE PRIZE SHOT FOR AT THE CLIMAX CLUB TRAP.

The Weather Was Too Cold For Hysterics But the Participants' Interest Was Sustained From the Start to Finish.

It was cold and damp at the grounds of the Climax Gun Club, Thursday afternoon, when the crack trap shooters assembled from far and near and they had to keep moving about or take shelter in the sheds to keep warm. The flakes of snow kept falling at intervals throughout the afternoon, but the expected snow storm did not come. The bull, the stake for the shoot of the afternoon, was tied up in the shed and mildly watched the shooters as they decided among themselves who was to have him. It was the day for the regular monthly club shoot of the Climax Gun Club and so the members came out in force. They used the regular traps with the clay targets.

The shoot for the bull was conducted in another part of the grounds and the mark in this case was a block of wood, four inches square, placed in a black background. The object was to have as many as possible of the shot stick in the block and the contestant having the most would get the bull. There was lots of excitement in this shoot and the crowd of spectators braved the cold raw air to see the fun.

The day was not an ideal one for shooting on account of the cold and snow which obstructed the sight, but the light was good and the background of gray clouds made the targets easy to see. There was but little wind to disturb the contestants.

The club shoot resulted as follows: Woodruff, handicap 2, 24; Singer, handicap 9, 14; Brantingham, handicap 2, 22; Coleman, handicap 7, 23; Swoley, handicap 4, 21; Lister, handicap 14, 16; Manning, handicap 1, 20; Scott, handicap 5, 21. The shoot was at twenty-five targets for the scratch man.

The bull was finaly won by Thomas Brantingham of South Plainfield.

OF THE STAR COURSE.

A Fine Entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Thursday Night.

The Star Course of entertainments at the Y. M. C. A. this winter have been unusually enjoyable and the one held last Thursday was particularly delightful. It was held in the regular hall of the association which was well-filled with an appreciative audience.

Miss Addie Parker Jackson, who gave several readings during the programme, is too well known to Plainfield audiences to need any comment as regards the excellence of her selections. They were given in a specially realistic manner and the audience showed its appreciation of her rendition by the hearty applause that followed all her selections.

Albert E. Smith was a new entertainer to Plainfield people and they found him very original and entertaining. His exhibition of prestidigitation was very good while his skill at shadowgraphy was remarkable. He also did well at ventriloquism and his facial imitations.

The soprano solos by Miss Agnes R. Bowen were well selected and her willing solos were something rather novel and very well rendered.

Hanging Lamp Fell.

Wm. Addis, of North avenue, had a narrow escape from a serious fire a few nights ago. He was sitting beneath a hanging lamp and the wire which held it was burned in two by the heat. This allowed the lamp to drop on the floor. The oil spread rapidly and the flames soon burned fiercely. Mr. Addis as soon as possible threw the lamp out, but not before his hands were quite badly burned. Otherwise there was no damage.

BOLD THIEF'S WARNING.

LEFT A NOTE AFTER INVADING AND PILLAGING A HOUSE.

Next Time He Calls All Persons Awake Will Be Put to Sleep, the Note Says—His Visit Last Night Evidently Cut Short.

It is not the usual habit of thieves to leave their name and address when playing their trade, but such was the case with the one that entered the residence of the Misses Davis, at 1202 Watchung avenue, last Thursday. It is evident that the burglar entered by the front door and departed by the same way. He secured some plunder but was evidently frightened away by something or somebody, for he left the most valuable articles behind.

The Misses Davis live at the home before mentioned with the colored servant. Their father died in August. Last evening they went out to make a call and spend the evening at the home of a friend. They left the servant in the house who retired to the kitchen to write a letter, after which she went to her room for the night. That happened about nine o'clock, or a few minutes after. The Misses Davis returned a few minutes before ten o'clock. To their surprise, the door was open about six feet and there were foot prints in the snow on the piazza. As they had left the door locked, they were naturally surprised.

The was no sign of anyone around and they entered the house. When a lamp was lighted, they looked in the rooms to find the drawers of the tables and book cases had been pulled out and their contents emptied all over the floor. This was too strong evidence to be doubted and the two women, greatly alarmed, hurried to the home of a friend who had a telephone and word was sent to the police station.

Sergeant Kiely was at the station when the word was received and he immediately hurried to the scene in a hack. A thorough search of the house was made but it failed to reveal the presence of the prowler. He, or she, which ever it was, had not forgotten to leave something, for the searchers found a note lying on the table in the dining room. It was written on half a sheet torn from a blank book. The paper was cheap and ruled. The note was as follows:

When I come again all I find awake I will put to sleep
yours truly
Mary Jane
Answer soon
46 Pulaski St

The note was a lack of spelling which suggested that the writer of the note was somewhat illiterate. The writing was rather small, and had the appearance of a feminine hand. The signature had evidently been written with care, as the letters were so carefully finished, and the writing was much darker than the rest. The note was written in pencil.

The unbidden guest had left other traces of his visit. Every drawer in the first and second floors had been ransacked and the contents given a general search. In the sleeping room of one of the occupants of the house there was a jewel box, containing some diamonds, a gold watch and some other little trinkets. The cover had been removed from the box but the contents had not been touched. It is supposed that the burglar was disturbed just as he reached this part of his investigation, perhaps by the servant when she retired, and departed suddenly leaving the jewels untouched. The only missing article is a pocket book, which contained $7, mostly in small change.

The intruder had evidently provided for his escape, for the window opening out on the hedge which bounds the property of Mr. Opdyke, next door, was found open. There were no foot prints on the snow below it, nor was the snow on a large vase, close to the window, disturbed, as it would probably have been had the burglar made his entrance that way. The door is said to have been locked as the Misses Davis went out, but when they returned, it was open, and there were no traces of violence on it. It must have been opened from the inside or else by the use of a skeleton key.

The Misses Davis place implicit trust in their servant, and do not believe that she was an accomplice in the burglary.

Roundsman Fredericksos made another investigation of the house and premises this morning, but he failed to reveal any clue to the thief.

Ploughshare Post Surprised.

A surprise party was given to W. S. Rogers last Friday, at his home on Mountain Park Farm, near Washingtonville. It was gotten up by Charles Miles, of Somerset street, and the party, which went from this city and the borough, rode up their in a two sleigh. The evening was spent mostly in dancing. All spent a very pleasant evening and returned soon after midnight.

Veterans to Attend Reorganization.

A division of the Union Veteran League of New Jersey will attend the inaugural ceremonies of President-elect McKinley. Already several of the League in this city are planning to go. Those who contemplate the trip should communicate with Major Morris, of Newark, who has charge of the arrangements.

ASHTON'S MIND RAVES.

"YOU'VE KILLED ME" EXCLAIMED ONE OF THE SKILLMAN WRECK VICTIMS.

The Shock of the Terrible Affair Unnerved the P. & R. Local Engineer and He Has Not Been Rational Since.

The story of the recent wreck at Skillman as seen by William Ashton, engineer of the P. & R. local, has yet to be told, for Ashton is still in no condition to relate the facts. While he was but little injured physically, the shock to his nervous system was a terrible one and he has not yet recovered from it. The accident at Hopewell, where the two men had been struck by the train, had unnerved him and he lost his head completely when the collision came.

It is related that soon after the collision one of the other train men, who was badly injured, turned to Ashton and said:

"You've killed me."

Ashton was taken to his home after the wreck. His mind began to wander at once and he has not been in a rational state since. The doctors in charge put him under the influence of morphine at once and it has been necessary to keep him in that condition ever since. At times his ravings were terrible and then he would sink into a state of semi-unconsciousness. During the last week he has been able to walk about his room.

Twice during the last week the officials of the P. & R. railroad have called at the home of the engineer, but they have been unable to talk with him. At one time, the doctors were afraid that Ashton would never recover from the mental shock, but they now have hopes of his recovery and think that he will be able to talk and, perhaps, tell his story some day this week.

C. E.'S SIXTEENTH YEAR

ENDEAVORERS HELD AN ANNIVERSARY SERVICE SUNDAY NIGHT.

The Meeting Addressed by W. D. Murray Whose Talk Was About Loyalty of Young People to the Grand Movement.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Congregational church celebrated the sixteenth birthday of the Endeavor movement in a quiet but very pleasant manner, Sunday. Christian Endeavor Day, the anniversary of the formation of the first society, is February 2, and as Jan. 31st was the Sunday nearest that date, the Congregational young people held their special service on that evening.

W. D. Murray, president of the Young Men's Christian Association, had charge of the meeting. First came a service of song, then came Scripture reading, prayers by Mr. Murray, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, and A. C. LaBoyteaux, and a beautiful sacred song, "Do ye Right and Fear Not," by Thomas, sung by Miss Elfleda Alberti Whiting, very sweetly, and with much feeling. Mr. Murray's talk on "Loyalty" was very simple and practical, but thoroughly helpful. He spoke of the characteristics that go to make up a loyal disciple of Jesus Christ, quoting first of all Dr. Gordon's statement that while we are saved by looking at the cross, we become disciples only by lifting the cross. We must be willing to let everything else go, rather than have our friendship for Christ suffer.

Then, Jesus said that men shall know us for His disciples, if we bear much fruit. There are some people in Plainfield that are known to us all as workers for the Lord. But do most of us bear much fruit? We may bear a little with our Sunday-school teaching and Endeavor work, but with most of us it is but little. Yet this is one of the tests of discipleship. Continuing in Christ's Word is another. How quickly it would solve all our difficulties to live our whole lives in accordance with His Word! Then, we must have self-denial; lay aside not only every sin, but every weight that hinders you in your Christian course. The Christian life is a race, yet we don't seem to realize that it calls for hard work; we wander aimlessly along, instead of running the race with all our might. We are told, also, to run the race "with patience," and we shall find plenty of occasion for the exercise of that virtue. Another way in which Christ said men should know our discipleship is by our love of one for another. Sometime study up in your New Testament the love of Jesus Christ for men, and then test by that your love to your fellows. For we are commanded to love as He loved. Then, be out-and-out disciples. Be ready to do anything, or go anywhere He would have you. It is the out-and-out Christian whose life is full of joy. If you want to enjoy the Christian life, show your loyalty always and everywhere.

After a closing hymn, Rev. C. L. Goodrich dismissed the congregation with the benediction.

Dr. Lewis to Move.

Rev. A. H. Lewis, D. D., has leased a suite of ten rooms in the Babcock building, and he and his family will soon leave their present quarters in the parsonage of the Seventh-Day Baptist church and take up their residence there.

OFFICER REDUCED IN RANK.

MATTOX NO LONGER ROUNDSMAN.

Fined a Month's Pay, Too—Patrolman Flynn Promoted to Round-man.

The first of the expected changes in the police force under the new administration took place Saturday night, and was quite a surprise, too, inasmuch as one officer was reduced in rank and disciplined severely.

The unfortunate officer was William Mattox, who has been serving as a roundsman for the past year. Last summer Roundsman Mattox became involved in trouble in company with Patrolman Cooney. While the latter was obliged to resign from the force some time ago as a result of the affair, Mattox continued on duty, it was said, because when questioned by the Police Board he made a clean breast of the affair, and besides at the time of the conduct which was considered wrong he was off duty and in citizen clothes. But the matter was not definitely settled till Saturday, when he appeared before the Police Board and waived the right to trial.

The stripes were then removed from his coat and he was reduced to the rank of a patrolman. He was fined $80, a month's pay, which will be deducted in $10 payments, so that the officer will not be obliged to lose the sum all at once.

Patrolman Flynn was promoted to the vacant position temporarily.

The resignation of Patrolman Flanagan was received and accepted by the Board.

HURT OUT ON THE OCEAN

W. E. LOWE PICKED UP FOR DEAD ON AN ATLANTIC LINER.

During a Storm He Was Thrown Against a Railing in the Cabin—In a Precarious Condition Several Days.

W. E. Lowe, of Park avenue, who returned from Europe on Saturday, had an exceedingly narrow escape from fatal injury while coming across the water. It all happened on Sunday January 24th, when the Steamship Brittanica, on which Mr. Lowe was a passenger, met one of the severest storms of the season. The steamer rolled and tossed for hours and Mr. Lowe, who was in the smoking cabin during the storm, was violently thrown against an iron railing and some heavy wood work.

He was picked up and when some one gave instructions to send for a physician it was stated that he was not a physician that was needed but a minister, for it was thought surely that Mr. Lowe was dead. For forty-eight hours he was unconscious and his life was despaired of, and it was only through the best of medical attendance that he was brought to a safe condition. His head was severely cut, and both wrists were sprained to an alarming degree. He also sustained a severe injury to his right leg. For several days he was helpless and the result of his injuries could not be ascertained.

He reached home Saturday evening and Dr. Davis has been in attendance ever since.

Monday afternoon Mr. Lowe and his family left for New York, where they will spend several months at the Savoy Hotel.

Mr. Lowe is a member of the insurance firm of Johnson & Higgins, of New York, and he went to Europe on business and also to see his daughter, who is studying there.

KIDNAPPED HER CHILD.

Mrs. Forman Again Has Possession of Her Little Girl.

Mrs. Jonas Forman, who deserted her husband two weeks ago, went to New Brunswick, Saturday afternoon, and kidnapped her three-year old girl from the home of her husband's father, Jonas Forman, in Albany street.

It will be remembered that when the mother left her husband she took her child with her. The husband's sister found that the child had been left with a friend of Mrs. Forman, in Newark, and brought her back to Plainfield. A week ago yesterday the husband took the child to his father's home in New Brunswick.

At first Mrs. Forman was refused admittance, but later was allowed to see her child. She seemed deeply affected and caressed her. Then seizing the little girl in her arms she rushed out of the house, and ran directly into a grocery store across the street. Her father-in-law followed, but the grocery door had been locked. Mrs. Forman meanwhile escaped through a side alleyway and disappeared.

Forman went to New Brunswick yesterday, but could get no trace of his wife.

Intended For Government Forts.

Last Saturday evening the Pond Tool Machine Company shipped a gun weighing over thirty-three tons to the Quartermaster's department, New York. The gun was mounted on a carriage which had been built at the works in this city. Some wag placed a sign on the special car which carried the gun, which read "Donation to Cuba, from the Pond Tool Works." The gun is intended for one of the government forts.

STILL SEEKING WAGGIE.

MISS PHILLMORE DISAPPEARED FROM PLAINFIELD IN 1879.

Her Parents Once Lived Here, and Maggie, Then a Young Girl, Came Back for a Visit[and Then She Disappeared.

John Phillmore, a gray-haired old toy maker, who lives with a married daughter in the tenement at 97 Park street, New York, and makes dolls' chairs, is renewing the efforts, made at intervals during the last eighteen years, to discover the whereabouts of his daughter, Maggie, who, in 1879, when living in Phillipsburg, suddenly left her home and went to Ottawa, Kan.

Phillmore and his wife and a family of five children had lived for years in Plainfield before Maggie's disappearance. The girl had attended for several years the Plainfield public school when she attracted the attention of Mrs. H. Kimball, the wife of a New York banker living in Plainfield. Maggie was bright and neat, and Mrs. Kimball engaged her as a nurse-maid for her baby. She cared for the child until, in the summer 1879, Phillmore moved to Phillipsburg. A week afterward Maggie's eldest sister returned to Plainfield. A week later Maggie made up her mind to go back to Plainfield to see her sister. She dressed herself in her best on Sunday afternoon and told her mother that she was going to Sunday school at the Episcopal church in Phillipsburg. She went to the school, but did not return.

Two days later her father found her in the family of Charles Dodd, then Chief of Police of Plainfield. She knew the Chief well, and not finding her sister's address had gone to his home. She had also visited the home of her old mistress, Mrs. Kimball, in East Plainfield, from which she learned that Mrs. Parkinson, a friend of the Kimballs, who was on a visit from the west, was anxious to secure a maid to take back to her home in Kansas to care for the children. Maggie told her sister that she was thinking seriously of accepting the offer to go west, and that she would let her know her decision later. The elder sister forbade her making the trip.

When Phillmore again visited Plainfield several days later to take Maggie back home, he found that she had gone to Ottawa with Mrs. Parkinson. He wrote to Mrs. Parkinson asking after his daughter, and requesting an explanation of her departure without his knowledge. No answer to these inquiries was received, and the years went by without any word from the missing daughter. Mrs. Phillmore died without knowing what had become of her child.

Maggie's eldest sister, who married and lives in Plainfield, tried to discover some trace of the missing girl, but without success. She and her father are now going to appeal to the postal authorities at Ottawa, Kan., to trace the movements of Mrs. Parkinson, in order that something may be discovered as to Maggie's career.

"All I want," said her father yesterday, "is to learn where she is and whether she is well and happy. If alive, she is a woman of twenty-eight years now, and of course is free to stay where she is if she prefers to do so. A single line from her would be a grateful proof that she still thinks of home and us. Of course it is idle now to talk about her right to go away while she was yet a child. It is very strange, though, that we have never heard a word from or about her through all these long years."—Sun.

STOLE A POOR WOMAN'S WASHING.

A Contemptible Piece of Thieving Mrs. Jones Was Subjected to.

One of the meanest and most detestible acts of thieving is that of robbing washerwomen at night. The latest robbery of this kind is reported by Mrs. Jones, a hard working laundress of Watchung avenue. She was busy about the house between eight and nine o'clock, Saturday evening, while a clothesline filled with her patrons'clothes was being purloined in the dooryard by some unknown rascal. When Mrs. Jones went to gather up the garments, she discovered many pieces missing, and an inventory placed the total amount at about five dollars.

Back to Their Own Home.

There was great rejoicing at the First Church of Christ Sunday, for the members of this denomination had returned to their church edifice for the first time since they had leased it to the Plymouth Brethren. It was possible that the owners of the church should regain possession, and the first service was held yesterday. Rev. Mr. Thomas, of New York, preached both morning and evening to large congregations. Meetings will be continued every evening at this church until further notice.

Presented With a Watch.

There was a surprise for Miss Bainbride, the retiring superintendent of the primary department at the Sunday school of the Congregational church, Sunday afternoon. She was presented with a handsome little silver watch as a token of remembrance from her friends in the Sunday-school.

INTRODUCED TEACHERS

BOROUGH SCHOOL MENTORS MET THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Social Intercourse Was the Marked Feature of the Reception, Though A. V. D. Honeyman Made an Address.

A pleasing reception was given at the North Plainfield Public High School last Saturday evening. It was arranged by Superintendent Warde, for the purpose of having the teachers meet the members of the Board of Education and their wives, so that all might become better acquainted, and the result was all that was desired, although it was to be regretted that some of the members and their wives could not be present, owing to illness. However, the affair was a great success and the purpose was accomplished.

Dr. Warde, whose entertaining qualities are proverbial, was at his best, and he made it a point to see that everybody enjoyed themselves. Of course, sociability was the principal number on the programme, and in this respect everybody was successful. Interspersing this portion of the entertainment, piano selections were given by Miss Higham, teacher of the Kindergarten; Richard Menzell and Bert Simpson. Each number was finely rendered and received hearty applause.

During this part of the programme Dr. Warde and several of the teachers served chocolate, wafers and oranges, and while those present were enjoying the refreshments, A. V. D. Honeyman, a member of the board, spoke a few words of encouragement to the teachers. He complimented them for the excellent showing they had made, and regretted very much that the present Board of Education was unable to be present. In speaking for the board, he said that he knew that the members were all desirious that the school should progress as steadily as it had during the past year. He spoke of the many improvements that had been made. He felt sure that if the borough would do their duty at the coming election many more things would be secured in the future. The improvements he said had all been secured without an extra appropriation. Mr. Honeyman also complimented Dr. Warde for his excellent work. He said that as long as people would stay on the right side of him they would find him to be pleasing, gentle and as big hearted as anyone would wish. Otherwise they must expect that he would be severe. In speaking about the president, Mr. McCutchen, he said that he was wholly in sympathy with the teachers in their work, and that he knew just how hard and arduous the work is, also what an able and efficient corps of teachers the school has.

Mr. Honeyman urged the teachers to be gentle and kind with the little ones in the school, for he knew that more good work could be accomplished in that way. The young mind is very retentive often, and the teacher has a great influence in shaping it, therefore he advised that they be as patient as possible with the scholars.

The speaker was attentively listened to and at the close he was heartily applauded.

A short time was then spent in continuing the sociability, after which the happy company retired agreeing that a most profitable evening had been passed.

Among the guests present were Mr. and Mrs. A. V. D. Honeyman, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Wells, Miss Georgia Fountain, R. M. Fountain, H. E. Waring, and with one or two exceptions all of the teachers were present.

The Fair Lillian's Return.

The announcement that the pretty and charming soubrette, Miss Lillian Kennedy, will appear for one night in her great New York success, "The Deacon's Daughter," will be greeted with delight by our many theatre-goers. It will be given with the same cast as it was presented in all the large cities, the same has the endorsement of the press and clergy of the entire country.

Assessment Stands.

The application of John F. McIntyre for a reduction of the assessment on his farm in Hillsborough township near South Somerville, has been refused by the State Board of Taxation. H. K. Gaston appeared for Mr. McIntyre and James J. Bergen for the township.

Spider and the Fly.

Plainfield, the spider, is inviting North Plainfield, the fly, to walk into her consolidation parlor. North Plainfield is probably too "fly," however, to voluntarily shoulder a large lump of the city's sewer debt.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

$160 Towards Their New Carpet.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed church, who have agreed to furnish a new carpet for the church the coming summer, are very grateful for the liberal patronage of their friends at the supper held last Thursday and Friday evenings, which netted them the amount above mentioned.

THEY CAME UNEXPECTEDLY

BUT HOSTS EQUAL TO THE OCCASION.

Westfield Couple Happily Surprised Last Evening.

Amid jingling sleigh bells and tooting horns, Thursday, a merry party comprising two sleigh loads left this city to attend an anniversary surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Darsh, of Westfield, it being their sixth wedding anniversary. Mrs. Darsh was delighted with the surprise and proved a hostess fully equal to the occasion.

The party had made arrangements to utilize the store occupied by George Voehl, the baker, and the entire party marched to the store when all was in readiness. The sound of Prof. Frazee's music could be heard and the merry party danced the hours away. At midnight Mrs. Darsh, assisted by Mrs. Taylor, Miss Marguerite Laughlin and Miss Decker, served refreshments, after which John H. Carney amused all with his droll dialect stories.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Darsh, Mr. and Mrs. John Darsh, Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Taylor, William Heinecke, D. Campbell Austin, Henry Chas. Piker, F. Decker, Miss Anna Decker, Miss Louise Stauffer, Miss Minnie Monts, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Doener, Mrs. Magarauite Laughlun, of Westfield; Miss Lillie Brögiy, Miss Annie Gee, John Voehl of Bayonne; Miss Sarah Frazee, Peoria, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. John F. Culp, Liberty, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sebring, Monticello, N. Y.; Mr. J. Higgins, New York; Mr. and Mrs. John H. Carney, Mrs. Magarauite Salter, Misses Tina and Della Voehl, Ellwood Sebring, Mr. and Mrs. George Voehl, Plainfield.

REALITY OF RELIGION

PROF. FISKE EXPLAINS THE CREDENTIALS OF A SUPREME BEING.

The Age is a Critical One, He Says, But Modern Scientific Thought Believes in a First Cause, and He Calls it God.

Prof. John Fiske delivered his lecture on the "Everlasting Reality of Religion" in the Y. M. C. A. hall last Friday before an interested audience.

Prof. Fiske began his lecture by paying a tribute to Voltaire for never denying the everlasting reality of religion when the great men of letters of his time gloried in atheism. He also spoke of disagreeing with Prof. Haeckel, who asserted that because the doctrine of evolution is true there is an end of God, religion and the soul. Prof. Haeckel has not been driven to his conclusion, he said, "by evolution, but by a mental kink."

Prof. Fiske went on to say that the skepticism of today is no frivolous mockery. The age is critical. Everything in heaven and earth must show its credentials. We do know that everything in creation is according to law. One part of the story does not give the lie to the other. Modern scientific thought believes in a first cause which he preferred to call God. Prof. Fiske then spoke of the idea of God as a universal idea and that belief in personal identity after death was very ancient. For more than 100,000 years mankind regarded themselves as interested in two worlds.

Not only is the belief in God and the unseen world a natural belief of man but inextricably intertwined with the notion of Deity and the unseen world there has been the ethical element the distinction between right and wrong.

Mr. Fiske then drew some weighty lessons from the definition of life by Herbert Spencer, "Life is the continuous adjustment of internal with external relations." Poke a dog with a stick and you soon discern whether he is dead or merely asleep. A living dog responds to the external impression. Pour water on a drooping plant and it raises its head if alive. The shapes of animals and their capacities are determined by this adjustment. Such is the deepest law of life which we have been able to detect. There is in man a desire to put himself in relation with the unseen world. Is the law of life not operative now?

If the relation thus established in the morning twilight of man's existence suddenly change, and there is no adjustment of the inner longing with an external reality, then it is utterly without precedent in the whole realm of creation. Such a thought does violence to logic and common sense.

The scientific presumption is on the side of religion and against the materialistic interpretations of the universe. It is daily becoming more apparent that the antagonism between science and religion are at end.

Funeral of Peter C. Adams.

The funeral services of Peter C. Adams were held Friday afternoon at the residence of his son-in-law, E. L. Suffern, of Linden avenue. Mr. Adams' death occurred at the Hudson Street Hospital in New York on Tuesday night, the result of injuries received from a fall the noon of that day. Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church, conducted the service, reading the burial service of the Episcopal church. A large number of friends and out-of-town relatives attended the funeral.

ON WITH THE GAY DANCE

O'ER WAXED PLACE MANY FEET TRIPPLED AT THE PARK CLUB.

The Affair Conducted by the Park Club Juniors Who, From Past Experience, Know How to Entertain to a Nicety.

Another of the charming junior dances was given at the Park Club Friday. The ball room was crowded with the young people and some of the older ones who had come to look on. Of course, the dance was a success, that goes without saying. There were no special decoration for the event although pink shades were placed over all the electric lights that illuminated the room. At 10:30 o'clock the guests flocked to the basement where Steward Jones and his assistants served ice cream and cake. The dancing then continued until about one o'clock.

As one of the regular junior events of the club, it was given under the supervision of the junior committee, which is composed of Charles S. Cook and Fred P. Taylor. Mr. Taylor was unable to be present on account of illness.

The patronesses for the beautiful affair were Mrs. Edwin T. Douglass, Mrs. George T. Rogers and Mrs. J. H. Howell.

Among those present during the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. MacClymont, Mr. and Mrs. Will Worth, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Howell, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Douglass, the Misses Marion Henderson, Ethel C. Green, Sallye Swayze, May L. Hull, Elizabeth C. SOCIAL EVENTS OF A WEEK'S END.

Young People Entertained in Many Places Saturday Night.

Miss Louise Snedicker, of Grove street, entertained a few friends at her home last Saturday evening. Those present were the Misses Powers, of Brooklyn; Miss Clara Woodward, Miss Cora Laire; Clifford Crane, Herbert Moore, George Snedicker.

Miss Elsie VanZandt entertained a few of her friends at her home on Crescent avenue, Saturday evening. The evening was spent in playing games and dancing, while refreshments were served during the evening. Among those present were the Misses Taylor, Sarah Dean, Joan Anderson, Libbie Josephs, Elsie Jobs, Grace Langdon, Nettie Langdon, Florence Serrell, Alice Bushmore, Grace VanZandt and Jennie VanZandt, and George Proctor Smith, Walter Serrell, Howard Terrill, Robert Terrill, John Brower and Henry W. Brower, of Plainfield, and H. E. Manvel and A. B. Pierson, of Elizabeth.

One of the most pleasant surprises of the season was the one given to Miss Mary Burke, of Plainfield avenue, last Friday evening. It was arranged by Miss Georgie Nedles, of West Second street. The playing of games and dancing helped to pass an evening of pleasure. The guests were the Misses Emilie Lynn, Mary McGauley, Sadie Mafroy, Annie Kiely, Julia O'Donnell, Lizzie Hickey, Fanny Burke, Katie Burke, Lizzie Kane, Maggie Kane; Peter McDonough, Frank Ayers, Michael Kiely, Thomas Hines, James Flynn, John Caufield.

The Saturday Night Euchre Club was entertained by Assemblyman and Mrs. W. R. Codington at their home on Sandford avenue, Saturday evening. The first prizes were won by Mr. Hall and Mrs. Campman. The second prizes were won by Mr. Longman and Mrs. Schultz.

Enjoyed a Strawride.

A number of the young people of Washington Park enjoyed a strawride Saturday afternoon out Park avenue. The party started from the residence of J. H. Howell, of Myrtle avenue, and Mrs. Howell acted as chaperone of the party.

MAYOR'S APPOINTMENTS SENT TO THE COUNCIL.

ALL NAMES WERE CONFIRMED EXCEPT ONE POLICEMAN AND THE STREET COMMISSIONER.

The Name of Councilman Randolph Sent in For Street Commissioner and it Struck the Council With Consternation—A Recess Taken and the Name Finally Withdrawn—H. C. VanEmburgh Understood to Have Been the Man Selected For the Place—Street Commissioner's Salary Reduced to $1,000—All Other Salaries Remain the Same—George E. Marx Reappointed Overseer of the Poor—License Applications Sent In—Other Important Business.

The large crowd that attended the regular meeting of the City Council, held Monday night, heard and saw very little to interest them, and there were many that left the rooms not a little disappointed, from the fact that there were no changes of any great importance in the appointments. However, the main portion of the crowd remained until the last and saw the finish. Every member was present except Messrs Baker and Randolph, but their votes were not needed.

The first business taken up was the receiving of the bids for the $24,000 sewer bonds. There were five bids as follows: E. C. Jones & Co., of Philadelphia, offered to take them at 102 15, while John Kean, of Elizabeth, agreed to take the whole or part of them at par and interest. J. C. Pope, for the Dime Savings Bank, who now hold $38,000 worth of the bonds, offered to take $12,000 more at par and interest. S. A. Kean, of Chicago, made an offer of 100 ½ and in interest, and the trustees of the Diocese of New Jersey made an offer of 100 ½ and interest for $5,000 worth of the bonds. The other bids were for all or part of the bonds. It was finally decided by a resolution offered by Mr. Serrell, that the bid of E. C. Jones & Co. be accepted on the condition that the holders of the bonds for $100,000 give a written agreement that the above bidders take the long bonds with accrued interest on the bonds at the date of issuance.

The rules were then suspended on a motion offered by Mr. Barrows, and the matter of police appointments was received from the Mayor for consideration.

The following men were then appointed as regular policemen: George W. Grant, Patrick Kiely, John Flynn, Christian Frederickson, Thomas Mc Cue, Nicholas Myers, Martin Vanderweg, James Saunders, W. J. Mattox, J. E. Totton, G. W. Lunger, Harry Fraleigh, Maurice Higgins and William Robinson. The last two men were appointed to take the places of P. P. Hartpience and P. J. Flannagan. The names were referred to the Police Committee, and later this committee offered a resolution that the appointments be confirmed, and it was so ordered.

The name of John Watson was presented for policeman with the other names, and on motion of Mr. Barrows the name was laid on the table for further consideration.

Mrs. Anna E. Serrell, in a communication, stated that the lease on the city court room would expire April 1st, and she asked that the city renew the lease. A little later the matter was discussed and Mr. Barrows stated that the city did not need the rooms and as Justice Newcorn seemed to be the only one who was using the rooms he did not think that the city should furnish him with a place to hold his court. Mr. Westphal was of the same opinion, and he could see no reason why the city should expend $144 a year for that purpose. The matter was finally laid on the table.

A petition from the W. C. T. U., signed by Mrs. Parse and many others, and another from the Ministers' Association, protesting against the granting of licenses to sell liquor, were received and referred to the proper committee.

A long communication was received from Wm. Stillman in which he asked that the Mayor be given the power to regulate the license fee to be charged for shows given at Music Hall. He thought that the present fee was too much, and unless it was changed the present management would give up the hall.

The following persons made application for license to sell liquor: J. J. Goff, Liberty and West Third streets; J. J. Sullivan, West Third street; William Willis, West Third street; Charles Smith, West Front street; Jacob Blimm, Somerset street; Patrick O'Keefe, Park avenue; Alex. Findlay, East Second street; Fred Caspar, East Front street; Henry Haurand, East Front street; J. E. Beerbower, Park avenue; John Rafferty, Park avenue; Frank Linke, West Front street. They were all referred to the license committee.

A bill of M. Powers for $175 was referred to the sewer committee for certification.

At this time the Mayor appointed Isaac F. Randolph as Street Commissioner, and there was evidently a hitch somewhere for later in the evening he asked to withdraw the name. The appointment was received with great surprise by the councilmen and they did not know what to do or say. The matter was left for further consideration, and after a recess behind closed doors for forty minutes the members were unable to come to any understanding and the appointment was left over.

The resignation of Alex. Titsworth was received and accepted.

In a communication the Mayor said that the city should be redistricted and he suggested that the laws and ordinances committee take the matter up.

Below is a list of the men who were appointed as special policemen: Dennis Carney, Charles Giese, Cadwalader Jones, Edward Martin, William Coleman, D. D. Schenck, James Donnelly, Frank Kelso, S. R. Hope, Jesse M. Scull, Edward Maynard, Henry Angleman, W. S. Brown, Samuel Robinson, Jeremiah Cash, C. T. Hansen, Jacob Kriney, G. R. Rockafellow, Berthold Hansen, A. D. Newman, George Wood, T. J. Clarkson, C. E. Harris, H. P. Pugh, Isaac Kennedy, William Ross, George Dean, P. P. Robinson, D. F. Stewart, Clarkson Mundy, John Naegle, W. Fisher, Robert McCormick, C. C. Randolph, H. M. Stockton, Robert Rushmore, H. C. Adams, H. J. Runyon, F. S. Swackhamer, C. E. Post, Patrick Flood, William Hewson, Lewis Peterson, Edward Dobbs, Nathan Pollard, M. S. Ackerman, R. A. Meeker, George Schoonmaker, George Mehl, Patrick Flanagan and Michael Doyle. The above were all confirmed.

The other appointments followed as mentioned below:

Chief of the fire department, T. O. Doane; First Assistant Chief, James Martin; Second Assistant Chief, J. W. Murray, Jr.; City Physician, Dr. Simpson; Overseer of the Poor, George E. Marx; Corporation Counsel, C. A. Marsh; Members of the Board of Health, A. J. Gavett and W. H. Murray; Pound-keepers, Frank Wenzel and Mulford Cole.

The resignation of Councilman Randolph was at this time received but it was referred to the Streets and Sewers committee and was not brought up again for consideration.

Overseer of the Poor Marx stated that the number of beneficiaries now on the list was forty-one, and he asked that the council make some provision for the further care of these persons who are needy.

The Board of Health reported that during the past year there had been 540 cases of measles in a mild form and that there had been 253 deaths. They were pleased to report that there had been no serious epidemic of sickness about the city and that the death-rate this year was less than it was last year.

Building Inspector Doane reported that seventeen permits had been granted during the past month. The reports of the treasurer and collector were received and the report of the latter was ordered published according to law.

Mr. Frost reported that his committee desired more time to consider the petition of the Plainfield Sanitary company, and it was granted. Mr. Stebbins moved that the fire department appointments as made by the Mayor be confirmed and the motion prevailed, as it did also in the case of Mr. Runyon's motion regarding the appointment of the Corporation Counsel.

Mr. Barrows, from the special committee on the matter of a municipal building, reported that the committee recommend that the council proceed according to the laws of 1879 which gives the city the power to expend $60,000 for the above mentioned purpose, and to issue bonds. The committee also reported on several sites for the building. The one at the corner of Park avenue and East Fifth street, had been offered to the city for $9,000, and the property owned by J. T. Vail and Charles Hand at the corner of East Second street and Watchung avenue, could be purchased for $13,300. J. Fred MacDonald had offered his property at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Front street for $25,000 or he would divide it in half for about one half of that price. The latter had submitted plans for the erection of the city building. The property on West Front street, adjoining the Babcock building had been offered by J. A. Hubbard for $20,000, or a part for $18,000. The Webster property on Watchung avenue could be purchased for $85 per front foot.

The committee recommended that the Park avenue property be considered and that the Mayor be given the power to take steps toward the securing of the same. It was also advised that architects be invited to present plans for the proposed building, and that the sum of $300 be appropriated for that purpose. The successful man to receive five per cent of the cost of construction. The next three men to receive $150, $100 and $50.

On Mr. Barrows' motion the matter was laid over for two weeks when the council would meet and consider the matter in detail. At that time anyone who has any objections to offer will be given an opportunity to state them.

After a recess of forty minutes, which was only intended for ten minutes, the members returned and took up the regular order of business and confirmed the appointments of city physician and overseer of the poor, as recommended by Mr. Westphal. The latter stated that one year ago he was opposed to the appointment of Mr. Marx as overseer, but the past year had demonstrated that he had filled the office very satisfactorily, and he thought that the Mayor had carefully considered the appointment. The appointments were confirmed without a dissenting vote.

Mr. Serrell presented a form of bond and a resolution to govern the action of the council in issuing the $24,000 bonds. The same, he said, had been approved by the Corporation Counsel. The resolution gave the Mayor and clerk the power to execute contracts for the issuing of the bonds.

Mr. Barrows moved that the rules of order be adopted as the by laws for 1897, and it was so decided. The same Councilman also moved that when the council adjourn it be to meet in two weeks.

Mr. Serrell nominated Wm. Arnold as city treasurer, and by a unanimous vote the latter was elected to the office.

Mr. Frost introduced an ordinance to regulate house connections to the sewer. It provides that no one but a registered plumber or drain layer shall have permission to open a trench to make a connection. A fine of $20 is attached for each violation. The ordinance also charges $3 for making the opening, and $1 for every additional working day, excepting Sundays and holidays that it is left open. The ordinance was adopted and duly ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Westphal stated that it had been the rule that the council grant hack and cart licenses, and he would like to amend the ordinance so that the Mayor shall have the power to grant the same, as it would save time for those who are interested.

Mr. Barrows thought the amendment was too sweeping and he saw no reason why the regular applicants should not apply in the usual way. On a motion of the latter the amendment was amended so as to apply only to hawkers and peddlers. It was then adopted and ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Stebbins at this time nominated T. O. Doane as Building Inspector, and the same was confirmed by the council. Mr. Westphal stated that one year ago he objected to Mr. Doane's salary and he would do the same this year. He did not think that $700 was too much for the position of chief of the fire department, but in view of the fact that Mr. Doane was receiving $500 as inspector, he thought that the whole amount should be fixed at $1,000. He then moved that Mr. Doane's salary as chief be made $500. The motion was lost and Mr. Westphal was the only member to vote for the motion.

All of the salaries were left the same with the exception of that of the street commissioner which was reduced to $1,000 from $1,750. The salary of the veterinary surgeon of the fire department was fixed at $150.

This concluded the business of the evening and the council adjourned to Monday evening, February 15th.

the first part.

The olio was a great success and the audience was not sparing in their applause. First, Mr. Marks gave a little sketch in the role of "Uncle Josh" in which he told some of his experiences in the wicked city of New York. Marco, the king of all jugglers, was the next specialty and he delighted the audience beyond measure with his really wonderful juggling feats. He did all sorts of seemingly impossible things and concluded with a great exhibition of balancing that brought down the house.

Prof. H. C. Martyne was very proficient in his line, which consisted of exhibitions of ventriloquism and impersonation. His imitation of the "foolish young man" was so realistic that everybody laughed.

The only exhibit of home talent in the olio was the buck dancing by John Taylor and Samuel Conway, two young colored men of this city. Their part of the programme was excellent and they shuffled and threw themselves about in the most approved fashion, while some of their gyrations were remarkable to behold. They were loudly encored and came back for another turn.

The programme concluded with a sketch by Messrs. Marks and Tel bert. It was a romance of a haunted house and the colored visitor was finally roused from a good laugh at the superstitions of his host by finding himself face to face with the spectre. The curtain fell on the kneeling darkey whose black face had almost turned white with fear.

A word should be spoken for the excellent music which was furnished by an orchestra led by George W. Rogers. George H. Willey was the efficient stage manager and under his direction everything went off smoothly in that department. The managers of the show and the men who have been doing much of the hard work in connection with it were Nathan R. Titsworth and Charles W. Runyon and to them much credit is due, for they spared no effort to make the show a success.

The management was somewhat criticised for having so much professional talent, but it was made necessary by the fact that, with some exceptions, the club members refused to give the committee the support they deserved. Had that support been given, the attendance would have probably been much larger.

The calcium light, which was used with very pretty effect in the dance in the first part, was under the charge of John Naegle.

Financially the show was not a success, and the club treasury was depleted to the amount of $100.

A Birthday Party.

A very pleasant birthday party was tendered to Raymond G. Strayer by his grandmother, Mrs. Jacob Blimm, yesterday. The occasion being the celebration of his fourth birthday. He entertained in a most creditable manner with the assistance of his aunts, the Misses Sadie and Katherine Blimm, the little Misses Marion Blimm, Alice Mehl, Rose Hook, Earnestine Richter, Pauline Smith, Madeline Sutton, and Masters Bertie Miller, Joe Blatz, Carl Elmer, Arthur Thorn, Howard Sweeney, Frank and Everitt Marsh and Raymond Strayer.

8 Out of 100 Reasons For Our Success

FIRST—We occupy over two and a half acres of floor space, and every inch of it's devoted to carpets, furniture and housefurnishings.

SECOND—We carry what is beyond doubt the LARGEST stock in our line in the state of New Jersey.

THIRD—Our prices are the lowest of the lowest. Thus we SAVE customers many a dollar they'd have to EXPEND elsewhere for goods not a whit better.

FOURTH—We've ALWAYS welcomed EVERYONE to visit our salesrooms—buyers or not—SAME attention's given and courtesies extended.

FIFTH—We ACTUALLY sell goods at lower prices and on more ACCOMMODATING terms than any other house in city, whether it be cash or credit.

SIXTH—No concern in any way similar to ours BEGINS to be as lenient as we are towards customers in all cases of illness, death or lack of employment. We're just and consistent—always

SEVENTH—We've ALWAYS sold our stock at prices fully as low, often LOWER, than any so-called "cash houses."

EIGHTH—We're absolutely the ONLY concern that's ever had such a thing as a genuine "bargain room," entirely separate from REGULAR stock. Odd pieces and goods with slow in selling in usual way are put in this popular "room" and sold less than cost.

PERIOD OF INVENTIONS.

DR. RIGGS DISCOURSED ON SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS.

He Enumerated Some of the Most Wonderful Discoveries and Told of What Benefits They Have Been to Mankind.

"Well, that lecture was worth the price of the course ticket," was the remark made by one enthusiastic University Extension student, at the close of the lecture delivered last Tuesday in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church by Dr. James F. Riggs. It certainly was an unusually attractive subject, "The Period of Inventions and Discoveries," and was given in Dr. Riggs' most entertaining manner, before a large and thoroughly interested audience.

"Scientific progress affects us in two ways," said Dr. Riggs. "Directly, it gives new tools, new means for the exercise of various functions. Indirectly, it saves trouble, economizes labor, and provides a short cut to the goal. Such a change in common life is on the whole beneficial. Men learn to think ahead, in some cases they find a much better mode of life practicable, and as civilization advances there is a constantly increasing 'leisure class' who have the privileges of education opening up before them. Hence we attach great importance to all kinds of science, inventions and discoveries.

"Let us consider tonight the mariner's compass, the invention of gunpowder, printing, and the early geographical discoveries.

"The peculiar property of the lodestone was known to Thales of Miletus, who died B. C. 548. Its power to impart polarity to a needle was known in China A. D. 121, and in A. D. 419 Chinese ships were steered by this means, the needle floating on a chip in a bucket. The Chinese even observed the singular variations of the needle, the compass in a more modern form being used among them in 1117.

"The Chinese also anticipated the rest of the world in the knowledge of gunpowder, which was used very early among them, but only as a toy, never in war, and was called the "fire-drug." The European discovery was foreshadowed by the compound called "Greek Fire," by the use of which Constantinople was twice saved from the Saracens, in 675 and in 718. It has introduced a revolution in the art of war, just as the mariner's compass introduced a revolution in the art of seamanship. Gunpowder is not an explosive, but a burning. It is composed of charcoal, sulphur and nitrate of potassa. It is the charcoal that does the burning, though there is only fifteen per cent of charcoal in the gunpowder. Nitro-glycerine is a much more powerful explosive than gunpowder, but cannot be used as the explosive power in a gun, as it would tear the gun to pieces before forcing the ball out.

"One of the most important invention ever made was that of printing. The writing materials of antiquity were for paper, papyrus and parchment, and for ink a sort of thick paint. Papyrus was made from reeds which grew by the rivers, while parchment, on which the best books were written, was made from the skins of animals. True paper made of a pulp of vegetable fibre was first manufactured in China. The early Chinese printing was not from type such as we use, but from stone blocks. The writing was incised, that is, the lettering was cut into the block so that when the book was finished the page was black and the writing white. Later they adopted the plan of wooden blocks, and the lettering was cut in relief.

"The claim of the Dutch in regard to first use of type in the modern sense seems to be well founded. Three names are associated in this invention —Gutenberg, Faust, and Schaffer, the first supplying the brains, the second the money, and the third the mechanical skill.

"To turn for a moment to geographical discoveries. Homer taught that the earth is a flat circle, girdled by the ocean, and beyond that on one

CHANGE OF ALMSHOUSE.

THE POOR TO BE QUARTERED AT CITY FARM BY APRIL FIRST.

Councilman Frost Now Busy Making the Necessary Arrangements—Overseer of the Poor Will Be Put in Charge of the Home.

The change in the location of the poorhouse of Plainfield, as already told in The Press, is soon to be made and it is expected that the poor of the city will be able to leave their present quarters on Terrill road and occupy the farm house on the Mountain View Farm.

The members of the sewer and alms committees of the Common Council have been considering the change for some time.

It is proposed that the Overseer of the Poor will take up his residence on the farm about the first of March and that the necessary changes in the farm house can be made so that the poor of the city will be able to take possession a month later.

Councilman Frost is now busy preparing his report as chairman of the sewer committee recommending the change and giving the plans for the establishment of the poor house on the city farm. A thorough study of the state laws regarding the matter are necessary and Mr. Frost will probably not make his report until the meeting which follows the one to be held this evening.

Councilman Frost and Overseer of the Poor Marx went to Paterson, this morning, to visit the poorhouse of that city, which is considered the best in the state and one of the best in the country. Mr. Frost and Mr. Marx will spend the day there investigating the methods in use, the best of which will be introduced in the Plainfield poorhouse after the change has been made.

DID TAKE SOME BOOTY.

BURGLARS DID NOT LEAVE MRS. WYCOFF'S WITHOUT SOMETHING.

A Thorough Investigation by Members of the Family Showed That Several Pieces of Their Jewelry Were Missing.

There was a general impression at first that the men recently arrested for begging in the local drug stores, were the ones who have been committing the burglaries that have so startled the residents of this quiet city during the last few weeks. Further developments point to the fact that the gang is not the same one. While it was supposed that nothing had been stolen from the residence of Mrs. Peter Wyckoff, of Park avenue, when the burglars forced an entrance there last week, the daughters of Mrs. Wyckoff have found that the midnight visitors did not leave without some booty. On looking over their jewelry, they have found that a diamond stick pin and two other valuable stick pins were missing as were also two rings, one of which was a diamond ring.

None of the missing articles were found on the three men who were arrested the other evening and while they may have left their booty elsewhere, it is likely that some clue might have been gained.

There was one rather significant thing found in the possession of the stranger who was arrested by Sergeant Kiely after the man had made his appeal to Councilman William H. Hart. In one of his pockets was found a candle which it is supposed that he kept ready for any work to be done during the night.

Disputes the Claim

The hearing before Vice Chancellor Stevens in the case to comp l William Newcorn, receiver, to show cause why he should not pay the rent due for the store formerly occupied by the New York Confectionery, of which he is receiver, was adjourned yesterday in the Chancellor's chamber in Newark. The reason for the nonpayment of the claim is that Mr. Newcorn disputes the claim of the landlady, Mrs. Eleanor A Campbell, which is for about $200. He claims that only about $30 is due for rent. He was represented in the case by Reed & Coddington.

From everywhere come words of praise for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Allow me to congratulate you on the merits of your Remedy. WAS FRAZEE SHADOWED?

CLAIMS THE EXPRESS COMPANY HAD A DETECTIVE FOLLOWING HIM.

He Says That He Could Not Hold His Temper Any Longer and Yesterday He Whipped the Alleged Stool Pigeon.

Ever since the United States Express Company and the Central Railroad of New Jersey found that they were having trouble in suppressing the traffic of package expressmen running between towns along their line and New York, Whitney Frazee, the Plainfield expressman, claims that the former corporation have had a man whose sole duty was to meet him at entrance to the Liberty street ferry and then dog his footsteps where ever he went about the city, finally following Frazee to Plainfield on a train to see that he did not transfer his packages to some commuter to carry.

Tuesday morning he called at 59 Dey street on an errand and coming out of the store at 10:15 o'clock he encountered the man whom he insists is employed by the express company to act as a stool-pigeon. Patience finally ceased to be a virtue with him, he says, and he went up to the man, whose name is Hatch, and said:

"What do you want to be following me around like this the all times? for I would like you would be in better business than trying to destroy my occupation."

Frazee alleges that the man replied to him in a number of oaths, and admonished him to go to the bad place. Then Frazee pushed the fellow into the street. The man followed up this act by attempting to strike Frazee, and in quicker time than it takes to tell it, the two men closed in and there was a first-class scrap in progress. Frazee claims that he had much the best of the fistic encounter, as he split the lip of Hatch.

Then the two men parted, Frazee going to his office at 81 Cortlandt street, while Hatch sought out an officer and followed the former. Both men accompanied the officer to the Church street station, where each swore out a warrant against the other, charging assault and battery. They were transferred to the Tombs prison and arraigned at 2 o'clock before Judge Murray.

Lawyer H. H. Finley, of 102 Fulton street, represented Hatch, and he finally agreed to have the charge against Frazee withdrawn, if the latter would take the same action against his client. Frazee agreed to this, insisting, however, that the express company call off the man who had been dogging his footsteps.

Frazee told a Press reporter last Tuesday while he was at the Church street station an official of the United States Express Company boasted to him that they (the company) had him (Frazee), where they wanted him now; that he had overstepped his traces and that he would be punished severely for his act.

Your Present Need.

Is pure, rich blood, and a strong and healty body, because with the approach of spring and the beginning of warmer weather your physical system will undergo radical changes. All the impurities which have accumulated during colder weather must now be expelled or serious consequences will result. The one true blood purifier prominently in the public eye today is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Its record of cures is unequalled. Its sales are the largest in the world. A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla will prepare you for spring by purifying and enriching your blood and toning and invigorating your whole system.

A GYMNASTIC TEST.

Young Athletes Undergo An Examination of All-Around Development.

A gymnastic examination as an indoor test of all-around developement was held at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium a few days ago. Their were nineteen members who took part in the examination and fifteen of that number passed, having secured 65 per cent or over. Those who passed, and their per centage, are as follows:

Walter Long, 91½; E. Moraller, 88½; G. P. Sml h, 88; John Lewis, 84½; H. Jessop, 87½; J. Naylor, 76½; Max Morgaller, T. H. Stafford, 75; J. Stafford 74½; F. Bonny, 74; E. Duffy, 73; W. Vogel. 72; G. Terry, 67½; H. Pierce 66½; W. Pike, 65½.

In about four weeks another examination will be held when those who failed to pass will have a chance to try again for the honors. Considering the length of time, those who passed did remarkably well and they are highly complimented by the physical director, Mr. Heywood.

JAPANESE SOCIAL GIVEN.

NOVEL AND PLEASING AFFAIR AT PARK AVENUE CHURCH.

All the Features Were Associated With Customes of the Tea Country and They Made up an Enjoyable Affair.

One of the most novel and pleasing entertainments of the season was the Japanese social given last evening at the Park Avenue Baptist church, under the auspices of the Missionary and Social committees of the Christian Endeavor society, of the church, and the affair attracted a large number of people.

The rooms were arranged in true Japanese style and there was a nice display of lanterns which gave a decided attractive appearance. The programme was in charge of Rev. J. W. Richardson, and in his usual happy manner, with a little Japanese talk thrown in, he announced the several numbers. The first number was a violin solo by Clarence Mills, accompanied by Bert Harold on the piano. A recitation, "Von Weber's Last Waltz," by Miss Mary Luckey, was so well given that she was obliged to respond to an encore. A vocal solo, entitled "A Song from the Orient," by Mrs. H. E. Rider, was well received, and the tableau, "A Social Call," by Miss Adella Runyon, Miss Florence Hawkins, Miss Henrietta Cuming, Geo. Watts, David Runyon, and Wesley Brokaw, was very amusing. This was followed with a vocal solo, "A Japanese Lullaby," by Miss Adella Runyon. Another tableau, entitled "A Japanese Carriage," was finely given by Miss Henrietta Cuming, who occupied a seat in the carriage, and was supported by Wesley Brokew and George Watts.

The next number was an address by William Stimpson on the subject of "Japan." It treated in a general sense of the manners and customs of the country and the people. The last tableau was entitled "A Japanese Bedroom, Minus the Misc." David Runyon took the principal part, and his attitude caused lots of laughter. He simply laid down on the floor of an empty room, with nothing in sight but a few decorations on the walls. Another song from the Orient by Mrs. H. E. Rider was heartily received, as was also a violin solo by Clarence Mills. The programme was brought to a close by Miss Mary Luckey who gave two amusing recitations.

Those who took part in the entertainment were dressed in Japanese costumes and they looked very natty.

Those present were then invited to retire to the refreshment room where an abundance of rice, jelly, coffee and tea was served by the following persons who composed the committee: Miss Florence Hawkins, Miss Alice Spangenberg, Miss Adella Runyon, Miss Henrietta Cuming, Miss Lissa Livezey, Miss Jennie Giles, David Runyon, H. E. Rider, Wesley Brokaw, George Watts.

Joseph Hawkins was the efficient receiver of cash, and at the close when he counted up his cash he found that he had about $15. This money will be used for the work of the society.

ROOF CAUGHT FIRE FROM CHIMNEY

But It Was Extinguished Before the Fire Department Arrived.

At 7:10 last night an alarm of fire was sent in from Box 145, corner of Hudson lane and Somerset street, by Wm. Demler, Jr., of Washingtonville. The roof of the house on the property formerly occupied by George Stewart, and now used by Mr. Howell and family, caught fire from the chimney. Mr. Demler was passing at the time on horseback and he hastened to the fire box to send in an alarm. The department responded as soon as possible, but the fire was out before they reached the place, and in fact they did not go beyond Johnston's drive.

A slight accident happened at the engine house while the men were trying to get the engine out. One of the horses was pulling very hard and the hames broke before they could get out. This necessitated a change of harness and a slight delay. The expense of repairing the broken hames will be nominal.

Nurses in Their New Home.

Although the formal opening of the Nurses Home at the Muhlenburg hospital does not take place until Friday afternoon, the Home was occupied by the nurses for the first time last night. The house has been furnished but many of the little details have not been completed as yet and rooms will be thoroughly prepared for the tea on Friday afternoon. Dr. Endicott had the honor of delivering the first lecture in the new lecture room of the home, yesterday afternoon, to the nurses.

Mrs. George Hauser and daughter, of Dunellen, have returned from a visit with friends in Jersey City.

LIES EASILY REFUTED.

EDITOR RUNYON'S COARSE AND PERVERTED EDITORIAL STATEMENTS.

Runyon Claimed That The Press Took up the City Hall Site Voting Matter After He Had Refused it—Tissue of Falsehoods.

In a perverted and coarsely worded editorial Tuesday, Editor Runyon's News was ghoulish in its glee about what it claims is the failure of this paper to obtain a great number of votes from the ballots being printed each day to permit an expression of public sentiment as to the location of the proposed municipal building. And beyond its strained point at being funny, the News states that The Press accepted the suggestion of printing the ballot to afford an expression of the city hall site sentiment after its editor had declined it. We have always credited Editor Runyon with still being somewhat removed from parotic stages, but that statement of his would seem to indicate that we have erred, for if he had the slightest memory left he would know well that when he says that The Press took up the matter after the News had refused it, he is stating a lie that is so easy of refutation that none but a tottering mind would perpetrate it with the belief that it would stand as a fact. Perhaps it is senseless to notice the emanations of a mind fostering such ideas as this, but we look for forgiveness from those who have already realized Runyon's condition, and make this statement:

The suggestion for a city hall site ballot was made to the editor of The Press by a prominent citizen, who was not Charles H. Hand as the News inferred. However, Mr. Hand and the editor met casually after the suggestion had been made and in the course of passing conversation it was suggested by the editor of The Press that Mr. Hand go to Editor Runyon and ask him to print a similar ballot, in order that the fullest expression of opinion might be gained from all sides. The Press had no compunction about monopolizing all the credit that might accrue in such an act, being content simply to serve the city and if there was any honor in it to share it with the News. Mr. Hand did go to Editor Runyon and explicitely state to him that The Press had suggested that the News being asked to do the same for the reasons mentioned in the conservation. As his frequent wont, Editor Runyon got on his high horse and commenced his stereotyped tirade about the influence of The Press, etc., etc., (prompted by the fallacious idea that everybody believes what he is the essence of truth telling) and then—Mr. Hand is willing is make affidavit to this—Runyon said, referring to the voting scheme: "I'm not here for honor and there's nothing in it for me. It doesn't make any difference what the inhabitants want, it is what the Common Council say." There are other things that Editor Runyon said to Mr. Hand, but there is no use repeating them.

There were one or two slight mistakes in the report of the details for the proposed new city hall as published yesterday.

The lot at the northwest corner of Watchung avenue and East Second street, is offered by Charles Hand and J. T. Vail. The size of the lot is 100 x 168, and the price is $13,000. The Webster property has a frontage of 100 feet and is 140 feet deep. This is offered for $85 per running foot, and it takes in the property at the corner of Watchung avenue and Fourth street.

A GOOD LETTER.

From the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Fernandina, Fla., Feb. 28, 1896.

Mr. J. George Suhrer, Druggist, City.

Dear George:—Please send a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I would not feel easy if I knew there was none of this valuable Remedy in the house. I have given it a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children. Yours respectfully, Geo. E. Wolff. Sold by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, Park & North avenues.

Friends Ask For No Saloons.

The Plainfield monthly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends adopted the following memorial to the Common Council:

This meeting respectfully and earnestly requests that, in the exercise of the local option vested in you, you will not renew, or grant, any licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, for beverage purposes for the year 1897, within the municipality of Plainfield.

—Friday of this week being Lincoln's Birthday, there will be no school at the North Plainfield Public High School.

POTTER WON HIS SUIT.

CRANFORD'S EDITOR RELIEVED FROM PAYING DAMAGES.

The Chronicle Press Does Not Impart Vibration to the Village More Than the Passage of the Blue Line Express Trains.

John Alford Potter, the Cranford editor, who appealed the verdict obtained against him in the district court by the landlord, Hugo Fett, was successful in his suit in the county court, the jury rendering a verdict for him.

Fett rented Potter a store in Cranford in which he conducted his printing business. A stipulation in the lease was that Potter should pay his rent on the first business day of each month in gold coin. Potter, it was alleged by Fett, changed his plant from hand to steam power, and placed in a press so heavy that the vibration cracked the walls in an adjoining building.

In the district court Fett was awarded $25 damages. He was also awarded $50 damages for a libel suit which Potter published in his paper, while smarting under the result of the lawsuit. Potter appealed both cases.

He alleged that his change of the plant was made after notice had been given to Fett, and that he took every precaution against doing damage to the property. He denied that the vibration from his press was any greater than that caused by the passage of the Blue Line trains and heavy freight trains on the Central Railroad.

Potter's wife swore that she assisted her husband in writing the subscribers' names on wrappers, that she worked while the press was in operation, and the vibration did not annoy her.

Wednesday in the absence of Mr. Fett and his counsel, another case against Potter was called, and on motion of his counsel, it was dismissed.

INSTITUTING A NEW LODGE.

Queen Esther, No. 2, I. O. L., to be the New Title.

An informal meeting looking to the organization of a new lodge, to be known as Queen Esther Lodge, No. 2, United Order of the Indepent Odd Ladies, was held in the basement of Reform Hall, last Tues, but only the preliminary steps were taken. Mrs. S. E. Mitchell, of Worster, Mass., presided, and Mrs. F. B. Smalley performed the duties of secretary pro tem. No regular business was transacted and adjournment was made until Friday afternoon at two o'clock, when final arrangements will be made for instituting the new lodge and officers will be elected and installed.

Mrs. Mitchell will attend a parlor conference at the home of Mrs. L. Rogers, at New Market, this afternoon, to consider the advisability of a new lodge there.

A PRETTY INTERIOR.

A. Lusardi's Fruit Store Remodeled Throughout.

Plainfield has a first-class, up-to-date fruit store where a complete stock of everything in that line is kept. It is owned and conducted by A. Lusardi, of North avenue, and the proprietor knows just how to please his many patrons. Mr. Lusardi has just had his store entirely remodeled, which makes it one of the finest stores of the kind in the city. The walls and ceiling have been newly papered in the latest style, and a new floor has replaced the old one. The paper is of the embossed style and it presents an attractive appearance. When once you trade at this store you will never change. The goods are the finest to be had and the prices are right. Mr. Lusardi ceftainly deserves the increased patronage which has come to him.

From Study to Sight-Seeing.

Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph has finished at Berlin the special course of study upon which she entered in 1895, and has just left that city for a town in the South of Europe. She will visit (visit friends) Prague, Vienna, Buda-Pesth, Nuremberg, Munich and Florence, and some time next month she will join at Naples her father and her sister Marion, who, meanwhile, will travel in Spain, and, with a view to this, will sail from New York for Gibraltar on the "Kaiser Wilhelm 2d" February 20th.

Only Acting Sergeant.

Patrick Kiely, of the police department, is only acting sergeant until the next meeting of the Council, when it will be decided definitely whether he is to remain in that position. The same action will probably be taken in the case of John Flynn, who is now acting roundsman.

Signing the Trolley Road Petition.

The petitions which are being circulated for the extension of the trolley to Washingtonville are meeting with great success, and most everyone on the line has signed it.

REMARKABLE OLD MAN.

Dr. John Vedder's Life Reads Like a Romance.

He Is the Oldest Living Locomotive Engineer and Now Lives in the Oldest House in St. Augustine, Fla.

[Special St. Augustine (Fla.) Letter.]

In quaint old St. Augustine, in Florida, one may live the gayest life that modern luxuries afford, and yet, walking a few blocks hence, pass entirely from the scene of extravagant elegance into the storied days of the past, when the hard pioneer braved the terrors of the frontier life. Here, in this town, are still standing many specimens of the old Spanish coquina houses. It is in one of these that a most interesting character lives all alone. He is Dr. John Vedder, the oldest living locomotive engineer in America.

Treasury street is the narrowest street in the town. It measures barely six feet, and is associated in the minds of the Minoreans with many stories of those terrible days when their forefathers were brought there as slaves to the Spaniards. At the corner of Treasury and Bay street is Dr. John Vedder's solitary home. The date of its erection is not known, but students of the chronology of St. Augustine affirm that it is one of the oldest, if not the oldest house in the city. The very thick walls are formed of coquina quarried from Anastasia island. The house faces the sea, and the beveled projection extending between two and three feet from the base of the front wall appears to bear evidence of the fact that it was built before the original coquina sea wall, which was constructed in 1693.

It is assumed that, previous to that time, such projections were built as a protection against the tides. The house contains two rooms on the ground floor and two on the upper. The heavy beams are of red cedar. An adjustable ladder and square hole between the rafters constitute the staircase.

This quaint old building with its curious interior is quite apropos as a home for the genius who resides there with only the company of animals and reptiles from the land and waters of Florida.

Dr. John Vedder was born in Schenectady, N. Y., July 22, 1819, coming from an ancestral line of the earliest Dutch settlers on the Hudson. The Veddors settled at Schenectady before the French and Indian war, and the story goes that Nicholas Vedder, of "Rip Van Winkle" fame, was a character of this same Vedder family. He is an uncle of Elihu J. Vedder, the famous American artist, who spends much time in Rome.

Dr. Vedder started out very young on his active career. At the age of 20 he worked successfully at five trades, being a blacksmith, moulder, brass founder, machinist and locomotive engineer. He was an expert mechanic, and he always received pay for his services. Five days is the longest time he has ever been idle.

In talking of his boyhood days, Dr. Vedder laughed as he related that he "stole" his trade. Employed in his father's shops at Schenectady, he learned smithing and moulding. Through a friend who worked in a brass foundry he learned the principles of proportion in the making of bell metal. By applying this knowledge to his experiments he soon became an expert brass worker. As an employe in the repair shops of the Utica & Syracuse railroad he learned to be a machinist, and in 1839 and '40 ran the first snow plow between Utica and Syracuse. In an interview with Dr. Vedder, he said: "I had the honor of handling, as engineer, one of the first locomotives built in this country. The first locomotive built by the Baldwin locomotive works was for the Schenectady & Utica railroad. When that road was completed to Syracuse, in 1839, this company gave an order to the Baldwin works for 12 locomotives. Four—Nos. 9, 10, 11 and 13—were used in the division out of Syracuse. The first train was run in this system July 4, 1839, and created a wonderful excitement throughout the country. Locomotive No. 12 was in the winter of '39 and '40 used as a snow plow and was in my charge. This was, undoubtedly, the first snow-plow locomotive in regular work handled in America.

"In 1841 and 1842, I had constructed a sand-box after my own ideas. I am nearly positive that the first sand-box lever I had adopted was one similar to that now in use. While handling locomotive No. 11, I noticed that whenever I would wish to use the sand, and pull the lever, the sand would run down through a faucet outside of the box, and fly over the machinery. I thought the problem over and over, and finally persuaded the company to adopt my suggestion for having the valves inside of the box, connected with a rod from the cab. As I wander over the space of time, I cannot help wondering at the rapid and magnificent strides made by railway companies in the perfecting of locomotion, since I manipulated the throttle."

While a resident of Schenectady, Dr. Vedder was elected alderman of the committee on lands and buildings.

The doctor has been married twice, and though now a widower the second time, and 78 years old, he is still a fine looking man, with silky white hair and beard and full blue eyes—as bright and clear as those any man of 35 would be proud of. It would not be at all surprising to his friends to hear that he again anticipated matrimonial bliss, for he is lionized by widows who visit the "Ancienne Cite."

Some years ago, while in his son's study, Mr. Vedder took it into his head that he would be a dentist. So he applied himself to his books, and without other instruction soon won the title of "doctor," and was practicing regularly before his son had even graduated. He practiced dentistry for several years, until his health failed, and then went south to recuperate.

Ever since he has resided in the land of flowers, following the dentist profession until his office was burned in one of the conflagrations that have visited St. Augustine.

He then bought the old Spanish landmark in which he still lives. In 1876 he began the study of taxidermy and made his own collection for a natural history cabinet. Now he is an acknowledged authority on that subject, and has the finest collection of live animals and birds, Indian relics, mounted fish, reptiles, crustaceans, etc., in Florida.

There is still another interesting phase of this man's life, and that is his military career. At 16 years of age, he enlisted in a military company under Capt. Platt Potter, and advanced from corporal to sergeant, to ensign, and, at 20, was in command of the Governor's guards at Schenectady. Being an expert in manual exercises, he was chosen by the colonel fugleman and instructor for the general parade.

Dr. Vedder, with all his practicability is quite sentimental and romantic. He belongs to the Dutch Reformed Church of the East, and the saddest and most serious moments for him are those when he recalls the lessons taught at the side of his mother, who died when he was a boy of nine, yet whose sacred memory still lives in the holy-of-holies in an old man's heart.

—LOTTIE MILLER.

Dawn in an African Village.

I slept in a house belonging to the African Lakes company, a creepy sort of habitation at night. Rats galore raced about the roof, chasing one another, and squealing most piteously. I was awakened in the morning by cocks crowing. Suddenly there was a hush of night insects; the houses in the dawning light were an indistinct, dull brown, the grass was wet with dew. I heard the shuffling of reed doors slid to one side, and their grating on clay flooring when flung open. A few natives began to appear, exchange morning greetings, and start to blow up fires; men, women and children crowd around the fires, the gilded clouds in the east withdraw, the sun peeps on the horizon, fires are soon deserted, and daily work begins.—From the Journals of the late E. J. Glave, in Century.

A Kiwi in San Francisco.

A sailor who recently reached San Francisco brought with him from New Zealand a kiwi, or wingless apteryx. The bird is about the size of a common chicken, but lays an egg weighing 12 ounces, one-fourth as large as the bird. Ordinarily the apteryx lives on worms and bugs, but the sailor had taught his specimen to subsist on a meat diet.

AN INHERITED GIFT

REMARKABLE ACCO. P I HMENT OF THE SWEET FAMILY.

Bone-Setters by Nature, They Repair Seemingly Hopeless Cases—Instinctively They Appear to Understand a Break or a Dislocation.

Dr. Charles Sweet was known throughout New England as a natural bone setter. He is said to have operated in more than 100,000 cases of bone setting. He came of a family which for three generations has acquired renown for natural bone-setting ability, although no member has had more than common school education. The founder of it, who died some years ago, was born in Lebanon, and before he was fifteen years old had become famous on account of his heaven born ability to set broken bones. When he was still a boy he used to amuse his neighbors by dislocating the bones of domestic farm animals—hens, geese, cats, dogs and calves—and then putting them in place again.

He did the trick with wonderful dexterity. A few years later he was the most famous bone setter in New England, and his practice extended into all parts of the Eastern and Middle States.

Often on being introduced to a man, in shaking hands with him he gave the stranger's hand an odd, quick twist. The wrist was immediately dislocated, or at times two, or the thumb was unjointed, and sometimes every finger on the hand was out of joint. Dr. Sweet, although a small man, had great physical strength, and as the fame of his singular doings spread, persons became so much afraid of him that they hesitated to take his hand.

It was imagined that the Doctor's peculiar natural gift would pass away with the death of its possessor, but it was manifested in an equal degree by every one of his great family of children, and in turn by his grand-children. Both generations also inherited his powerful physique and giant strength. Each one at an early age imitated his practice of dislocating the bones of farm animals and then setting them, and nearly all his male descendants followed the calling of natural bone setters. The women were equally expert in the art of unjointing the human frame and rejointing it, and in half a dozen Connecticut towns they practice, usually taking no fee for their services.

The regular surgeons profess to decide the popular belief that the Sweets possess a marvelous natural and secret aptitude for bone setting.

It is said that not one of the family ever studied even a book of anatomy. —New York Tribune.

A Diamond Fingernail.

When the Comtesse was a very little girl she fed sugar to a pet pony and had the misfortune to let forefinger crushed by the pony's teeth. The nail was split and in time dropped off. When the new nail formed it was of egregious thickness, but lacking a bit in area. The thickness of the nail made it amount to a disfigurement, and the Comtesse was heart broken, until in St. Petersburg she made the acquaintance of a jeweler who had been employed to do work for the family of the Czar, and who knew a thing or two.

This accomplished artisan persuaded the Comtesse to let him try the experiment of inserting a diamond in the troublesome nail. With delicate instruments he bored a hole in the bony substance, put in a diamond rather smaller than the usual run of such gems and carefully cemented the precious ornament in place.

It was a very delicate job. Had it failed the Comtesse would have had to go gloved for the rest of her natural life. But it didn't fail, and now the Comtesse has the proud distinction of being the only woman in the world who wears a diamond thus oddly.

Speaks Well for Boston.

The following answers are guaranteed by a Philadelphia paper to have been made at the graduation exercises of one of the leading grammer-schools of Boston: "Name a fruit which has its seed on the outside?" "A seed-cake." "What are the last teeth that come to man?" "False teeth." "What is yeast?" "Yeast is a vegetable flying about in the air, hitching itself on to anything." "Name and locate the five senses?" "The eyes are in the northern part of the face, and the mouth in the southern." "Explain flinch, and use it in a sentence?" "Flinch, to shrink, Flannel flinches when it is washed."

When to Wind a Watch

During the night your watch is quiet, as it were—that is, it hangs up or is lying down without being moved. If you don't wind it at night the mainspring is then relaxed. Instead of being in that condition during the day, by winding it in the morning the mainspring remains close and tight all day. It keeps the movement steady at a time when you are handling it, running about the City tending to your daily affairs. A relaxed mainspring at this time accounts for fine watches varying slightly.

A Son's Novel Birthday Gift.

A well-known merchant of New York, when his father's business failure put an end to his hopes of a college education, entered commercial life, and thirty years later paid his father's outlawed indebtedness in full, with 7 per cent. interest. Then, having had the creditors' receipts bound in book form, he presented them to his father as a birthday gift.

WERE ALL WATER DRUNK.

Capt. Hance Describes the Plains of Texas as They Were.

Fearful Ride Over the Sands—Wild Debauch on Aqua Pure When at Last the Men Came to the Cheyenne Wells.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

Old John Hance had taken three of us down his trail in the Grand canyon one hot day, and we were preparing a meager lunch under the mesquite boughs. I had brought up a pail of water from the tawny-colored river and the lieutenant's wife, a dainty young eastern woman, peered at it through her glasses.

"Are you going to drink that?"

"Certainly," I replied. "That water will settle in a few moments so that you can almost see the bottom of the dipper."

"That's only good, wholesome diet," the lieutenant said. "I wish I could be assured of always having as good water as that to drink. Sometimes when we are on the march we have water that is corrupt with carrion."

The little wife shuddered. "O, Harry, you didn't tell me that before."

"Well, sir," said the captain to the lieutenant, "speaking of bad water reminds me of a trip I made in 1866. I was guide to old Col. Bankhead in an expedition against the Cheyennes, and we was a-crossin' a mighty bad country.

THE BOYS WAS JUST PLUM DRUNK ON WATER—WATER DRUNK.

I just reckon you ain't got anything worse in Arizony, lieutenant. There was no water fit to drink for plum 200 miles, but that makes no difference to the government. The general he looks at his map and he says: 'Order Col. Bankhead to proceed from Deathhead creek to Piten valley, an' do hit quick,' an' colonel being a good soldier, hits leather an' says: 'Come, boys!'

"You see there was a small garrison up there at Cheyenne wells a needin' our aid and needin' it right bad. So we let out another link and pinted their way. The water was punishin.' We had to drink water that was stinkin.' That was bad—but a day or two later water that only stunk we wasn't worth shettin' per eyes to. When it come to haulin' out dead buffaloes—beg your pardon, Mrs. Scott—why we thought we'd reached the limit, but when it come to usin' water that you could take hold of an' shake like a blanket—"

"Oh captain!" I shouted.

He turned gravely toward me.

"Yes, sir—certainly, sir! Shake like a blanket when yer dipped it up. Of co'se we killed it and rebiled it, and skimmed the like yer would suet and thickened it with coffee—but we had to drink hit at last. Hit were skunk at the beginnin' and skunk at the end.

"Well, sir, we got one day, as I calc'lated it, about 15 miles from the Cheyenne wells, an' I said so to the colonel on the quiet—'cause I wasn't just so plum shure of it as I wanted to be. I didn't want to get the men excited. Their tongues lolled out so they couldn't cuss, but they could sure shoot an' it wouldn't do to monkey with their feelings. No, indeed, ma'am. You know how those things go, lieutenant. There is a fine where discipline stops."

The lieutenant's wife understood, and the young wife looked at him with big, blue eyes. This soldiers' life!

"Well, now, John,' said the colonel, 'you ride on and pull in a good hour ahead of us, and tell the commanding officer to have every damn thing that will hold water filled up, for these boys are sure goin' to stampede when they smell water, and ride like hell a-swarmin' and I can't control 'em. They'll climb over each other like a drove of buffalo.'

"'I understand, colonel,' I says, and then I pulled out across the sand. My life and scull! But it was hot. Something like I'm right here, lady, only worse. I could here the red hot sun hiss and spatter off my horse's shoes, but I rolled the rowel into him cruel and we kep' movin'. Seems like I held him up with my heels and the reins.

"Then I begun to think that my alabone Canaan will look as good to me when I die as them green trees did. The horse broke for it an' I let him go. My tongue was big as your arm an' scalin' off like a sick pickerel. When I rolled off my horse to his eyes in the water an' the sergeant splashed me with a bucket full. Elijah's God! but that water was sweet. I couldn't get near enough to it. I wanted it all inside of me.

"Well, after I could shet my teeth on the outside o' my tongue, I delivered the colonel's orders. They hustled together all the old cans, tubs and barrels, and filled 'em to the brim, and every man seized ready to help. I laid there soakin' water and my horse walked like a carpenter's bench.

"Pretty soon we see a line of alkali a-flyin' on the swell, an' then they come a-flyin'—but no yells. They couldn't yell—and their eyes! Lady, I hope you'll never see a troop of soldiers look that way. The horses had nostrils on 'em like the bass drum in a brass band a reekin' with sweat an' dust, an' a-squealin' like they was plum crazy. The men were leanin' forward and a poundin' for life—seemed like their necks was a foot long.

"They tumbled into one hideous mass at the wells. Such a struggle I never want to see again. There was 'bout 20 round every bar'l fightin' the horses back and tearin' at each other like wildcats. One feller who couldn't get up, and didn't have a cup, leaned over, and bein' a tall feller, took off his shoe and dipped and drank out o' that. Hit was powerful funny to see, but nobody else noticed it but me. They were plum busy.

"They got filled up finally and let the horses have a chance, and that night the old colonel says to me: 'John, no use tryin' to put out pickets. You and the sergeant just keep an eye out, an' we'll let the boys camp around the water. Bar'ls an' trust to luck.'

"The boys was just plum drunk on water—water drunk. They yelled and grunted and cussed in their delight. Cheyennes couldn't ha' got 'em to leave camp. At night you'd see a clump o' them round a bar'l a-drinkin' an' a-grantin'—'Oh, that's good!' and such like things. They were shore 'nough cotton dry, an' it did seem like they never would get soaked up again—but they was all right in a couple o' days.

"So jest got all the comfort ye can out o' the water ye have back in the states. Prize it. It's the sweetest thing in the world when ye need it—especially in Origong."

And the burning sand, the withering wind and the sere foliage around us lent powerful emphasis to his tale. The little wife laid her hand on her husband's arm, and her eyes grew very thoughtful. HAMLIN GARLAND.

ELECTRIC STROKE.

Effects Workmen in Deep Places Most.

One of the most extraordinary modern diseases is a peculiar affection, most aptly termed electric stroke, which not infrequently befalls workmen employed in melting metals by means of electricity. It appears from observations made at the great steel and iron works at Creuzot, that the intense voltaic arc between the carbon and the metal to be melted emits rays which, even at a distance of 10 meters, produce a painful, not, pricking sensation, like that of a burn, on such uncovered portions of the body as the throat, face and, more especially, the forehead.

The skin of the parts affected becomes of a deep red color or assumes a bronze hue; the eyes, in spite of black glasses, are so intensely dazzled as to be useless for some minutes, after which cyanopsis (yellow vision) sets in, everything appearing of a saffron color; the conjunctive are inflamed, and there is a gritty feeling, as of sand, under the eyelids. There is frequently great pain, accompanied often by sleeplessness, and, in some instances, fever.

After a few days these symptoms subside, the skin of the affected parts peels, and the patient is restored to health.

Now, the remarkable thing about all this is that very little heat is radiated from the electric arc used; all the trouble arises from the light, and although it has not yet been experimentally proved, there can be little doubt that the blue and violet, that is, the chemical, rays are to blame.—Boston Journal.

Tallest Spar in the Old World.

The great flagstaff in the Arboretum at Kew is one of the most conspicuous landmarks of the neighborhood. It is the second of the two spars which were presented to the royal gardens by Mr. Edward Stamp, of the firm of Messrs. Anderson, Anderson & Co. The first was from British Columbia, and was 118 feet in length. It was broken in the course of erection in 1858. The existing one, from Vancouver's island, and is 159 feet in length. It was erected in 1861, and is believed to be the tallest spar in the old world. The age of the tree from which it was cut was about 250 years, and its total height 180 feet. The base had gradually become decayed, and on examination it was pronounced by the admiralty to be unsafe. Messrs. Robinson & Dodd, the contractors to her majesty's Indian government of bridge road works, Poplar, successfully lowered it, removed the decayed base, and spliced on a new one of pitch pine. The splice is held together by five iron bands. The tree was then reerected.—Westminster Gazette.

A GOOD INVENTION.

BETTY GREEN'S SON RENDERS TRAVEL COOL AND DUSTLESS.

A Much Needed Requirement Seen in the Well Protected Pullman Cars—An Invention that Bids Fair to Fill a Long Felt Want.

Artificial rainmaking and the creation of breezes while travelling at the rate of a mile a minute in a railway car constitute the latest triumph of inventive genius.

The man who has conceived the apparatus by means of which these remarkable results can be brought about is E. H. R. Green, the general manager of the Texas Midland Railroad. Mr. Green labors under the disadvantage so many people would believe, of being born with a silver spoon in his mouth, for he is the son of Hetty Green, the richest woman in America.

Mr. Green's clever idea made it possible for a person to travel on the warmest day of summer without suffering in the least from those twin evils of railroad journeys—dust and heat. The practicability of the idea has been cleverly shown by thorough trial, and within the past week several cars equipped with the invention have been daily run on the Texas Midland Railroad. It has been believed that such a thing as constructing a practically dustproof car was out of the question.

The modus operandi of Mr. Green's contrivance is simple, and the mechanism free from complications. Between the windows in the car is a ventilator, so arranged as to be directly, or almost directly, beside the passengers. This ventilator is covered with a screen of exceeding fineness, both inside and out, and there is an arrangement so constructed that at the will of the passenger a fine spray of water plays between the two screens. This water has, as its source, a supply contained in a tank, located beneath the car, and between the trucks. It is forced upwards by means of compressed air.

It may readily be seen that the screen will prevent the entrance of cinders and like particles which have been both a menace and a discomfort to the traveller on the railway. At the same time, the water playing between the screens catches each particle of dust, washes it away, thus keeping the air as it enters the car as fresh and clean as that in the pine woods at break of day. The car will be, so far as air is concerned, in as good a condition when traveling through the Arkansas Desert as when passing through a country which blossoms like roses.

Each of the ventilators is three feet long, and remains open constantly. The spraying of the water the passengers is able to regulate, with the valves in operation. It is wholly unnecessary to open the windows of the car at all, as the ventilators cause a constant change of air. As a matter of fact, the air in the car is rendered much purer by means of Mr. Green's invention than it would be if it found entrance through the windows.

RARE COTTON SEED.

And a Wonderful Story of a Scheme to Get a Bushel Secretly it All.

An Atlanta farmer has created a sensation in agricultural circles by being waited on by a committee of South Georgians appointed by the farmers of that section of the state to buy from him the seed from a crop of cotton. The price to be paid for the seed is $500. The seed in question and even the valuable cotton seed is Mr. Jackson, a well-known farmer who lives on and cultivates the farm of Tax Collector Stewart.

The unnatural part of the offer made Mr. Jackson by the committee from South Georgia is the fact that the man who will buy the seed do not wish to plant them. On the contrary, if they get possession of the seed they will destroy them quickly as possible, taking care that not a single seed is saved.

The original seed was brought from a stalk standing over twenty feet high, found by an exploring party in the interior of Africa.

Jackson planted the seed and watched their growth with fond eyes.

The first crop was a success. The stalks of the cotton grew to an enormous height.

This year when the time for planting cotton came Mr. Jackson determined to give the seed a severe test to see if they would stand it. He planted every seed in the poorest ground on his entire farm and on the west side of a hill. As is well known to farmers, the west side upland is always very poor. Though the land was unfertilized this year one of the worst cotton years in the history of the South, the cotton flourished and is still blooming. Mr. Jackson used nothing to enrich the soil in which the seed were planted. The test was a severe one, notwithstanding that fact, some of the stalks are as high as seven feet.

The farmers of South Georgia have sent their committee to Atlanta to buy the seed from Mr. Jackson, because they believe that if the cotton is planted throughout the South they will be rutned beyond repair.

When Washington Died.

It may not be generally known that Gen. Washington died in the last hour of the last day of the last week of the last month of the last year of the last century.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

It was Mr. Justice Maule who said, in answer to a witness who declared that he had been wedded to the truth from infancy, "Yes, sir; but the question is—how long have you been a widower?"

HOW POLLY PROPOSED.

"Hi! Hi! All right! All right! Now we shan't be long!" said the gray parrot.

I regret to say that the irrepressible young man that brings the daily milk is the tutor of my parrot in the latest up-to-date slang of the day.

I am an old bachelor—quite so, least, not old, perhaps, the word slipped out unawares—I am the right side of 50, anyhow; but being in receipt of a pension and a small private income to boot, I have cast anchor in my present abode in the expectation of weathering many a winter's storm yet.

Being without a known relation in the world, I willingly fell in with the suggestion that I should pick up my moorings alongside my old friend and messmate, Capt. Travers, late R. N., who, having left one of his legs on the west coast of Africa while capturing a slaver, was pensioned off at an even earlier age than myself, and now lived with his sister — a most comfortable party, by the by, she and I do on thereabouts—in the adjoining house to mine in the neighborhood of London. We had always got on well together, our tastes and dispositions were similar, and we had often met during our naval careers. His sister I had not previously been acquainted with, but, being in many respects like her brother, we were soon firm friends.

Capt. Travers and myself had each a favorite parrot—his the common African gray, mine the slipped bill, and mine the purer variety, without a trace of color, but otherwise similar.

I had not long settled down in my new quarters, and got everything shipshape, and that seemed to me—a very important difference, as I know to-day—when, almost unconsciously at first, I began to feel what a lonely old bachelor I was, and what a set-off to all my other belongings the figure of Miss Rachel Travers would be at my fireside. But just here the curse of my life began to make itself felt. Inherent shyness in the presence of the opposite sex has dogged my footsteps from my earliest recollections. Give me a gale of wind in the bay of Biscay, a norther in the tropics, or 20 hours' duty on deck, wet through to the skin, and Capt. Manley, late of the P. and O. service, will thank you for it, and consider life well worth living; but as dispenser of delicate attentions to the fair sex, intensely as he inwardly admires their pretty ways, Capt. Manley does not, no, he certainly does not, show up to advantage.

Although fond of pets generally, I have an antipathy to cats, especially at night. I am not aware that our neighborhood was particularly beneficial in its aspect or other qualifications to feline constitution, but I know that until I was strong enough to start an air-gun cannonade on my numerous nocturnal visitors, I was frequently unable to get a respectable night's rest. One infernal black and white Tom declined to budge an inch, and could have nine lives, I am sure this one must have had 19, and I began to wonder what sort of uncanny being this was that had no objection to letting my bullets pass unscathed through its body without suffering any inconvenience. But after all it must have been my bad marksmanship, for one afternoon I saw my enemy quietly walking up the low fence that divided my back garden from Capt. Travers'.

The opportunity was too good to be lost, and quietly getting my air-gun, I took a steady aim and fired. There was no mistake this time, and without a sound poor puss dropped on to my flower-bed as dead as the proverbial door nail.

My exultation, however, was of short duration, for to my horror and dismay, on proceeding to pick up his unfortunate victim, to give it a decent burial, I saw that my shot had passed right through the unlucky animal and killed my neighbor's parrot, which had been put out to sun itself in a little summer-house that stood at the bottom of the garden.

I was staggered at my position; I knew the parrot was a supreme favorite with Miss Travers, and how I could ever explain my carelessness I could not imagine. Suddenly a thought of my dilemma presented itself to my mind, and I hastened to put it into execution. I knew that the Travers were out, and would not be back for some little time, so hurrying indoors and taking my own parrot from its cage, I carefully pulled the end of its tail with red ink in imitation of its deceased comrade, and finding no one was about, I stepped lightly over the fence and substituted the living for the dead bird, which I buried, together with the cat, in my own garden. I knew that my parrot would not readily talk before strangers, and I hoped that by the time it had got used to its new surroundings, it would have forgotten its former accomplishments; at any rate, I was willing to risk it.

Alas! "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," sang some poet, who, I expect, never wore anything harder than a nightcap, but, true as it may be, compared to the torture of my mind, now knowing myself a cold-blooded duplicity, it would be a bed of roses.

It was towards the end of the following week that I happened to be out in the garden and saw my old friend come striding down the path of his own garden in his dot-and-carry-one style, and, seeing me on the fence, he cried:

"Holloa! captain, you're quite a stranger! What's been up? Rachel has been talking about coming into inquire about your health, as she was afraid something must be wrong."

"Yes, I have been a bit poorly," said I. Oh! how easily the words slipped out, although I had been as right as ninepence—why that particular sum should be endued with more rectitude than its fellows I have never been able to discover—this by the way.

"A bit of cold, perhaps," said Capt. Travers. "Well, come over the fence and have a dish of tea in the summer-house, and Rachel shall come in afterwards and make you a good glass of something stiff for a night-cap."

Punctually at five o'clock I donned my sprucest attire, and with a smart flower in my button-hole—gay dog that I was—slipped over the fence. Miss Rachel was there, looking as fresh as a spring cabbage with the dew on it, which I consider a very pretty simile, and she bade me welcome with one of her beaming smiles. There, too, was the bullfinch in its cage, and standing just outside the summer-house. I had noticed that it had been set out to sun itself as usual on all fine days, and as far as I could see nothing had transpired as to make me think they had any cause to suspect my imposition.

I purposely sat with my back to it, and avoided taking notice of it in any way whatever.

Tea went off all right; my old friend was very cheery and Miss Rachel showed every sign of content. I could hear Polly rubbing her beak up and down the wires of the cage, and swinging backwards and forwards in the metal ring.

After the meal Capt. Travers went indoors to get his supply of necessaries for the evening, and, turning to me, Miss Travers commenced:

"By-the-by, Capt. Manley, how is your parrot? I have not seen it out in the garden lately."

I felt my heart beating a bit faster, but with every semblance of outward calm, I said:

"No—the fact is, it's not been at all well; in fact, it's dead."

"Dead!" she exclaimed. "Well, I never. What did it die of?"

"I really don't know," I replied. "It died quite suddenly about a week ago."

"I hope our Polly isn't going to follow suit," she continued. "She has been very dull and quiet the last few days, but sometimes is more lively this evening. I don't think she has spoken a word all the week."

"Thank goodness!" I inwardly ejaculated.

Things were beginning to look a bit awkward, and I cast about for something to change the course of conversation. I am not a quick thinker, however, and before I could collect my wits, Miss Travers continued:

"Dear, dear, to think your poor Polly's dead! Well, I am sorry! I could be sorry to lose you, Polly dear," she said, addressing the parrot. "But really, Capt. Manley," looking me straight in the face, "I can't make our Pollyout. Sometimes I could almost believe she was a different bird. She hasn't—she seemed pleased to see me all the week."

I felt the blood rapidly rising to my cheeks and forehead, but I trusted to my tanned complexion for it not to show. I feebly replied: "Perhaps she's moulting."

It was an unlucky slip. "Well, now I come to think," said Miss Travers, "I noticed that its tail looked much paler after its bath the other morning, and the water was quite red. Is that a sign of moulting?"

"Yes, I often used to notice it about my own parrot."

"But I thought your bird had no red about it," she pursued.

"Confound the woman's persistence," I thought, but I stammered: "I mean—that is to say—you see—I've noticed it in all red parrots I have ever come across. They shouldn't be bathed at all, it's their constitution."

"Oh! I thought you recommended it," she said.

So I had, dozens of times. "Only for the gray ones," I said, forming a convenient distinction on the spur of the moment.

Miss Travers did not seem inclined to pursue the subject further, much to my satisfaction, and then there was a dead pause.

During the whole of our conversation the subject of it had not ceased to continue its antics in the wire cage. Whether it was the sound of my voice that caused it to be thus excited I do not know, but at this opportunity it burst in with "Hi, hi!"

I was getting desperate, and could think of nothing to change the subject; and yet if I didn't say something I was terribly afraid the parrot would.

A bicycle bell sounded down the road.

"Are you thinking of getting a bicycle, Miss Travers?" I said.

"No, certainly not," she replied; "how can you ask such a question?"

Another awful pause, during which I mopped the perspiration from my brow.

"Ra—Ra—Rachel, I love you!" came in clear tones from behind my back. The wretched bird had caught the exact tone of my voice.

"Capt. Manley," said Miss Travers, rising herself to her full five feet one and one-half inches, "Did you address that remark to me, sir?"

I had, however, utterly collapsed, and burying my head in my hands, I leaned down on the table. What could I do? The sight of the poor old ship in distress touched her tender heart I don't know, but she added, in softer tones:

"This is very unexpected, Capt. Manley."

I could hold out no longer.

"Miss Rachel," I cried, "I'm a thundering old hypocrite. My parrot isn't dead at all; there it is in that cage; it's yours that's dead; I shot it. I didn't mean to. Can you forgive me for all the lies I have told you?"

"All right! All right!" said the solemn voice of the parrot behind me.

"It was Polly that made that remark just now, not I; but, believe me, she speaks the truth, if I don't. Rachel, I do really love you."

I ventured to look up. Tears were standing in her eyes, and the expression on her face made me hope that I did not look quite such a big booby in her eyes as I felt I did in my own.

Moving nearer, I clasped her hand, and as it was not withdrawn, I put one arm gently round her ample waist.

"Now we shan't be long," said the gray parrot.—Tit-Bits.

HAS EYES LIKE AN OWL.

A Man Who Can See Only When Darkness Casts Her Mantle Over the Light.

This is a strange case of Henry C. Lanner, whose eyesight was ruined for daylight, but of perfect vision at night.

Ten years ago he was working in a foundry when a shower of molten iron struck his face and both his eyes. He was carried to a hospital, stone blind, and when the wounds had healed and the bandages could be removed both eyes were sightless. He tried to reconcile himself to this awful affliction through the first day after the wrappings had been taken from his eyes.

That night, however, happening to awake after the light had been put out in his room, he found to his amazement that he could see every object about him distinctly—chairs, books, the pictures on the wall paper and carpet were seen as plainly as he had formerly beheld them in the daytime. He lay awake until morning, overjoyed as a man brought out of a living grave. But as the light of dawn flooded through his windows the world became dark to him, and he could see nothing when the morning light became strong.

The next night he found that he could read a newspaper in the darkness and write letters, while in the day he could only dimly recognize the outlines of people and buildings.

A REMARKABLE TOWN.

Norwich, in England, is Slowly Sinking Into the Earth.

Assuredly it is the most curious town in England, and the most upside-down looking place, is Norwich. As the stranger walks up one of its streets he wonders whether he is the victim of a disordered imagination or whether an earthquake has been visiting the town, for the two houses are leaning one against the other, as if for mutual support; three more are leaning from each other as if in sullen anger; higher up are dwellings sunken in the center or at the ends; the pavement on one side is certain places is higher than the other, while a little further on it is lower.

In short, everything has a general appearance of topsy-turveydom in this town of what are described as "drunken houses," and none of it all is not far to seek. Norwich, as every one knows, or ought to know, is the centre of the salt industry, and it is the drawing of brine and rock salt for the manufacture of this very necessary condiment which is the moving factor in the mischief. On nearly all sides of the town are big salt works, with their engines pumping hundreds of thousands of gallons of brine every week, while the extensive mines of rock salt are being cut in all directions.

THE MAN IN THE TRAIN.

The northern express was about to leave the Tedcroft Junction when two girls rushed into the station. They had just time to hurry into the first carriage at hand and have their bags and rugs bundled in after them, when the whistle sounded and the train started.

"How I hate a rush!" exclaimed Angela Trevor, the elder of the two sisters, a handsome, resolute-looking girl, as she panted to fall into her place. "It is so upsetting to one's nerves."

"Disarranges one's clothes, too," added Molly.

To think of our not having had time to select a carriage for such a long journey!" said Angela.

Both glanced involuntarily at the other end of the carriage, where their one fellow traveler sat in the corner seat on the same side with Angela. His head and face were hidden from view by the ample pages of the Times spread out before him. Two long, tweed-clad legs were stretched out, finished with flattish feet in well-finished boots. At the side glimpses showed of a shoulder, an arm, and a thin, nervous-looking hand.

"He looks all right," Molly said, carelessly thrusting a hairpin into her back hair.

"Undeniably a gentleman!" said Angela, with decision. "He has a good tailor, and his boots are unexceptional."

The girls settled down for the journey, extracting from among the surrounding impedimenta the usual literary solaces in the way of newspapers and vividly bound novels. Then they presently talked over in low tones the visit on which they were going in Yorkshire. Their hostess was a friend and contemporary, who had lately married the owner of Greenacres Manor. They were full of excitement, surmise and pleasant anticipations regarding the visit to their friend in her new place and position. It was some time before the flow of conversation ceased, and they took up their books. Angela was now engaged in following the unwholesome career of a modern heroine through all its risky intricacies. Mollie had chanced on a volume of short stories, plainly enjoyed by the triumphs of Sherlock Holmes. They were full of ghastly adventures with criminals and lunatics; the situations, though infinite in variety, were all alike thrilling and bloodcurdling. Mollie's youthful imagination took fire at every story, and, plainly with a lunatic in a railway carriage, especially excited her. It was not a particularly happy selection for a railway journey. She looked up from the pages with a shudder, her blood running cold at the present moment. Suddenly, as her eyes, scanning his whole face to be seen. Such a face! Just like so many of those described in the stories Mollie had been reading. The coincidence was extraordinary and startling. The girl's imagination took fright off on these wild flights, and she drew quickly back, cowering behind her book. She had never seen a stranger looking man; hollow-cheeked, gaunt, grim, but, above all, with the most peculiar eyes, eyes that protruded. She had in little expected such a development in the harmless-looking man behind the Times that the shock and surprise were very great. She retained, however, self-control enough not to speak to Angela on the impulse of the moment. Mollie was used to having fears ridiculed. She therefore decided to wait before giving any alarm, for it was possible that her wild imagination was running away with her.

After a few minutes she ventured to peep cautiously from behind her book. The man had turned away, and was looking out of the window, the gaunt profile showing in peculiar relief. She breathed more freely, relieved from the stare of those terrible eyes; she made a quick, close study of the stranger. As the scrutiny progressed, however, another change came over her face—the fear began to be replaced by indignation. Angela's well-meant attempt to reassure her.

"He's not a bit drowsy," she gasped. "I've just caught his eye over the newspaper. And—and—he looked as if he was—going—to—talk. Oh! what are we to do! Oh, Angela!"

Angela had turned deadly pale, but her presence of mind did not desert her.

"Let us pretend to be admiring the view," she whispered. "How lovely the lights on those fields is!" she said in a louder tone, turning to the window. "Do look, Mollie."

"He might spring on us—"

"Look," Angela severely interrupted the faltering whisper, "at that effect. Out of the window beside you, a little to the right. The shadows on the trees."

"Yes—yes—I—see."

"Go on looking, and talking about what you see," admonished Angela in undertones, "and when you can think of nothing more to say, I'll tell you a little story, and to Yorkshire and the hours of arrival at the station."

She gave the lead, taking up the prescribed topics in a quiet, level tone, the least calculated to arouse interest and attention. Her ears, at the time, however, were listening for the slightest sound from the other end of the carriage. The chief burden of the conversation rested on her, for Mollie's part in it, even with the most heroic efforts, was limited to a few words and the sight of her pale face.

"No, no. I am all right. Only it's a great deal worse. It's about the man in the carriage." Mollie's voice sank to the lowest whisper.

"What do you mean? Has he been doing anything?"

"No, but he is dreadful-looking; such a strange face and staring eyes. He must be an escaped criminal or a lunatic. A lunatic, I think, he looks so queer. Oh, it's dreadful!"

"Why should you jump at such awful conclusions," Angela expostulated, "merely because a man is queer-looking?"

"But it's not only that. Oh, I wish it was!" Mollie's teeth chattered with fright.

"What else? What is it? For heaven's sake, speak plainly."

"He is traveling without a hat; his head is bare," Mollie gasped out, in strangled whispers. "And he has no hat in the carriage, no luggage of any kind, either."

"Good gracious! Are you quite sure?"

"Quite. He has nothing with him but the Times. Would any ordinary man travel like that?"

Angela's face bleached to the color of her sister's; her fears started into just as acute life. No ordinary man would travel bareheaded. There was an awful probability about the conclusion arrived at by Mollie from his hatless condition.

"Oh!" she gasped under her breath. "It is awful! And to think that we're nearly half an hour from the next station!"

A movement at the other end of the carriage made both girls sink back in their places with beating hearts. As Angela sank against the cushions, she caught a sudden and unexpected glimpse of the stranger. He had turned again from the window, and was reopening the Times. Alas! Mollie had not exaggerated, as fear sometimes made her prone to do. The man's face was dreadful in its gaunt grimness. And then the staring eyes and bare head.

Angela could not but accept the situation, as the more suspicious and timid Mollie had accepted it. There was something wrong with the man; he had all the appearance of being a lunatic, awful though the thought might be, that they were alone in the carriage with a madman, it had to be faced. Angela, less helpless than Mollie, rapidly began to consider what was to be done. The train was not due to stop for at least 20 minutes longer. Would the quiet phase in which the man evidently then was, last during that time?—a terrible and vital question. And if it did? Full of excitement, surmise and pleasant anticipations regarding the visit to their friend in her new place and position. It was some time before the flow of conversation ceased, and they took up their books. Angela was now engaged in following the unwholesome career of a modern heroine through all its risky intricacies. Mollie had chanced on a volume of short stories, plainly enjoyed by the triumphs of Sherlock Holmes. They were full of ghastly adventures with criminals and lunatics; the situations, though infinite in variety, were all alike thrilling and bloodcurdling. Mollie's youthful imagination took fire at every story, and, plainly with a lunatic in a railway carriage, especially excited her. It was not a particularly happy selection for a railway journey. She looked up from the pages with a shudder, her blood running cold at the present moment. Suddenly, as her eyes, scanning his whole face to be seen. Such a face! Just like so many of those described in the stories Mollie had been reading. The coincidence was extraordinary and startling. The girl's imagination took

DON'T DEFY THE SHERIFF.

In the not very distant future the people of Union county will learn to know that Sheriff Kirk is not a man to be dallied with in the performance of his duty; and already a good many have realized this fact by coming in contact with the stern sense in which Mr. Kirk regards his trust. Sheriff Kirk has displayed a taste for improving the general makeup of juries which he thinks, by selecting them from business circles. While all admit that it is an admirable idea, there are few business men who care to serve on a panel and thus it was that last Thursday an Elizabeth business man simply ignored the summons. In years gone by such a thing as this was passed over lightly, but not so with Sheriff's Kirk's administration. Mr. Kirk will now report the delinquent to the court and ask for such punishment as will be a warning to future talesmen to perform such duty as the Sheriff may require of them. It has been suggested to the Sheriff that if he persisted in empaneling business men, that sooner or later the latter would make it their business to keep shy of constables. But the Sheriff is not losing any sleep over that conjecture. He has a host of constables to call to his aid, and besides he has the law on his side.

NO PLACE FOR COWARDS.

Can it be possible that there is a disposition on the part of Jersey policemen to falter with fear in the face of danger? Only a few weeks ago two Elizabeth policemen were convicted of cowardice, and now a New Brunswick policemen stands under the same accusation. Chance cowardice develops from a series of mental calculations superinduced by the promptings of the moment, there is no way in which a preliminary examination can evidence whether or not a prospective police officer is afflicted with this fatal fault in his general makeup. But in all other qualifications that make an officer as nearly model as possible the Plainfield guardians have demonstrated their possession of. So far none have ever shown a cringing spirit in the performance of their duty and is to be hoped that the record of the past will be that of the future. Cowards should have no place on a police force.

LONE STAR ASCENDING AGAIN.

Vincent L. Frazee, for two years famous as the Lone Star of the Common Council—the one bright spot on Democracy's officeholding escutcheon—is beginning to glisten again in the political world. But not in the realm of his old associates, for Mr. Frazee has turned his back to Democracy, and is a G. O. Fite through and through, so it is said. Many of the Fourth ward are urging that Mr. Frazee be elected to fill the vacancy that will be caused by an acceptance of Councilman Randolph's resignation, for it is said that Councilman Randolph can not recall his resignation, and there is a disposition to let it stand.

DARK HORSE IN THE FIELD.

It is a settled fact that Councilman Randolph is not to be the new street commissioner. Friends of Capt. William Hand are pushing his candidacy and they argue that his long and creditable record as a grading contractor and his close acquaintance with the streets and their needs makes him especially fitted for the place. The fact that H. C. VanEmburgh is a competent civil engineer, assisted in constructing the sewer system, and is in close touch with Chairman Frost, makes him a likely candidate. It is said, however, that there is "dark horse" in the field and that at the the finish he make a spurt, backed by several influential people, and capture the appointment.

LICENSE OBJECTIONS.

It is not likely that the applications for liquor licenses will come up at the next meeting of the Common Council, for they will not have been advertised a sufficient length of time. It is understood that when they do come up there will be a grand kick about some of them. This, it is said, is the outcome of some known violations of the ordinance regulating the traffic. When the Council meets it will probably adjourn for another week, at which time the licenses will come up.

NO VACANCY.

An inspection of the charter shows that Robert Meeker is street commissioner until his successor is confirmed by the Common Council.

WILL OF THE PEOPLE.

Congressman McEwan, of Jersey City, has a novel plan for testing the sentiment of his constituency in the matter of appointees for Government offices in his district. He proposes to send a postal card to each voter in Jersey City, with the names of the applicants for office printed on it, with instructions to the voter to indicate by check mark or otherwise the man whom he favors for the office. Mr. McEwan believes he has struck upon a plan whereby the will of the people of his district can be ascertained. There are only four Presidential postoffices in his district, and of course he will not have to send out as many cards as a member having more offices to look after. Several bosses in Mr. McEwan's district have been trying to dictate to him who shall and who shall not be appointed, but he is determined to heed the will of the people and ignore the bosses. His motto is: "No boss shall rule my district."

BETTER POSTAL SERVICE.

Postmaster John M. Hetfield is to be congratulated and commended in his successful effort to improve the free mail delivery in this city and borough, but there is bound to be some dissatisfaction on the part of those residents who will not receive the full benefit of the service. It is not, however, the fault of Mr. Hetfield, but is due to the fact that Uncle Sam's postoffice officials have got the service down to the most economical point in Plainfield, and thereby the resources of the postmaster are too limited to permit extending the extra delivery to all parts of the town. Eventually those who are unfortunate enough not to come in for benefits under the new schedule, will no doubt become so persuasive in their demands for the best service that the carrier force will be increased to satisfy the sense af justice.

REPUDIATES CARPET-BAGGERS.

Mayor Williamson, of New Brunswick, does not believe in carpet baggers, even of the smallest degree. John Becker was elected a member of the Board of Alderman from the Fourth ward, but some three months ago he moved to the Third ward where he engaged in business. Incidentally, however, he continued in the Aldermanic function of the Fourth ward. Now Mr. Becker wants his salary for that period of service but Mayor Williamson declares that Becker is not a resident of the ward that he poses as the Councilman of, and refuses to sign the voucher so that he may draw his money. Mr. Becker insists that his position is still a legal one and it may require the courts to determine which is right—the Mayor or the Alderman.

AN IDEAL.

Of course, it is neither here nor there, but it would be interesting to know what James K. Mathis would have done if he had been in Mr. Fisk's place last night.—Plainfield Press.

If Mr. Martine were Mayor of Plainfield it would always be gentle spring time in that interesting city. Everything would look its loveliest, the birds would sing all the time, and soon it would be known to all men that Plainfield was the modern Garden of Eden. And twice a week, at least, Mr. Martine would give an open-air lecture on the crime of '73. 'Tis sad to think of what might have been.—New York Tribune.

AN OUTSIDE VIEW.

Referring editorially to the proposition that this city become a part of Somerset county, in order to effect a Greater Plainfield, the New Brunswick Fredonian says:

With Greater Plainfield in Somerset county, Somerville would be in very great danger of losing the prestige it has held for many years as the county seat, and the larger city on the border line would come in strongly to fill the vacancy. Of course Plainfield would like this, but to Somerville it would be a fight between Plainfield and Somerville, backed by a large part of Somerset county, and the fight ought to be an interesting one. At any rate, it will be watched with interest over here in peaceful Middlesex.

SPOTTING SUSPICIOUS MEN.

There is a determined effort being made to trace out the perpetrators of the recent burglaries in this city and prevent other depredations, and to that end it is understood that the powers that be have ordered Police Sergeant Kiely to inspect all saloons and public places every night in the endeavor to spot suspicious characters.

A BAD EXAMPLE.

A prominent official saw one of Plainfield's model policemen expectorate on the sidewalk Friday afternoon and he called at The Daily Press office to make mention of the fact, and thus call the officer's attention to the bad example he set to others.

THE CHICAGO WAY

It is charged by a Chicago paper that the Sheriff of Cook county, who is allowed twenty-five cents a day for food for each prisoner, starves them at seven cents per head each, and pockets the balance.

do you eat iron

Some persons are always taking Iron. If weak and easily exhausted; pale and without appetite; if the nervous system is weak, and sleep difficult, what do you take? Iron? But iron cannot supply food to the tissues; nor does it have any power to change the activity of unhealthy organs and bring them back to health. Cod-liver oil is what you need. The oil feeds the poorly-nourished tissues, and makes rich blood. Iodine, bromine, and other ingredients, which form part of the oil, have special power to alter unhealthy action.

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is the most palatable way to take cod-liver oil. The hypophosphites supply healthy nerve action, which controls all the processes of life.

LEGAL FEES CAME FIRST.

RENT DUE FROM AN INVOLVED CONCERN WAS A SECONDARY.

Lawyer and Receiver Were Paid First and Now the Landlady is Suing to Recover the Whole Amount Due Her.

S. S. Swackhamer, as counsel for Mrs. Eleanor A. Campbell, has obtained a rule to compel William Newcorn, receiver, to show cause why he should not pay the rent due for the store occupied by the New York and Philadelphia Candy Company, of which Mr. Newcorn is receiver. It is another phase of the old trouble between the partners, George Sakelos and Frank Polites, which has been up in the local courts several times. They composed this company and after some trouble between them, Mr. Newcorn was appointed receiver in the case. The goods were sold but the amount received was not large enough to pay the rent due on the store and the receiver's and counsellor's fees. Receiver Newcorn decided that the fees should be paid first and what remained, if any, should go to the landlady but the latter objected and her counsel took action in the matter.

Testimony has been taken before a master of chancery and the testimony laid before Vice-Chancellor Stevens in Newark. Tuesday the final hearing in the case before the Vice Chancellor was held and the matter decided.

A Creditable Record.

The examinations at the New Jersey State Normal School have just been completed and Plainfield has been well represented there by Miss Emma Stevens, of Grandview avenue. Miss Stevens is in the first year and in her class which numbers sixty five in all, she had the highest average in her examinations.

A Convenience at Least.

Some one has kindly made an ashwalk on Spooner avenue from West Seventh street to the line of the trolley, which comes in very handy for residents of that part of the city in rainy weather.

Special Officers Sworn In.

A number of special officers were sworn in by City Judge DeMeza at his office on Saturday afternoon.

—The entertainment of the What soever Circle of the Kings Daughters of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, is postponed to Tuesday evening February 23. Those having tickets for the 12th, can use them on the 23d.

A PATRIOTIC SERVICE.

W. C. T. U. MEETING DEVOTED TO THE MEMBERS OF THE G. A. R.

Dr. Lowry Makes a Splendid Address in Which He Shows How Patriotism and Christianity Always Go Hand in Hand.

The room of the W. C. T. U. was filled to overflowing Sunday afternoon when a service particularly appropriate to the Grand Army men of this city was held under the direction of the committee on Soldier and Sailor work of which Mrs M. C. Dobbins is the chairman. The rooms were prettily decorated with flags, while around the speaker's stand was draped a large flag. There were present a large delegation of comrades from Posts No. 73 and 106, also from the Woman's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans.

After the fifteen minutes song service led by Mrs. Honeyman, prayer was offered by Rev. L. E. Livermore. Mrs. Tomlinson, county superintendent of the W. C. T. U, stated that she had been asked by the chairman to preside, and then she read the Scripture selection, after which a beautiful duet was rendered by Miss Harris, soprano, and Mrs. Ward, alto, of the First Baptist church choir. At the close of the meeting they gave another selection. Their pleasing voices blended richly in harmony and their singing was thoroughly enjoyed.

The address of the afternoon was made by Rev. Dr. Lowry, and in part he spoke as follows:

"There are two distinctive elements present this afternoon, and the combination makes it an easy matter to talk. In the first place it is Sunday afternoon and this is a religious meeting. In the second place this is a patriotic meeting. These two grand, vital forces, religion and patriotism, are inseparable, and when you do separate them demoralization always follows. Religion has been with us from the start, but patriotism has not. The latter is a modern invention. Up until within a few years, battles were fought on the plan of so much money so much work, and the person that paid the most money got the most number of men. How different it is now. A man can not be a patriot unless he shows some qualities that belong to religion. The time has come when if a man sells himself for religion he is scorned. I reverence the man that wears the Grand Army button, and I almost envy the man that wears it. Religion and patriotism calls for devotion. The cry should be My God! My Country!'

"Again, we can not be first-class patriots unless we sacrifice something. We can not have peace unless it is preceded by righteousness. The tide in the late Civil War never turned until the proclamation was issued by Abraham Lincoln. We must have righteousness, and like the men on the battlefield, we must fight for the flag. We must fight on until we reach God and His standard."

During Dr. Lowry's remarks he related several personal incidents connected with the late war in which he was interested, and he became enthusiastic in his attitude toward the soldiers.

Before the meeting closed Mrs. Tomlinson asked all present if they would sign the petition which is going to be presented to the City Council protesting against the granting of liquor licenses. A large number complied with the request and placed their names to the list.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

DETAILS OF THE PROPOSED SITES FOR THE MUNICIPAL BUILDING.

The Street Frontage of Each Property and How It Can Be Used—The Hannigan Property is Not Available for Use.

In answer to a correspondent's inquiries, the following information is given regarding the proposed sites for the new city hall:

The property of the corner of Park avenue and East Fifth street is the vacant lot, with 125 feet on Park avenue and 124-4 feet on East Fifth street. The Weber property on Watchung avenue has a depth of 130 feet and a frontage of 85 feet. The property at the corner of West Front street and Madison avenue is divided as follows: Forty-five feet on Front street, $10,000, and forty five feet adjoining for $9,000, or entire front, with depth of 100 feet, for $18,000, or entire depth to the raceway, 175 feet, for $20,000. The property on the northwest corner of Watchung avenue and East Second street, has a frontage of 29 feet on Watchung avenue and 81 feet on East Second street. The property at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Front street, known as the McDonald property, has a frontage of 78 feet on Front street, and 191 feet on Watchung avenue, which is offered for $25,000. The Hannigan property on North avenue, which extends from the latter avenue to Second street, is not considered available from the fact that the lot has not the required dimensions.

SCHOOLS TO HAVE 'PHONE SERVICE.

Modern Instruments to be Used With Central Connections.

The Plainfield Board of Education has contracted with the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company to reorganize the telephone service at the public schools. The old-fashioned instruments will be taken out of the schools and the new long distance phones will be put in. Instead of the Central office connecting only with the High School building where there is, at present, an exchange to the different buildings, separate wires will be run to all the buildings and the connections made entirely separate of each other. The changes will be made very shortly.

Miss Lottie Connett, of Watchung avenue, has recovered from her serious illness.

LIFE OF ENERGY ENDED.

H. MARVIN DUNHAM DIES FROM A MALADY OF LONG STANDING.

One of Plainfield's Well-Known Citizens—For Several Years a Creditable City Official—An Active Church Worker.

The Grim Reaper has taken another one of Plainfield's respected and valued citizens, and in the death of H. Marvin Dunham, which occurred Sunday afternoon at 3:30, a life passed away which has been of great value to this city.

For several years Mr. Dunham fought disease in an attempt to regain health, but his efforts failed. Death was the result of dropsy. During the past two years he had not been able to attend to business very much, relying a great deal on his daughter, Miss Ida Dunham, to look after his interests. During Mr. Dunham's illness he suffered intensely, but he never gave up hope as he was inclined to think that he would again be well and have his strength. He was conscious almost to the last and retained all of his mental faculties.

Mr. Dunham was born in this city fifty years ago and he celebrated the anniversary of his birthday on Saturday. The largest part of his life was spent here. In his boyhood days he attended school to a private teacher and later he went to the public school, being one of the first scholars to enroll.

After obtaining a common school education he associated himself in business with his father in Dunellen.

Made a tour through the country around Flemington and other towns, and bought produce which he sold in this city. He continued this business until about fifteen years ago. After that he became engaged in the insurance business with an office on Front street at the head of Park avenue. The business was formerly conducted by W. C. Butler, Mr. Dunham being out the latter.

During this time Mr. Dunham was elected a Republican Councilman. He served the city two terms in that capacity. He was a "no license" member of the council and along that line he made a strong fight. He performed other valuable work as a servant of the city. After he retired from the council he devoted more time to the insurance business. He associated himself with the Board of Health as inspector, which position he held until F. V. Weaver succeeded him.

Mr. Dunham was a member of the Second Avenue church and a thoroughly active member. His work was not in the church but in Warren chapel, a mission of the church. At one time he was the superintendent of the Sunday school at the mission and closely identified with all the work of the mission. He organized the famous "Dunham Choristers," and for many years their work was well-known in evangelistic services. As long as possible Mr. Dunham maintained his interest in christian work and when he was obliged to give it up he was greatly missed. He had a jovial and quiet disposition and he has many friends today who will always remember him for the bright-ness he brought into their lives. The death of his father and brother occurred last year. He leaves a wife, a daughter and a son. Two sisters and a brother also survive him.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

Justice Newcorn has issued summons in the following cases: Smith against Hoffman; Decker against Decker against Darling; Ivins, et als., against Woltman, returnable February 19th; Scully against Coster; Westphal against Randolph; Linke against Wolfe; Linke against Kavanagh, returnable February 16th. The case of Slape against the Plainfield Street Railway has been settled amicably.

—In the report of the organization of an anti-cigarette league last Saturday, the impression was given that the boys who composed it were addicted to the habit of smoking the damaging things. It was an unjust implication since their efforts are more to reform others than themselves.

HARTPENCE GIVES UP.

ENDS HIS EFFORTS TO GAIN POLICE REINSTATEMENT.

He Says That the Cost and Vexation of the Action Would be More Than Any Satisfaction He Might Attain.

John Hartpence, who contemplated bringing an action against the city to compel it to reinstate him as a member of the police force, has concluded to let the matter drop, on the advice of friends. He had not taken decisive steps in an appeal to the courts, simply asking legal advice from Lawyer Brady in reference to the right of the Mayor not to continue him as a policeman when his record had not been blotted by a charge or breach of rules. Mr. Hartpence told a Press reporter Tuesday that what galled him most in his being turned down, was that no intimation was offered him as to why he was not as competent to be a policeman this year as he was last. One idea he had in contemplating the resort to law was to compel the Mayor to show in what way he was not competent as a policeman, and if he could not, why he did not re-appoint him.

After considering the matter in various ways he concluded that the cost and vexations would be more than any satisfaction that he might get from the result.

Mr. Hartpence says that his relations with his superior officers and the rest of the policemen were always of the pleasantest and are the same today.

CUP STAYS BY 3 POINTS.

PARK'S NARROWLY ESCAPE LOSING AT WHIST TO ELIZABETH.

Matters Looked Dubious For the New Jersey Champions For a Time, But They Rallied at Last and Won.

The narrowest escape from defeat that the famous whist four of the Park Club has seen for many months took place Monday night when the team from the Elizabeth Chess and Whist Club came up to try for the Park Club challenge trophy, which is now held by the Park Club. It has been sometime since the Plainfield and Elizabeth cracks have met at the whist table and the Elizabeth players are counted among the most formidable of the Park's rivals in the state.

The match was a close one from the start and the Park's had to play their prettiest to hold their own. The first round resulted in a victory for the home team by a score of 5 to 3. The Elizabeth team began to improve when in Paris dropped from their usual high standard and the second round was won by the Elizabeth team by a score of 4 to 1, making the visitors one point ahead in the total. The interested ones of the Park Club, who were waiting down stairs, heard the news with sorrow and prepared to bid farewell to the trophy for the present at least.

They didn't count on the wonderful playing of their team, however, and the last round was fought out with much skill and watchfulness. The championship form of the home team began to tell and they steadily rolled up the score in their favor until the close of the round when it showed that the Parks had won the round by a score of 8 to 4, and had won the game by 3 points. The final score was 14 to 11.

The visiting team was composed of Messrs. Roberts, Brown, Hemphill, and Edson. The Park Club was represented by the regular team, Messrs. Rogers, Townsend, McCutchen and Howell. Mr. Haarlicker, of Elizabeth, acted as referee.

The next game will be played on next Monday evening at the Park Club house and the visiting team will be from the Jersey City Club. The following clubs have sent in their challenges in the order given: —Jersey City, North Ends of Newark, Orange, Ridgewood, Roseville. The convention for the state league at which the trophy will be played for by all the clubs of the state league, will be held on March 25th, probably at Jersey or Newark.

Contracts Awarded.

The remainder of the contracts have been given out by Lederer, the dry goods merchant, for the extensive alterations which he is making to his store recently damaged by fire. G. J. Tobin will do the plumbing and gas fitting; A. D. Phillips will do all of the electrical work; the iron work will be done by W. T. Kirk, while Woolston & Buckle have the contract for the painting.

Asks to be Excused from Active Duty.

After a service of twenty-seven years as a special policeman, S. R. Hope, janitor of the Bryant school, has asked the Council to excuse him from duty only in case of actual necessity, owing to his advanced age.

A New Musical Organization.

There is a movement on foot among some of the members of the Young Men's Association of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church to organize a banjo and mandolin club. The plan seems to meet with general favor.

PASSING COMMENT.

Vice-President-elect Garret A. Hobart, with his family and party, will start for Washington on March 2d at 11 a. m. by special train over the Jersey Central Railroad. The train will consist of the private car of President Maxwell, of the Jersey Central, the private car of President Harris, of the Philadelphia and Reading, one dining and one baggage car.

Now that the cycle show has begun, it is wonderful to see the great number of friends that the bicycle dealers have. Most of the dealers have a few complimentary tickets to distribute among their friends and customers and there is a general rush after them. Of course, some of the new found friends have to be disappointed but they never fail to turn up every year with a new demand.

In a dramatic club a company was playing "Caste." In one of the scenes a young man is making love to his sweetheart in a room belonging to the young lady's parents.

Being annoyed at a few people coming out and in, the young man, who was very excited, was about to say:

"Come, my love, to some cosey nook to tell our tales of love!"

But getting rather confused, he said:

"Come, my love, to some nosey cook to tell our tales of love!"

There is one road not far from Plainfield, one half of it, in fact, is in Plainfield, which is in sad need of repair. That thoroughfare is Jefferson avenue. Jefferson avenue is in rather hard luck as regards its location. Right through the centre of the road runs the boundary line between Union and Middlesex counties. It also separates the borough of Dunellen and the city of Plainfield. Neither county will fix all the road and no agreement has ever been made between the two by which joint action could be taken in the matter. In consequence, it has been twenty years since anything has been done to the road and its condition at the present day can be imagined. When the rains cut up the road so as to make it impassible, the residents in the neighborhood got to work and opened the street to traffic, but it still remains one of New Jersey's thoroughfares made up of New Jersey's typical mud.

If one intends to entertain friends sometime during February, a valentine party is a very pleasant and timely means of doing so; for then the young man's—and maiden's—fancy is proverbially supposed to turn to thoughts of love. Always hearts and chubby, colored Cupids. The invitations, therefore, should be sent out for the fourteenth. They may be as elaborately symbolic of the day, in their decorations, as the hostess desires, with corner designs of hearts, darts and Cupid's arts; but a simply written note is entirely appropriate and in good taste. It must bear, however, as the important feminine postscript, the request that every guest bring at least two valentines, one of which must be original, addressed to any of the expected guests, a list of whom should also be inclosed with the invitation. Of course, the more the merrier, and all sorts and conditions of valentines are to be encouraged, though the original ones will invariably cause the most amusement.

Picnics to Washington Rock used to be just the thing among the young people of Dunellen last summer and fall, and many parties enjoyed their afternoons there. There is a story current among the young people of the town relating to one which was held last summer, which was rather different from the usual run of picnics. The affair was arranged by four young ladies of the town and most of the young people were invited. For some reason or other, all the young ladies invited were unable to go, but seven of the young men accepted the invitations. Among the seven escorts was one of whom the four young ladies, who arranged the picnic, were particularly fond, and this young man had expressed a fondness for olives. It was not known until the party started that there were to be no other young ladies and consequently no other lunch besides that carried by the four originators of the affair. When the Rock was reached and the time came for the lunch it was discovered that the four young ladies had each brought a bottle of olives which made up the entire lunch. Of course, the favorite young man had all the olives he wanted.

An Afternoon Tea.

On Lincoln's Birthday the public are to be invited to an afternoon tea at the new building at Muhlenberg Hospital, called the Nurses' Home. The building is already completed, and the furnishing will be entirely done this week. The reception on the 12th inst. will give all who are interested in the hospital a chance to inspect this latest improvement from top to bottom.

—The competitive drill between Monroe Council, of Newark, and Somerset Council, of this city, will take place in this city Friday evening, February 19th.

SEVEN SEEK CHRISTIANITY.

Encouraging Service Held at the East Third Street Mission.

One of the best meetings ever held at the East Third Street Mission was the one of last Sunday evening, when mission workers from Jersey City were present and conducted the service. The spirit of devotion that pervaded the meeting was marked, and the many earnest testimonies and prayers offered helped to make the service one of great blessing to all. As a result of the efforts of the christian workers four women and three men openly professed conversion. It was after ten o'clock when the meeting closed and all testified that it was the most helpful that they ever attended.

If you have not engraved your work I should be pleased to get it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless the work will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the party purchasing.

I employ no agents, and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, as the agent's fee is usually paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shop, myself and my son doing the most of the work, and we practically attend to the setting of all work, and look upon the material at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to hold up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and assure you as cheaper than I do.

MUST WAIT FOR WAGES.

WATCHUNG AVENUE EXTENSION LABORERS PUT IN A PREDICAMENT.

Their Wages Cannot be Paid Till Contractor Bowden Finishes His Contract—Other Business of Borough Council.

The February meeting of the borough council last Friday was occupied wi h the transaction of many matters of more or less importance.

Mr. McLoughlin asked the council if there was any way for the laboring men who had performed work on Watchung avenue to get their money. He was informed that the borough is not indebt to these men until Contractor Bowden fulfills his contract, and that he had not done as yet. Mr. McLoughlin stated that there were men who should have their money and he thought that if their was any way that they could get it they ought to have it. The Mayor said that the council could not legally pay out the money until certificates had been received from Mr. Dunham. The question was discussed at great length on both sides and finally agreed that the matter would have to remain just where it is at present.

Clerk Arnold presented his report as follows:

	Balance.	Deficit.
Borough	$2,088.24
Fire Department		$13.27
Lighting	2,511.39
Roads	1,397.07
Poor	291.67
	$6,288.99
	13 27
	$6,885 66

Mr. Arnold reported the receipt of $3,546.98 from the sale of $3,500 worth of fire department bonds to the Dime Savings Banks, and the collection of $40.54 from fines, etc.

For 1896, Tax Collector Spencer reported, since the last report, the collection of $6,718.45; for 1895, $43.65; for 1894, $136.80; from the township duplicate within the borough, for 1893, $208; for 1894, $110.07.

The Clerk also reported that he had received from the County Clerk, as license money, $641.25.

Thomas Rutledge asked the Council to place a light on Warren street between Harmony and Chatham streets. The matter was referred to the proper committee.

The usual batch of claims were received and ordered paid.

Mr. Valiant stated that the new hose house was nearing completion, and that the committee had purchased 1,900 feet of Eureka hose for the use of the new company.

Mr. Woolston presented the report that should have been handed in at the last meeting. It showed that the sum of $196 36 had been spent on the streets during the latter part of 1896. Thus far this year $18.25 had been expended for the cleaning of snow from the walks.

The owners of the Sycamore avenue property which has lately been opened as a street presented a communication in which they dedicated that portion of the street to the borough. A map accompanied the communication. The matter was referred to the street committee and later in the evening it was accepted.

Mr. Valiant and Mr. Lounsbury offered the necessary resolutions to meet the notes of the borough now due, and Mr. Valiant offered a resolution that the committee on auditing and finance be authorized to examine the books of the council and report at the adjourned meeting of the council, which according to his motion will be in two weeks.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that the registry board meet Tuesday, March 2d, for the purpose of correcting and revising the registry list.

Mr. Woolston also offered resolutions to meet the road account notes now due, and Mr. Valiant presented another resolution granting the request of Charles Keller and others to organize a hose company in Prideville, the same to be called West End Hose Company No. 2. Following are the officers and men of the new company: E. I. Vroom, foreman; Charles Keller, first assistant foreman; J. W. Kliner, recording secretary; Herman Hansen, financial secretary; W. C. Pasch, treasurer; Peter Straun, J. W. Kliner, August Feirdrich and Herman Hansen. The council gave their consent and the new company was confirmed.

Mr. Valiant spoke regarding the annual reports of the borough and thought that they should be presented in a more definite form than usual. The matter was discussed by Mr. Valiant and the suggestion will no doubt be adopted.

Mr. Lounsbury thought that it would be a good idea to have a temporary bridge placed across Green brook over Watchung avenue, so that those who desired could pass over that way. The matter was discussed considerably but it was finally decided to let the same rest for awhile.

In accordance with a request, Mr. Woolston offered an ordinance that the eastern end of Regent street be vacated. The ordinance was adopted on the second reading, and will come up for a final reading at the next meeting of the council.

Stevens' Institute to Celebrate.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Stevens Institute of Technology will be celebrated at Hoboken, next week. Walter B. Rittenhouse, of East Sixth street, is one of the committee of undergraduates in charge of the affair.

ARE THEY BURGLARS?

THREE SUSPICIOUS CHARACTERS ARRESTED FOR SOLICITING FUNDS.

They Answer the Description of Mr. Goodwin's Visitors Some Time Ago—On Friday They Tried to Work Druggists and Others.

Three suspicious characters have been captured by the Plainfield police and sent down to the county jail by City Judge DeMeza, but it remains to be seen whether they are the same ones who have been committing the burglaries in this city of late. Two of them answer the brief description that was given of the two men seen by F. C. Goodwin the other night when the house at which he boards was entered and he had a struggle with the invaders.

Last Friday two men visited the pharmacy of G. W. V. Moy, on Park avenue. Their disreputable appearance did not give a favorable impression to the proprietor of the store who was alone at the time. They stated their wishes very plainly; they wanted some money. Their reasons were rattled off in such a low tone that Mr. Moy could not understand. Perhaps he did not want to. He immediately invited them to leave the store and when they became quite persuasive in their arguments, he impressed the fact very strongly that they were not needed. At last they accepted his invitation and departed.

They next visited the pharmacy of F. H. Hebard & Company, at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Fifth street. Frank Denckiau, the junior clerk, was alone in the store. The men came in and requested some money. He refused and the men insisted. He still objected to furnish them with funds and the strangers became insolent in their demands. The situation began to look serious when Denckiau saw the welcome sight of two policemen standing on the corner. They were Patrolmen Totten and Myers. He called them and explained the circumstances and soon the visitors were lodged in the rookery.

Councilman William N. Runyon was the victim of the other man. He applied to the Councilman for financial help and became very importunate in his demands. He didn't know the Councilman, however, for the stranger was soon in the gentle grasp of Sergeant Kiely, who arrested him at the station.

The three men were arraigned before the City Judge last Saturday. They gave their names as John Wilson and Thomas Burns, of Pittsburgh, and James Murray of Elizabeth. They pleaded guilty to the charge of vagrancy and were sentenced to thirty days in jail. They were tough looking customers.

They said that they were trying to get enough money to pay for a night's lodging.

"What is the use of locking us up," said the most respectable looking individual of the three. "It will only put us back further than we are. I've never had the cell door locked on me before."

Mr. Moy and Frank Denckiau appeared at the trial but their testimony was not necessary as the men pleaded guilty.

SAME POLICE HEADS AGAIN.

POLICE BOARD MADE SELFCTIONS.

Councilmen Confirm the Choice of the Mayor in Appointment.

There will be no changes in the officers of the police department this year, for the present at any rate. Acting Roundsman Flynn has been appointed to succeed himself and he will be tried in that position for some time to see his capability for the position. This was decided at a meeting of the police Board, held on Saturday afternoon. Messrs Barrows, Runyon and Westphal were present, but Mayor Fisk, who is a member of the Board by virtue of his office, did not attend. George W. Grant was re-appointed to the office of captain of the police. Patrick Kiely was re-appointed to the sergeantship, and the Roundsmen appointed were Frederickson and Flynn. The other officers were arranged in order, with the new men at the end of the list.

Other matters of a secret nature were discussed but no other business of importance transacted.

Opening of the nurses' Home.

All who are interested in the Muhlenberg Hospital are invited to attend an afternoon tea on Lincoln's birthday, from two until six o'clock at the nurses' home, next door to the hospital. An opportunity will be given to inspect the new building, and all will be welcome. The Fourth street electric cars pass within a block of the door.

A Successful Class.

The attendance at the sewing class at the German Reformed church was somewhat smaller, Saturday afternoon, than usual on account of the storm. The class is proving a itself a very useful institution for the children of the congregation.

—The councilmanic street committee met Saturday evening and discussed some minor matters regarding sidewalks.

AIM TO DO MISSION WORK

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH YOUNG WOMEN ORGANIZE A SOCIETY.

A Large Number of Charter Members and an Energetic Set of Officers—Mrs. E. B. Horton Talks of the Work.

The flattering success which attended the organization of the Young Ladies' Mission Band of the Trinity Reformed church Friday afternoon in the parlors of the church, was largely prophetic of that which will follow the work of this new society. There were about seventy people present and forty-five of that number placed their names on the roll of the Band. The ushering in of this new society was accompanied with all the enthusiasm and zeal so necessary to carry out its objects. Those who were chosen to serve the Band as officers were as follows: President, Mrs. Charles P. Leggett; Vice-President, Miss Lillie Bemsen; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Will F. Williams; Corresponding Secretary, Miss L. Snedicker; Treasurer, Miss Minnie Williams.

The principal work of organization being performed, Mrs. Leggett introduced Mrs. E. B. Horton, corresponding secretary of the Woman's Board of Domestic Missions of the Reformed church of America, who gave one of her interesting talks on missions. Of late Mrs. Horton has been giving a great deal of her time to the study of the Indians and their peculiarities, and in view of the fact that Evangelist Wright is now engaged in that work under the direction of the Reformed church, she related something of his work among the Indians. Mr. Wright is an Indian himself and his work is among the tribe to which he belongs. He is located at Oklohoma, and is doing a wonderful work. Through his efforts a church has been built and he is now establishing small missions at different points in his field.

He has also been instrumental in establishing a hospital, where the many suffering ones can be treated properly and cared for. Just now there was a great need of a christian woman who could serve as a physician.

Mrs. Horton said that the many strange things in the life of an Indian made it well worth the study, and especially was this true regarding the marriage rites and customs. When an Indian becomes a christian the first thing he does is to cleanse himself and thus prepare himself to receive the Gospel. With the Indian cleanliness is considered an essential qualification after he receives the Gospel.

The speaker gave a quotation at the close which she hoped all would remember. It was as follows: "America is the land and the mission work is the oil to send the light to foreign lands."

Rev. Cornelius Schenck proposed that those present give Mrs. Horton a vote of thanks for her talk, and it was heartily agreed to.

Mrs. Leggett then spoke a few words in which she told how deeply interested she had become in the work for the Indians and she thought it would be well for the Band to take up this work for they could do so much right here in this country without going abroad. By doing the first thing on hand it would then prepare the members to do foreign work.

The Band will meet again in two weeks when committees will be appointed and other necessary business accomplished.

The Railway Employes Dance.

The first annual ball of the street railway employes, given in the Crescent Cycle Academy on Friday was a success in providing a jolly time for the several hundred dancers who attended. The grand march was started at 10 o'clock, with the following couples in the lead: T. A. McCarthy and Miss Shattuck, of Brooklyn; M. J. Walls and Mrs. William Baldwin; M. J. Nevins and Miss Christana Stemis; P. J. Maguire and Miss Nellie Powers. The march was joined in by nearly all the couples in attendance and made a pretty sight. Prof. O'Rielly furnished the music and the affair did not end till the early morning hours.

A Taffy Pull.

A delightful time was had Thursday evening at the home of Miss Matilda Alexander, on East Fifth street, when she gave a taffy-pull to a few of her friends. Those present were the Misses Brown, Davies, Miller, Cortrella and Davis. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Walker and son Walter, Jr., and the Messrs. A. and R. Davis. After all the taffy had been pulled to a snowy whiteness, other more substantial refreshments were served. The pleasant evening came to an end after music and games had whiled away a few more hours.

Might Be a Suicide.

A dog was found dead on Putnam avenue several days ago hanging by his collar to the fence. It is supposed that the canine, which was a large mastiff, tried to jump over the fence and caught his collar and was finally choked to death. The remains were taken away today.

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE.

HAPPY FACULTY OF COMBINING THE TWO BY THE ENDEAVORERS.

Financial Reports of the First Presbyterian Society Show it to be in Good Condition—The Social Side.

Business and pleasure were very enjoyably combined at the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian church, held in the chapel of the church last Friday. The first part of the evening, while the members were gathering, was spent in playing a new game. A slip of paper bearing the name of some well-known character of history was pinned on the back of each one present. The others saw the name and dressed their conversation accordingly, while the labeled one tried to guess the name on the slip. The game furnished no end of amusement. Then the members gathered in one of the parlors while the younger attendants at the sociable remained out side and played games.

The meeting was presided over by the president, LeRoy Gates. The reports of the different officers and committees were made and they showed the society to be in good condition, financially and otherwise. It was decided to send $5.75 to a school in Ashville, North Carolina. A number of communications were read.

The meeting over, the members spent the rest of the evening socially. A spelling bee was arranged in which Rev. C. E. Herring acted as the teacher and gave out the words. William Corriell and LeRoy Gates acted as captains and selected their sides. There were other games during the evening while refreshments were served by the committee.

The sociable was arranged by the social committee of the society most of the members of which were present. The committee is composed of Miss Grace T. Petrie, chairman, the Misses Nora Williams, Lillian Glen, Gertrude Hazeltine, Elizabeth Bittentender and Margaret Cave, and William Coriell, Guernsey Nevius, Herbert Martin and Harry Williams.

ROOSTER RAIDER CAUGHT.

A Scotch Plains Chicken Thief Sent to the County Jail.

William Messler, a well-known character about Scotch Plains, went on the rampage Saturday afternoon, and about two o'clock made a raid on Mrs. Hart's hen roost opposite the Baptist church, carrying away several fine fowls. He made no bones of telling where he got the fowls, and even went to a hotel and asked for twine to tie the chicken's leg with. He afterwards sold the fowls to a butcher. Mr. Mr. Hart went before Justice Clark and swore out a warrant for Messler's arrest and he was apprehended by Constable Walpole and consigned to the County Jail at Elizabeth to await the action of the Grand Jury. This arrest is considered an important one, inasmuch as many hen roosts hereabouts have been robbed during the fall and winter, and the whole business is now laid at Messler's door.

A PASTOR SURPRISED.

A Pleasant Event Arranged For Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Main.

The pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, Rev. A. E. Main, and his wife were given a delightful reception, Saturday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Truell, of Central avenue. There were about sixty guests present during the evening. The dining room was decorated in pink, and here the guests were served with refreshments. Mrs. A. L. Titsworth and Mrs. A. M. Ross were in charge. They were assisted by Mrs. W. C. Hubbard, Miss Ida Spicer, Miss Mattie Green and Miss Bessie Titsworth. The table was charmingly arranged with pink roses as the principal decoration. The reception lasted from 8 o'clock until 10.

Damage by Rain.

During the severe storm, on Saturday, the strong east wind drove the rain drops into many houses and stores. Rain managed to get in through the windows in Powlison & Jones furniture store on East Front street, so that extra precaution had to be taken to keep the water from the furniture.

Circus Coming.

Washburn's circus will visit this city about the first of May.

AMONG THE STUDENTS

MATTERS OF PASSING INTEREST AT THE HIGH SCHOOL.

A New Seedule of Lessons Arranged For the Beginning of a New Term and Work Going Steadily Forward.

With the beginning of the new term at the Plainfield High School, there has come a complete change in the schdule of the lessons and Principal Travell has announced an entire new arrangement. Everybody has recovered from their recent interview with the examinations though some who were absent from the examinations took them last week. The work in the lessons is going steadily forward and the new routine works very satisfactorily.

Nothing more has been done in the glee club since the examinations, and the athletic association is equally quiet.

The only society in the school that is prominent at present is the Kappa Delta Phi, which held its regular meeting on Friday afternoon at the High School building. The programme consisted of a debate on the subject, "Would the annexation of Cuba be advantageous to the United States." The debaters on the affirmative side were William A. Fisher and Lindley L. Hillman. Their opponents were William DeLong and George Proctor Smith. The debate was decided by the committee in favor of the affirmative after a lively debate. There were several visitors at the programme.

A programme was arranged for the meeting three weeks from that date. It will be a debate on the subject, "Does the small college offer greater educational facilities to the student than the large universities."

One of the events of the last year's school is the Senior Class party which is usually held at Thanksgiving. The class of '97 did not hold their class dinner at the Thanksgiving season but the members of the class are now planning to hold it on Thursday evening of this week. It will be held in the Franklin building. The dinner will be served by a caterer. The usual repast will be followed by toasts at which the president of the class, Sydney R. Titsworth, will preside.

CITY HALL SUGGESTIONS

CORRESPONDENTS WHO FAVOR SITES BESIDES THOSE MENTIONED.

One Man Who Thinks That For All Things Concerned the Hannigan Property on North Avenue is the Best Location.

Interest in the city hall site still remains lively as shown by the votes that are coming into The Press office. Several communications have been received, two of which are published below:

To the Editor of the Daily Press:—Through the columns of your valuable paper, I have read several suggestions as to a proper site for Plainfield's city hall, council chamber and police station. Were we, as a city, confined to any one of those already mentioned, the site on the corner of Madison avenue and Front street, (to my mind) would be the best, as there can be no doubt at all but the business of Plainfield will grow westward. But, sir, I think we ought to consider the convenience of the general public in the matter and have our city hall as near to the entrance to our city (by rail) as possible. I do not require to show here the many advantages that would accrue from having it built on that empty lot on the north side of North avenue. Its situation, I am sure, will immediately suggest itself to the general public as the proper place. There would be a beautiful entrance to council chambers, court room and law office on North avenue, while the entrance to police station, cells, witness and jury rooms could be obtained by way of Second street, (cells in basement).

To purchase such a site might cost the city a little more money than any of the others already suggested, but it certainly would be the best part of the city and I believe would give general satisfaction.

G. Gray,
217 Grant avenue.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—It seems to me that the most sightly location by far, for the proposed city hall, would be the property now occupied by Mr. Peterson's green houses on Watchung avenue and owned by the Society of Friends. The Friends have made no offer of the land, but it probably could be purchased at a reasonable figure. Plainfield should not build an ordinary business block, but a structure of suitable architectural design for a public building, placed well back from the street and away from adjoining property. The property above mentioned is some 300 feet deep and if, say 150 feet from were purchased, an ideal site would be secured.

Park.

$850 For Missions.

As a a result of the address recently made by Dr. Morgan at the First Baptist church, on behalf of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, $850 has been received as contributions to the work of the society. The church is desirous of making the amount $1,000

A FIRM 300 YEARS OLD

CHAPOT'S CHAMOIS SKIN INDUSTRY OF MANY GENERATIONS.

The Present Proprietors and Their Antecedents Born and Brought up Into Business—New Things For This Century.

One of the most interesting industrial establishments in this country is that of Messrs. Chapot & Son, manufacturers of chamois, with a factory located near the Central Railroad, just beyond Clinton avenue. The business is one that was established in France over 300 years ago by one of the founders of the Chapot family, and it has come down from father to son through many generations to the present day. It is the only business concern in the world that has a record of such transmission from fathers to sons during such a lengthy period, and it is one of the oldest business houses in existence from any point of view.

The productions of the old French house were long sold in large quantities in the United States, but when the McKinley tariff went into operation some time ago, they decided to transfer their business to this side of the water, because the United States was one of their principal markets. They came here with a brilliant prestige and a most honorable reputation, and they have steadily added to these qualities since that time.

When the firm first came to this country they located at Middletown, N. Y., but at the end of one year they needed more room and better facilities and they removed to North Plainfield. They remained there three years, and again they had to increase their facilities. They then erected a building 50x250 on five acres of ground as above located, and a force of about sixty hands is at present employed

About a year ago the business was incorporated on a joint stock basis with a capital of $30,000, with the following persons as officers: President, Charles Chapot, secretary and treasurer, Joseph Chapot; manager, John Chapot. Another son, Frank Chapot, is a salesman and spends most of his time on the road. All of these men bring to bear great skill, experience and energy in the business and are looked upon as the foremost chamois manufacturers of the world. Another member of the family, John Chapot, of Italy, is the largest manufacturer of chamois in all Europe.

The firm considered the Wilson bill a bad one for their business, and when it first went into operation it injured the western tanneries so much that Chapot & Sons had to reduce the volume of their business very much. If the duty should be placed at 40 per cent. the firm thinks that it would be the means of building up their industry in this country. As chamois is a luxury they think that it would be no hardship to anybody if the tariff was fixed at a high enough figure to give the American manufacturers a fair chance. At present this country is paying from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 a year for imported chamois, all of which money might just as well go to the manufacturers in this country.

WALKED FROM ST. LOUIS.

A GERMAN TRAMPS OVER 1,000 MILES TO SEE HIS DAUGHTER.

On His Way to New York He Stops in the Station House in This City Last Night—Had Received No Courtesy.

Boundsman Fredrickson entertained quite a distinguished pedestrian in the rookery last evening. He came to that officer late Thursday afternoon and asked for lodging for the night. He was on his way to New York to visit his daughter, who was married and had a little home there.

Robert Hondloser was the name of the stranger. He was a German, and about fifty years of age. All the way from St. Louis he had tramped his way afoot except when he could get a ride with some passing farmer. Six weeks it had taken him, and so far he had not begged a cent. He stopped along his route every few days and earned enough money chopping wood or at some other kindred occupation to secure for him the necessities of life. When he could afford it he spent the night at some cheap lodging house or appealed to the police for a night's lodging.

Hondloser was not a member of the grand army of the "knights of the road," but a respectable man. When he reached this city yesterday he was almost exhausted, and the kind officer who looked after him saw that he had not only a night's lodging but a good supper.

He seemed to appreciate the kindness shown him and started out this morning en route for the home of his daughter in New York.

Sprained Her Ankle.

Mrs. J. A. Blatz, of Somerset street, slipped on the ice in front of her home on Saturday morning and has sprained her ankle. She is now confined to the house where her injuries will keep her for several weeks.

Councilman Baker returned on Saturday from an extended business trip through the South.

A FIGHT TO THE FINISH.

REGULAR Y. M. C. A. BASKET BALL TEAM DEFEAT BUSIEESS MEN.

The Young Fellows Had a Hard Time in Defeating Their Older Contestants—First Time They Had Met in a Game.

It is rarely that a more exciting game is seen than the one played in the gymnasium of the Y. M. C. A. last evening, between the regular basket-ball team of the association and the team from the business men's class. The regular team won the game, but it was only after a hard fight, for the regulars found that the members of their own association could give them as hard a tussle as they could wish. It was the first meeting of the two teams since the business men's team has opened its regular campaign.

The game was won by the regular team by a score of 16 to 13. At the end of the first half it was 12 to 6, in favor of the regulars. In the last half most of the fight was about the regulars' goal.

In the second half G. P. Smith played forward for the Regulars and Jacque guard. On the other team Jean took Doane's place at forward.

BU RITES OVER AN OLD FIREMEN.

Josiah Layton's Funeral Attended by Exempt Firemen.

The funeral services of the late Josiah Layton were held Saturday noon at 1 o'clock from the Crescent Avenue church. Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the church, conducted the services in the presence of a number of relatives and friends. He spoke of the way in which the deceased had been helped to live the right kind of life, through the aid of Christ, and he made the lesson an object one for all.

A beautiful sheaf of wheat, from the Exempt Firemen's Association, occupied a prominent place on the casket. The badge of the association, reposing on the coat of the departed, was a silent reminder of the many faithful years which he served as its member.

Interment was in the family plot in the North Plainfield cemetery. Those who served as pallbearers from the Exempt Firemen's Association were E. E. Barkslew, H. N. Spencer, T. O. Dunn, D. W. Littell, H. W. Force and Wallace Vail.

CAUSE, OVERHEATED STOVE.

Tar Paper Set Fire to and Made Lots of Stirring Smoke.

Last Thursday at 6.09 o'clock an alarm of fire was sent in from Box 46 located at the corner of West Second and Liberty streets, by William Classon, the barber. When the department arrived they found that the fire was in the blacksmith shop owned by J. J. Sharp, and it was caused by an overheated stove which set fire to some tar paper. The shop was filled with smoke and everybody thought that the fire was a great deal worse than it was. The fire apparatus was not used at all as it was not found necessary. The damage was very slight.

SMALL REWARD FOR BURGLARS.

Men Open a Safe and Found in It Only Two Revolvers.

Mundy's hardware store, at Metuchen, was entered by burglars last Thursday. The safe was blown to pieces with powder. The robbers placed heavy blankets which they found in the store around the safe to deaden the sound of the explosion.

Two revolvers were found in the safe and nothing else. It is believed that the robbery was committed by two men who were seen to get off the train from New York at Metuchen early in the evening.

A Successful Operation.

A very successful operation was performed at the Roosevelt Hospital, New York, Friday afternoon, on Fred P. Taylor, of Washington Park, who has been ill with the spendicitis. The operation was performed by Dr. McBurney, who is an expert on such operations.

A Reporter Not Dog Proof.

While in search of news in Dunellen Friday afternoon, William A. Simpson, of the reportorial staff of the News, was bitten on the leg by a dog. The bite was not a severe one and no evil results were felt from it.

A Good Shot.

The members of the Game Association are elated to hear that John Goff, Jr., has succeed in killing a large hawk which has been hovering about the game preserve for several days, and had always managed to keep well out of shooting distance. But the innocent appearance and true form of John, Jr., was deceptive to the hawk, which hereafter will live only as an ornament to remind him of his foul hawk.

A New England supper will be given by the Woman's Relief Corps at an early date.

JOINING THE ASSOCIATION.

FIFTEEN NEW Y. M. C. A. MEMBERS.

Young Men Seek the Benefits of the Admirable Organization.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Young Men's Christian Association held Thursday the following officers and directors were present:—W. D. Murray, Stephen Cahoone, George A. Strong, H. M. Maxson, A. C. LaBoyteaux, G. A. Chapman, G. R. Cornwell, E. L. Bonny, R. H. Radford.

Fifteen members were elected, six of whom were juniors and two honorary.

It was moved and carried that the thanks of the association be extended to the Rev. E. Kionka for his services rendered to the association in connection with the educational department.

The building of the association has been used the past month by the following organizations:—Primary Sunday-school Union, directors of the Choral Society, ladies of the Children's Home, King's Daughters, Town Improvement Society, Cecilia Club and by the pastors of the city.

On eight different occasions the large audience room has been rented the past month and the small hall twice.

CHOIR PRIZES PRESENTED.

HONORS FOR GRACE P. E. SINGERS

The Presents Are Given to Those Doing the Best Work.

The members of Grace P. E. church choir were much interested last Sunday when the honors for the month were presented. There is always a great deal of rivalry among the members to receive this recognition, and thus the first Sunday of every month is a notable event for them. The presentations were made by Dr. Rodman, pastor of the church. Miss Mabelle Smith and Walter Hockridge received the cross, while Ernest Fellows received the prayer book and hymnal. Miss Blanche Fosgate and Miss Clara Woodward each received their first medal, and Miss Louise Egan was presented with the third month medal which will entitle her to a month. Under the direction of the organist, Mrs. Freeman, the choir is doing very fine work and the attendance of the members is a marked feature. It depends on the good behavior and attendance of the members as to whether they receive honors, and in this way they try to be efficient.

EDICT OF NANTES.

Prof. Riggs' Lecture in University Extension Course.

"The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes" is the interesting subject announced for the lecture to be given by Dr. James F. Riggs in the Crescent Avenue chapel on Thursday evening of this week at 8 o'clock. When it is remembered that on account of this cruel act of Louis 14th, about 500,000 Huguenots were driven from their their homes and from France, influencing to this day the history of their own and their adopted countries, its importance as a theme for study cannot be denied. The lecture is given under the auspices of the Meall Auxiliary of this city.

Surprised Rev. Mr. Barnes.

The Bible class of Rev. Dr. Charles R. Barnes, of the First M. E. church, gave him a very pleasant surprise at his home on Seventh street, Friday evening. After he had been presented with a handsome picture and easel, which was presented by D. S. Dunavan in the name of the class, Dr. Barnes made a few appropriate remarks in reply and the rest of the evening was spent socially. The guests brought the refreshments with them, which were served during the evening. About twenty-five were present.

Sincerity the Topic.

The consecration meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church, last Sunday, was a very impressive one. It was led by John V. Beekman, Jr. The topic of the meeting was "Sincerity." Special talks were given by the following: Harold W. Tomlinson, on "Sincerity in Business;" Miss F. F. Clark, "Sincerity in Social Life;" Rev. C. L. Goodrich, "Sincerity in a Church Member;" Miss Anna E. Manktelow, "Sincerity in a Christian Endeavorer."

Delicate Operation Performed.

A delicate operation was performed on Rev. Mr. Custard at his home in Dunellen Saturday afternoon by Dr. E. W. Hedges. Mr. Gustard was in great pain before the operation but is now doing nicely.

Lowland Submerged.

Much of the lowland about the Smock farm on West Front street was submerged with water Saturday, and pedestrians could not pass on the sidewalk at all. At this particular point the street car tracks were inundated to a depth of from three to five inches, and the cars propelled through the water with extra precaution.

The Hand of Fellowship.

Four persons received the right hand of fellowship at the First Baptist church Sunday morning previous to the celebration of the communion service.

WORK OF THE ALLIANCE.

STATE SUPERINTENDENT MORRIS GIVES A HELPFUL TALK.

The Plainfield Branch Complimented for the Excellent Service in the Cause in Which Its Efforts Are Devoted.

The members of the Plainfield Branch, of Christian Alliance enjoyed a rare treat Thursday when they had the pleasure of listening to an earnest talk by the State Superintendent Mr. Morris, of Passaic. The number of members and friends present was unusually large, and the meeting was one of special interest to all.

Mr. Morris held the attention of his audience for over one hour, and he based his remarks on the text "Know Ye Him." He held that it was of the greatest importance that a person should have a direct and personal knowledge of the Father, and thus be in close touch and harmony with Him. This he said would keep us deeply and wholly spiritual. He dwelt at length on the second coming of Christ, and said that if people were living right and had the proper amount of faith they could bring Christ to earth within a month. He spoke considerable about the necessity of studying God's word and preparing for the work of saving souls. He related many incidents of how God had wonderfully revealed Himself to him, thus teaching him many important lessons of faith and patience. By his exercising the right kind of faith God had richly rewarded him and constantly supplied his needs.

He complimented the Plainfield branch for its excellent and helpful work it was accomplishing for the Master. He said that he did not know of a branch that was better supported than the one in this city. He urged the members on to do greater things in "His Name," and to receive the blessings which God has in store for those who love and trust Him.

Mr. Morris told many things of interest concerning the work in foreign fields and how he had been led to assist in this grand effort to relieve suffering humanity. Judging by the amount of great suffering in this country as well as abroad, he thought that the coming of the Lord was very near at hand. This he said was the teaching of the Scriptures. In closing Mr. Morris made and earnest appeal for all to become consecrated and to devote more of their time to the service of the Lord in uplifting suffering humanity.

Before the meeting closed several persons present offered brief testimonies and prayers.

Ate a Roast Pig.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer S. Garretson, of Vine street, entertained about twenty-five friends at their home last Friday. Sociability was the chief amusement and the guest thoroughly enjoyed the very fine roast pig supper which was served during the evening.

Agents for Fine Articles.

Woolston & Buckle, the reliable painters and decorators, have just secured the sole agency in this locality for Brooks' renovator and cleaner, which is a polishing fluid for cleaning pianos, hardwood floors, glass, bicycles, and all sorts of things. The other article for which this firm has secured the sole agency is "Nodusto," an article especially adapted to the cleaning of hardwood floors and in fact it can be used on most any kind of a floor. Both of the above articles are perfectly reliable and well worth the trying.

ANTI-CIGARETTE LEAGUE.

Boys Who Organize Against the Use of the Seductive Things.

A number of boys living on Division and Sixth streets and in the immediate vicinity, have organized what they choose to term an "Ananti-cigarette league." The dues are 20 cents monthly, and their main object now is to secure and furnish suitable club rooms. They have elected the following officers: President, Harry Scull; vice-president, Arthur Anderson; secretary, Fred Lynn; treasurer, Chas. Sebring.

The boys are determined to give up cigarette smoking, and they have joined together for this particular purpose. New members will be admitted from time to time, as the membership is not limited to any particular number.

Temperance Union Conference.

The eighth annual conference of the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, of New Jersey, will be held in the Auditorium, at Rahway, Thursday and Friday, February 11th, and 12th. There will be a large attendance of the members from the Plainfield Union. The programme arranged is an especially interesting one and treats of many important topics.

Purchased An Orange Grove.

Harry Campbell returned Friday from Florida where he has been visiting his orange grove. He purchased the grove next to his old one and will increase the scope of his business. His crop is in good condition and he is hoping for a favorable year.

DEATH OF AN OLD-TIMER

JOSIAH LAYTON SUCCUMBS TO A PARALYTIC STROKE.

Stricken While Asleep and Never Regained Consciousness—Well Known in This City and Once an Active Figure.

In the death of Josiah Layton, last Thursday about 7 o'clock, at the Van-Felt Home, Metuchen, another old and respected citizen of Plainfield has passed away. Death was the result of a stroke of paralysis, which came during Sunday night while he was asleep, and he never regained consciousness. John Layton, of Brooklyn, a brother, and Mrs. Theodore Allen, of Peapack, a sister was with him until the end. He was a member of the Crescent Avenue church and a faithful Christian. He was also a member of Gazelle Engine Company and the Exempt Firemen's Association.

Mr. Layton was well known in this vicinity and was always considered to be a valuable citizen. In his younger days he took the lead in all matters of a public interest, and especially at Fourth of July was this trait manifested, for he was always anxious that the natal day be given due prominence in this locality.

Whenever possible he was out doors and associating with his old friends. The fact that he was paralized made it impossible for him to get around much. Sometime ago it was thought best that he should be placed in a home where he could be constantly looked after, and it was decided that he should go to the VanFelt home, where he received the best of care. He passed away just as quietly as the last days of his life were spent. He was seventy-one years, four months and sixteen days old.

The Exempt Firemen's Association will have charge of the funeral services which will be held from the Crescent Avenue church tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock. Interment will be in the family plot in the North Plainfield cemetery.

COATLESS MAN CAUGHT.

WILLIAM PARSONS, THE ALLEGED COAL THIEF, ARRESTED AT LAST.

The Man Who Eluded Roundsman Flynn by Slipping Out of His Coat—Found Interfered and He Was Also Arrested.

On Friday evening Roundsman Flynn captured the overcoat of the midnight visitor on the coal cars, and Saturday evening that same officer caught the man that belonged inside the coat, William Parsons. If Parsons thought that he was safe when he bolted out of his overcoat and into the house he was mistaken, for Flynn is not the man to be shaken so easily.

Roundsman Flynn appeared before City Judge DeMeza Saturday and swore out a warrant for the arrest of William Parsons, who he stated was the trespasser on the cars and who was shoveling coal into a bag when he came by. The story of the officer's chase was told in the Press Saturday evening.

On Saturday evening Flynn and Special Officer Cash walked in the direction of Paradise Alley. It was raining and it was chilly and as Parsons did not have another overcoat, he stayed at home. The officers came to the door and rapped. Perhaps he recognized the step, at any rate Parsons left for the top floor suddenly. His friend, Joe Thomas, was there. When the officers came in and wanted Parsons, Thomas seriously objected and there was trouble. Thomas was finally subdued and remained under the eye of Cash while Flynn went after his acquaintance of the night before. He was found, at last, in his room on the second floor, where he had tried all kinds of concealment but they did not work. Flynn did not take him by the collar this time but secured a good grip on his prisoner and lead him down to join his overcoat at the rookery.

At the rookery Parsons remained, in company with his friend, Thomas, until last Sunday, when some of their friends came to their rescue and bailed them out.

Both of the dusky offenders were arraigned before the City Judge, this Monday, and their cases went over for later in the week as both men entered a plea of not guilty.

THE CENTRAL'S STATEMENT.

A Decrease of Nearly $500,000 In Its Net Earnings.

The report of the Central Railroad of New Jersey to the stockholders, for the year ended December 31st, shows gross earnings of $13,117,345, a decrease of $450,675; operating expenses increased $23,514, and net earnings decreased $475,187.

The charges to capital account for the year amounted to $658,705, representing disbursements for construction of new railroad sidings and connections and purchases of land and equipment, etc. The net results of the business for one year, including income from investments, after paying a 5 per cent. dividend, was a credit to profit and loss account of $271,416.

WANT TO SERVE UNCLE SAM

MEN ANXIOUS TO BE POSTMASTER

Westfield Republicans Looking a Long Way Ahead.

Although the term of Postmaster M. M. Scudder, of Westfield, does not expire until March, 1898, the citizens of that town are already agitating the question of who shall be his successor in office. Two candidates are already out soliciting signatures to their petitions. L. M. Whittaker, who was postmaster four years ago, wants the place again, and A. C. Fitch, who has been assistant postmaster eight years and now holds that position, is making a fight to be named as Mr. Scudder's successor.

Mr. Whittaker, or "Mosby," as his friends affectionately call him, is in the real estate and insurance business in Westfield, and is also president of the newly-organized Cooper Lamp Company, which has a factory in the town.

Mr. Fitch is a brother-in-law of Editor Pearsall, of the Westfield Standard. His eight years of service in the postoffice have given him a knowledge of the work that would make his administration a competent one.

The Westfield office is rated as a second-class one by the authorities. Its business declined somewhat under the administration of Mr. Whittaker, from 1890 to 1894, and in consequence it was reduced to a third-class office. Postmaster Scudder has succeeded, however, in restoring it to its former position. The amount of business transacted during the past two years has been so large that in November as appointment was sent from Washington to make an investigation with a view to awarding the town free mail delivery.

TWENTY YEARS A RECTOR.

Holy Cross Church to Celebrate the Second Decade of Rev. Murphy's Service.

There is a movement on foot among the congregation of the Church of the Holy Cross to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the installation of Rector T. Logan Murphy, which occurs on Sunday, the 14th inst.

It is proposed to have a special musical service and sermon on that day, which is to be succeeded by a reception and collation at the rectory on the following Wednesday evening. The committee, acting in concert with the ladies, are: Benjamin R. Westers, chairman; Col. Mason W. Tyler, ex-Mayor Wm. L. Saunders, Dr. J. M. Carman, Councilman Wm. A. Wedphal, Robert C. Miller, ex-Councilman Arthur Gallup and Horsley Barker.

FELL GOING UPSTAIRS.

Thomas D. Blair Hurt in the Princeton College Building.

Thomas D. Blair, of East Second street, who is now a sophomore in Princeton University, met with an accident last week that will confine him in that college town for some time. He was going up the stairs in East College and climbed the iron steps of that old building in a hurry. The steps were slippery with ice and snow and when about half-way up he slipped and fell. He struck the iron step and a deep cut in his chin and upper lip resulted. He was also bruised about the face which began to swell, leaving him a pitiable looking object. It will be some weeks before he recovers from the result of the accident, and meantime he remains in his room as much as possible.

HEIR DEPENDED ON SEX

A WILL WRITTEN IN ACCORDANCE WITH A STRANGE PROMISE.

Dr. Young Agreed to Bequeath a Portion to the Child of Louis E. Service if a Girl—It Was, and Will Now Contested.

A strange promise made fourteen years ago is soon to play a very important part in a will case in the Hunterdon County Orphan's court. It was made just before the birth of a child and the strange provision was based on that. If the child should be a girl, she was to receive the greater part of the fortune of the eccentric Dr. Henry Newton Young; if the offspring was a boy, then he was to receive nothing.

The promise was made by Dr. Young a few weeks prior to the birth of the child to Louis S. Service, the father, and now the many relatives of the deceased doctor, who received nothing by the provisions of the will, are contesting the will. Among them is Mrs. Anna B. Mulford, wife of the late L. B. Mulford, of this city.

Dr. Young was a strange character who lived in the vicinity of Flemington. He inherited from his father a wonderful set of diamonds, valued at many thousands of dollars, and then he collected all sorts of rare articles. His practice was a profitable one and he amassed a small fortune of his own which was carefully invested in stock of the First National Bank of Flemington and in mortgages. His household goods were of unusual value and he owned horses and carriages. Altogether, his fortune is estimated to amount to about $60,000.

He retired from active practice and about six years ago he went to live with his old friend, Louis S. Service, at the home of the latter in Rayville. It it alleged that his mind was unsound and that he did all sorts of strange things there. He had queer ideas in regard to various matters, it is said, but his alleged weakness never took any violent form. While he was living at the home of his old friend he made his will, which is the one now being contested, and the plaintiffs in the case claim that he was unduly influenced by the family and that his mind was unsound at the time.

By the will, he left the bulk of his fortune, over half of it, to Mary Ellen Service, the daughter in regard to whom the promise was made. The promise is referred to in the will and the bequest is said to be "in fulfillment of a promise made to Louis S. Service in July, 1873, some weeks previous to the birth of Mary Ellen Service and was equally binding had the anticipated birth been a boy or girl or both." The will was made on February 13th 1890. Asa Jones, of Flemington, was named as the executor of the will. The others remembered in the will were Mr. Service and his three sons, H. Sydam Young, a brother of the doctor living in Milton, and Henry Newton Young, a nephew residing in in Wilkesbarre, Pa. The famed diamonds which were looked upon as a family heirloom were given to Miss Service, who is now twenty-four years old. Dr. Young died last September.

A number of neices and nephews were not remembered at all, among whom was Mrs. Anna B. Mulford, and they have engaged Lawyer S. S. Swackhamer to represent them in the matter. Paul A. Queen and Asa Jones, of Flemington, were retained by the defendants in case.

The necessary papers were filed and the case will come before Judge Herr in the Orphan's court of Hunterdon county on March 4th, for a hearing.

A PINK TEA.

Delightful Affair Given by Mrs. J. M. Dryden at Her Home.

A delightful tea was given by Mrs. J. M. Dryden, of West Seventh street, Thursday afternoon, at her home in honor of her daughter, Miss Amie R. Dryden, who is going to leave Plainfield for a lengthy period this month. She was assisted in receiving the guests by Miss Amie R. Dryden, Mrs. R. W. Dryden, and Miss Marie Dryden. In the dining room the tea was poured by Mrs. F. G. Moore and Mrs. C. B. Emery, and were assisted by the Misses Ethel Green, Genviere Daniel and Fannie Dryden.

The prevailing colors were pink. The parlor and dining rooms were charmingly decorated with pink roses and smylax. After the tea, supper was served to the receiving party. There were about two hundred present during the afternoon.

Northerwood Boy a Winner.

The commercial law book offered by Professor A. A. Phelps, president of the Plainfield Business College, for the best grammer examination, was won by George J. Nielson, of Northerwood.

RAID ON COAL LIFTERS.

A BUNCH OF THEM ARRAIGNED BEFORE JUDGE DEMEZA.

A Lively Chase Was Led by Some of the Offenders in the Attempt to Escape the Police—They Were All Severely Punished

Paradise Alley had another visit from the police last evening, which resulted in two of her young men landing in the rookery. It was the continuation of the trouble in which William Parsons, the dusky resident of that alley, played such a prominent part.

Parsons was not alone when he visited the coal cars the other evening and was spied by Atting Roundsman Flynn. Flynn saw the other shadowy forms slink away in the darkness, but he confined his efforts in the direction of Parsons for the time being. After Parsons was captured and brought to the lockup, he was questioned regarding his companions on the cars. At first he did not remember anybody, but his memory was freshened up by the police, and the names of some of the other regular visitors to the coal cars were learned.

Parsons' pal was a white lad of about sixteen, by the name of James Stevens, alias "Dotey," of Paradise Alley, and a sister of the famous "Mollie" Stevens, who has played such an important part in the police court records of the past. Acting Roundsman Flynn found him wandering along Front street last evening, and soon the youthful offender was landed in the rookery to await trial.

Another of the train "jumpers" was John Bergen, of South Second street. He was arrested without resistance by Patrolman Vanderweg at his home last Tuesday and brought to the lockup, where he spent the night.

The liveliest chase was after John Benford, son of the well known "Maggie" Benford, whose name is also interwoven with the history of Paradise Alley on the police records. The police think that John has something wrong with his mind, as he has always acted in a peculiar manner. He has been arrested a number of times for riding on coal trains, but he does not seem to mind it in the slightest, and when ever he sees a policeman he salutes him by holding his hand in the neighborhood of his nose and wiggling his fingers.

Acting Roundsman Flynn and Patrolman Robinson went after John, last Tuesday at about eight o'clock. He was at home but when Robinson went in the house and asked to see him, the lad fled up stairs without delay. The officer followed. Then came a crash and Benford, window sash and all, sailed out of the second story window and struck the ground with a thud. Benford was up and away in a moment but he had forgotten the location of the clothes line. He ran and Flynn, who had been waiting outside, ran after him. Then Benford found the clothes line. It caught him under the chin as he was running and he swung into the air to drop in another moment on the turf. It was something of a surprise for Benford and he lay still for a moment. That moment was too long for him and he found the officer in possession when he recovered his wind sufficiently to get up. He was locked up for the night.

This Tuesday, all three were arraigned before City Judge DeMeza and all pleaded guilty to the charge of trespassing on the property of the railroad.

Benford was sent to the county jail for forty days despite the ravings of his mother who filled the entire way with her screams about her poor boy. Bergen was given his choice between $5 fine or 20 days in jail. Stevens was sentenced to 20 days in jail, unless he could pay the necessary $8 fine.

A Runaway at Noon.

Frank Link's team of brown horses ran away on Second street, soon after noon to-day. They crossed Park avenue all right but by a sudden turn the wagon was drawn on the sidewalk alongside of Marsh, Ayers & Co's store, where the wagon run on the sidewalk and nearly overturned. It soon righted itself, however, and the team ran on to a point near Richmond street where they almost stopped of their own account.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by druggists, price 75c. per bottle. MINDFUL OF OLD TIMES.

ENTERTAINMENT THAT WENT BACK TO THE COLONIAL PERIOD.

Held in Crescent Avenue Church Monday Night by the King's Daughters—Conceived From Old Fashioned Story, "Cranford."

Old fashioned, indeed, were the settings for the illustrated readings from that very old fashioned story of Mrs. Gaskell's, "Cranford." It was something novel in the entertainment line and was conveyed by the members of the Charity Circle of Kings' Daughters. This new form of entertainment was given in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, Monday evening, before a very appreciative audience and everybody enjoyed it, judging from their continued and hearty applause.

The platform in the front of the room was arranged as a stage with curtain, footlights, and all the necessary adjuncts. The scene was that of an old fashioned room, with antique furniture sitting about the walls, here and there a picture of the same style hung on the back of the stage, while all the decorations, including the candles, which lighted the scene, were of "ye olden times." The costumes were antique and it was hard to recognize the familiar faces in their strange old fashioned garb.

The selections from the book were read by Mrs. Robert Lowry to illustrate the different important situations in the story, the tableaux were shown. The characters in the tableaux were as follow:—"Miss Jenkins," Miss Wood; "Miss Matty," Mrs. W. C. Kinney; "Miss Brown," Mrs. D. M. VanVliet; "Miss Jessie," Mrs. C. E. Brook; "Captain Brown," Charles F. Abbott; "I. Mary Smith," Miss Marjorie Coe: "Miss Pole," Mrs. George Clay; "The little charity maid," Miss Durand; "Martha, the maid," Miss M. E. Tracy; "Peter. Miss Matty's long lost brother," Fred H. Andrews; "Major Gidden," Samuel F. Kimball; "Mrs. Hoggins," Miss Ginna; "The guest," Miss Vreeland; "Hon. Mrs. Jamison," Miss Louise K. Green.

The tableaux were twenty in number. The titles were "Making tea, bread and sponge cake;" "Could help her dimples;" "As soon as the first knock came;" "I being the unlucky fourth;" "Appearing to be so;" "Defile the purity of the carpet;" "How She trembled all over;" "Fixed on the ground;" "Will you call me Matilda;" "As she stood open mouthed, listening to us both;" "While she was bending them round;" "Let out with double ralliance;" "On your hospitality, Miss Matty;" "Ashamed to own it;" "I reading aloud from the St. Chronicle;" "Every hour in the day;" "Convience of the attitude," "You see if I don't;" final group.

They were all well given and the the scene in which the characters were hunting about the house at night for burglars called forth much laughter. In the final scene, the long lost brother stepped to the front and announced that Miss Matty would be glad to entertain all the audience on the floor below and give them a cup of tea. Everybody smiled an acceptance and the curtain was drawn.

Soon the church parlors were alive with people and the rest of the evening passed very quickly. One of the attractions was a candy table and here some of the characters from "Cranford" waited on the crowd of customers, while over in another corner coffee and tea were served. An informal sociable was held and everybody pronounced the entertainment a great success.

The committee in charge of this delightful affair consisted of Miss Wood, Miss Hunter, Mrs. W. C. Kinney, Mrs. D. M. VanVleit and Miss Tracy.

LOCAL L. A. W. COUNCIL NAMED.

Charles C. Lister Will Continue to Act in That Capacity.

Chief Consul C. Frank Kireker has begun the appointment of the local consuls for the League of American Wheelmen through the state. As the representative of the L. A. W. in this city, he has appointed Charles C. Lister, captain of the Crescent Wheelmen, to that office. Mr. Lister held that office last year. There are comparatively few of Plainfield's cyclists who have not identified themselves with the League, and those who have not, may learn something of that great movement from Mr. Lister. Application blanks may be obtained from him or from this office.

It must not, supposed that Columbus was the only one to hold a right notion of the earth's shape; it was only that he alone, having faith in his own ideas, had courage and perseverance to go ahead and prove himself right. APPEAL CASES LAID OVER.

After Court Had Adjourned the Interested Ones Appeared.

The appeal cases came before Judge McCormick in the Union County Circuit Court at Elizabeth, Tuesday, but none of them were tried. Two cases were reported settled and Lawyer Fred C. Marsh appeared for one of his Elizabeth clients and as the other side did not appear, the appeal was dismissed. In the other cases on the calendar the interested parties of both sides were absent and the cases were laid over indefinitely. After the list had been read and the court declared adjourned for the day, the interested ones in the appeal case of Horatio Johnston against Mrs. Harriet Markham, both of this city, appeared. The case was originally tried in the court of Justice Nash and has been already laid over one term of court. It is probable that these cases will all be laid over until the next term of court.

Dr. Vincent's Lecture.

Those who have been able to attend the lectures which Leon H. Vincent has been delivering in the Y. M. C. A. Hall this winter have been greatly pleased with what they have heard. Mr. Vincent has always been an attractive speaker and this year he shows himself at even better advantage than in previous years. He made a special study of Charles Dickens and his lecture on that great English author has been looked upon as one of the best of his lectures. That lecture will be delivered in the Y. M. C. A. Hall tomorrow afternoon, beginning at 4 o'clock, as the last of the series of lectures which he has delivered there under the auspices of the Daughters of the Cross.

A few months ago, Mr. Byron Every, of Woodstock, Mich., was badly afflicted with rheumatism. His right leg was swollen the full length, causing him great suffering. He was advised to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first bottle of it helped him considerably and the second bottle effected a cure. The 25 and 50 cent sizes are for sale by T. S Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

COLD IN HEAD

WILLOW GROVE.

The eighth anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society was held last Sunday evening in the chapel, and it was a very pleasant event. Miss Lambert, the president of the society, was in charge and she announced the various numbers on the programme. The meeting opened with devotional exercises, after which the report of the secretary was presented. It showed that since the organization eighteen active and four associate members have united with the church. The report of the secretary of the Junior Society showed that there had been an increase of ten during the past year. Addresses, were then made by A. N. Pierson and M. C. Swezy, after which two vocal solos were given by Mr. Randolph. The attendance at the services was large and everyone agreed that the exercises were pleasant and helpful.

An entertainment will be given in the chapel next Monday evening February 15th. A very interesting programme has been arranged, and it will consist of selections by the Banjo and Mandolin Club, of Westfield, recitations by Carle Whitehead, vocal selections by Messrs. Harrison, and a dialogue of the thirteen nations. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. A small admission fee will be charged and the proceeds will be devoted to the work of the chapel.

—Hot coffee will be served to all callers at Rockfellow's grocery store on Friday and Saturday.

—A chorus choir has been started at the Monroe Avenue church to take charge of the music during the absence of Walter McGee.

—The New York University will close for Lincoln's Birthday, Friday, and the students of that institution will be given a vacation.

—Martha Washington Council, No. 23, D. of A., will give an entertainment and sociable on the evening of Washington's Birthday in Skandia Hall.

—The rumor to the effect that William Sharkey, the blacksmith, of Lincoln place, is to erect a brick building on the property where his shop now stands, is not true. He has not purchased the property.

For Your Protection.

Catarrh "cures" in liquid form to be taken internally, usually contain Mercury or Iodide of Potassa, or both, which are injurious if too long taken. Catarrh is a local, not a blood disease, caused by cold and damp weather. It starts in the nasal passages. Cold in the head, if repeatedly neglected, results in catarrh. Ely's Cream Balm is the acknowledged cure for these troubles and contains no mercury nor any injurious drug.

HELD FOR GRAND JURY

SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE AGAINST ALLEGED ASSAILANTS.

The Complaint of George Becker Aired Before Justice Newcorn Tuesday—Hobbie and Simon Held in $150 Bail.

Something happened last Saturday evening on Woodland avenue, but exactly what it is impossible to tell. The statements of George Becker on one side and Willie Hobbie and George Simon on the other are so contradictory that the Grand Jury will have to decide the matter. Such at least seemed to be the view of Justice Newcorn Tuesday afternoon. Hobbie and Simon were brought before him on the charge of assault and battery and after hearing the story of their accusers, Mr. and Mrs. Becker, he held them for the Grand Jury, as examination was waived by their counsel, Craig A. Marsh.

The hearing took place Tuesday afternoon and evening in the office of Justice Newcorn. The story as told by the foreign couple was substantially the same as told in the Press Monday, except that Becker declared that he was in the barn just before the alleged assault was committed and was attracted to the front of the house by the barking of his dog, which was tied in the yard. After the assault on the front piazza, Becker said he ran to the back door with the two following and that he was again assaulted, one of his assailants using a broom handle. It was in the last assault that he claims to have received the cuts on the back of his hand. He says that he was attempting to get in the kitchen door.

Becker was represented in the matter by Ex-Councilman Walter L. Hetfield. The clothes he wore on that occasion were produced as testimony and Becker exhibited the wounds that he claims to have received during the fracas.

The cross-examination of Becker by Mr. Marsh was very close and the foreigner was nearly crazy with the numerous questions that he was compelled to answer. He had some trouble in understanding all the questions and a lively debate followed between the two lawyers as to whether Becker understood the real meaning of the questions in some of which he got hopelessly entangled.

A new fact came out in the examination. Becker said that Hobbie drew a revolver but, after displaying it, put it back in his pocket.

Becker was treated by Dr. Hedges, and Becker admitted that the doctor did nothing for the wound. Becker claimed that his chest was affected by the beating he had received and that he had been suffering much during the last three days.

Several witnesses were sworn who had heard the noise of the fracas but, on account of the darkness, could see nothing. The testimony only confirmed the fact that there had been a racket of some kind but the circumstances were not to be learned.

After a hearing that lasted two hours, Mr. Marsh waived examination for his two clients, and they were held in $150 bail each to appear before the Grand Jury. The bail was secured at once and the prisoners were released.

DOMINEERING OLIGARCHY.

Prof. A. A. Phelps Thus Describes the Liquor Traffic.

Prof. A. A. Phelps delivered a temperance address on "The Crime of Crimes" before the W. C. T. U. last Tuesday. Among the remarks he made was the following:

"It is a domineering oligarchy. Here is a case when a million or less engaged in the liquor business exert a controlling influence over sixty-five million people. This insolent oligarchy sits almost supreme in our National Congress and walks our legislative halls with a swing of triumph. It bribes legislators, bulldozes officers, handicaps editors, muzzles ministers, frightens churches and manages to have its own baleful way in almost everything. This traffic in human depravity is bad all over, bad all through and bad all the time. It ought to die, and be buried beyond the hope of a resurrection. Who will help dig its grave?"

Plans for the New Chapel.

The plans for the new Baptist Mission Chapel on East Third street are being prepared by Architect Charles Smith of Grove street and contemplate a very pretty and practical structure. Brady is drawing the legal papers necessary to secure incorporation of the new chapel under the Religious Society Act, and five trustees are to be elected on Thursday evening of this week. During the present revival the need of more room is felt very much and the new building is to be pushed as rapidly as possible.

Mrs. J. P. Laire, of East Fifth street, has been ill at her home for several days.

A HOME FOR CITY POOR

BROWN PROPERTY SELECTED BY COUNCILMANIC ALMS COMMITTEE.

The Council Will be Asked to Appropriate a Sum to Put the Property in Condition For Use by the City.

The alms committee of the City Council held a meeting last Tuesday for the purpose of discussing ways and means for the establishment of an alms house. It was decided that the committee would ask the Council at its next meeting for an appropriation to take the Brown house at the corner of Rock avenue and West Front street, and to at once proceed to place the house in first-class condition suitable for the purpose for which it is intended. The committee has already asked for estimates for white iron bedsteads for the house and it is the intention to furnish each occupant of the house with a separate bed, and to have the home kept scrupulously clean. For the present no men will be taken unless accompanied by their wives, and no children will be admitted.

Overseer of the Poor Marx will locate at this house in a few days and that will be his headquarters. The house will be furnished with hot water or steam heat. Other things necessary will also be provided.

A NEW WATER COMPANY.

Organized to Supply Water From Artesian Wells.

A corporation known as the Watchung Water Company has been formed, with a capital of $50,000. The incorporators are Charles P. Sebring, W. W. Smalley, L. S. Cook, James B. Vredenburgh, Spencer Wert, Phillip N. Jackson and S. Z Dickson.

A plant is to be located at Greenbrook, and a supply of water will be procured from artesian wells. Application has been made to the Township Committee of Piscataway to locate mains through several of the highways. The company intends to supply Dunellen, New Market, Lincoln and Beechwood Heights with water, and incidentally the farmers along the lines.

The names of the incorporators of the Watchung Company are a guarantee of the capital behind the scheme.

Hank Frisbie's Chicken.

There is going to be a big time at the Mt. Zion A. M. E. Church, on Thursday evening, when a mock trial will be held by the members of the congregation. The chief justice in the trial will be William Grobes, with Grant Cannon and George Anderson as his associates. The clerk of the court is to be Miss Bertha Grobes.

The case is to be an exciting one. One of Hank Frisbie's hens is said to have escaped from its roost and wandered into the roost of Charles Ward, the porter at the Hotel Grenada. Frisbie is now suing to recover his property, while Ward claims that the hen in question is not a hen at all. He will also try to prove that Frisbie is color blind, and can't tell a buff cochin from a black Leghorn. Frisbie is to represented in this wonderful trial by Lemuel Perry and H. A. Freeman, while the attorneys for Ward are Charles Henry and Alfred White.

Going to the Inauguration Free.

Dr. C. B. Stelle, formerly a dentist in this city, but who is now located at 314 West 56th street, New York, was one of the winners in the Presidental guessing contest of the Evening Telegram. The contest was to guess correctly the popular majority of the winning candidate. The majority was 597,405 and Dr. Stelle was twenty-third in order. He guessed 597,301. The winner of the contest was only eight votes out of the way. As a reward for his guess, Dr. Stelle will be sent to the inauguration at Washington free of all expense to himself. The winner will be sent on a trip around the world.

Lecture Seats by Wholesale.

Great blocks of seats have been marked off for the Peary lecture in Music Hall Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, and it behooves those who would hear the great explorer to take time by the forelock and his themselves to Armstrong's pharmacy as soon as possible, else it may be too late. From present appearances there will not be an empty seat in Music Hall, and it may be that Chief Doane may have to relax his usual vigorous rule and allow standing room to be sold.

About a Worthy Work.

On Wednesday evening, March 3d, it is expected that the National Superintendent of Soldier and Sailor Work of the W. C. T. U. will be in this city and make an address before the members of the Grand Army of the Republic. If such a meeting should be held it is quite likely that a programme will be arranged for the occasion to be followed by a supper.

ACT OF TRUTH SPEAKING

PROGRESSIVE WOMEN DISCUSS WHAT MAKES IT DIFFICULT.

Idea Brought Out That There is a Great Deal of Difficulty to Convey Thought in One's Mind—Various Kinds of Lies Told

The members of the Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women met Tuesday afternoon and discussed the subject of "Truth Speaking: What Makes it Difficult?" The president, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, presided and led the discussion of the subject in its various forms.

The idea was brought out that there is a great deal of difficulty in conveying the exact thought in one's mind, and that the nicer shades of truth speaking were liable to be misunderstood. Regarding carelessness and exaggeration, it was thought that these annoying things often arise from inattention, and from the fact that a person is not able to report a thing precisely as they hear it. It was not thought that the thing was done intentionally, however.

There seemed to be a prevailing idea that as a rule servant girls have a faculty of being evasive when asked why they left their last place, although it was stated that there were exceptions to the rule. One woman said that she had at different times employed three Catholic girls and that she had found them to be exceedingly conscientious and truthful.

Under the head of prejudice many good points were made. It was considered difficult to tell a person about their weaknesses, but self-love was thought to be a good thing to help one out in such a case.

Cowardice was held to be one of the strongest motives to tell black lies, and flattery was thought to be one form of untruth which comes from a desire to please. The vivid imagination of children and older people was discussed quite freely on the part of all present, and no one thought that a child should be punished for that trait.

The balance of the meeting was devoted to the discussing of the question as to whether a lie is justifiable. Some held that it was not while others thought there were times when such a thing was permissable. One woman expressed her ideas by saying that she did not think that a falsehood was a lie. The former she considered to be a strained untruth, while the latter was the same thing with evil intent added. The question was a lively one and every one present had something to say regarding it.

Engagement Announced.

The announcement of the marriage of Miss Anggie Feytel, formerly of this city but now of Newark, and Carl Johnson, also of Newark, is made. The wedding will take place in June at the home of the bride. They will reside at Roseville.

ELIZABETH PRIDE HUMBLED

EASILY DEFEATED AT BASKET-BALL.

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. Team Won By a Score of 17 to 6.

The pride of Elizabeth, the athletes of the Elizabeth Athletic Club, came to Plainfield and tried to play basket ball, last Tuesday, against the team from the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. The Elizabeth boys were not in the game at all, the Plainfield team winning by a score of 17 to 6. The Elizabeth players showed much promise for the future, but their aim for the goals was unusually poor and they were outclassed by the more experienced team from this city. The score of the game at the end of the first half was 13 to 3. The Plainfield team consisted of E. Moraller, W. Long, G. P. Smith, F. E. Richards and M. Moraller.

While the basket ball game was being played, the bowlers of the Y. M. C. A. succeeded in defeating the team from the Scott Press Works in two games. The association boys won the first game 648 to 647, and the second game 693 to 567. The winning team was composed of M. Sutphen, Rittenhouse, Schloss, Bristol, C. Sutphen. The team from Scott's was composed of Wilson, McLean, Frey, Bittle and Sutphen.

"Caste" for the Hospital.

Attention is called to the advertisement in this issue of the play of "Caste," which will be produced at Music Hall, Saturday evening, February 27, for the benefit of Muhlenberg Hospital. This is a great play given for a good purpose, and it offers the people of Plainfield an opportunity to contribute their mite to this worthy institution, receiving a rich evening's entertainment in return. The same persons will take part who surprised everybody last December at the Casino. So well was the play performed that there was a general request that it be repeated in a larger hall at popular prices.

Wyatt Barnes, of Norwood avenue, has been confined to his home with the measles.

GROWTH OF EDUCATION

DR. RIGGS TRACES THE ADVANCEMENT OF INTELLIGENCE.

He Deprecates the Use of the Term "Dark Ages"—Properly Speaking Europe Had No Such Age—His Most Salient Points.

"Education, the Universities, and the Intellectual Uprising" was the subject of the lecture delivered in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Tuesday, by Dr. James F. Riggs. This lecture was the last in the series dealing with "Vital Forces in Modern History," and was unusually well attended, it being on an especially interesting subject.

Dr. Riggs began his lecture by speaking against the use of the term "Dark Ages." Properly speaking Europe never had a dark age. There were always religious workers and philosophical and scientific thinkers here and there. It is wrong to suppose that there was no education in ancient times. Schools and books existed, tablets for writing and for mathematical computations, and there was a regular book trade. But the discoveries of the period which followed the Crusades made a vast difference in all these matters.

Intellectual advance is largely the result of pressure exerted by individuals. Men of exceptional mental power come in groups from time to time, along the line of the centuries. The ninth century was rich in men of that sort. Then, after a short interval of comparative barrenness, there came the wonderful movement known in a general way as Scholasticism.

A vernacular literature began to grow up to take the place of Latin. The Arabs in Spain also exerted a strong influence on the learning of Europe. A strong impulse was likewise given to the revival of learning the occupation of Constantinople by the Ottoman Turks, in consequence of which learned Greeks were scattered over Europe, and found work in many universities. From the thirteenth century to the eighteenth, universities were founded all over Europe. The figures given are sufficient to indicate a prodigious intellectual awakening. One great teacher arose after another, and each added something of his own, till the times were ripe for the true and cordial adoption of the Inductive Philosophy. Francis Bacon, who was born 1561, in London, gave form and consistency to the inductive, method making it the supreme law of research in modern thought.

We honor the good workman of today, who make a wise use of dictionaries, lexicons and treatises, but we delight to do homage to the giants of mental power, who, toiling patiently, created the libraries and the wonderful apparatus with which the miracles of modern genuis have been brought to pass.

COCK FIGHTERS IN A ROW.

DISPUTED FAIRNESS OF A BOUT.

Broken Noses and Black Eyes Were the Result.

There was a cocking main out on Greenbrook road, Saturday evening, and it finally broke up for unexpected reasons. The usual crowd of sports from this city and the borough turned out to see the fun and gathered at the place of meeting just across the borough line. It was rather chilly but the enthusiastic ones didn't mind the cold or the snow. The birds were well selected and the prospects of some exciting bouts were good. After the sport had begun, a dispute arose among several of the spectators regarding the fairness of a certain bout. Words were thrown about the pit in a lively manner and then the combatants, tiring of such missiles, renewed the scrap with canes and fists. Everybody had a hand in the fracas and the main came to a sudden and unexpected end.

One man in the party had the bridge of his nose seriously disfigured by a blow from a cane, while several other of the combatants encountered the fist of somebody else in the neighborhood of their eyes. Other reminders were given and the fracas ended and the participants departed, vowing vengence.

Played at Whist.

The ladies whist club held its last meeting for the season Tuesday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. Arthur Baynon, on La Grande avenue. The first prize was won by Mrs. Kieltzicke. The second prize was won by Mrs. Clay. Mrs. Stuart Patterson was the winner of the third prize.

A Growing Order.

At the meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., it is expected that the membership will be over two hundred, thus making it one of the largest Councils in the State. It is likely that exercises appropriate to the occasion will be held.

FRAZEE GOT THROUGH.

THE EXPRESSMAN OUTWITTED THE RAILROAD DETECTIVES.

An Attempt Made to Stop Him From Getting on a Train With Bundles Had With Brother's Assistance He Eluded Them.

The war between the Jersey Central railroad detectives and the package expressmen still continues. The commuters and other passengers who were waiting at the North avenue station Wednesday for the 8:30 express had a chance to see something of the conflict. Whitney Frazee, the well-known package expressman, appeared a few minutes before the 8:30 train was due with his pockets bulging out in a significant manner. He smiled at his friends and prepared for battle. With several packages under his arm he started for the train as it pulled into the station. Detective Blackford had been standing in the background with an express company spotter, and the two started for Frazee. The crowd of commuters was hurrying for the express when the fracas began.

As Frazee advanced toward the cars Blackford and his companion executed a flank movement and loomed up between Frazee and the waiting train. There was a collision between the shoulders of Blackford and the package expressman. Frazee stopped and the crowd began to manifest itself by voice.

Frazee, encouraged by the shouts of his friends, tried again, but Blackford blocked him in true football style.

Conductor Dodwell of the express waved his hand to the engineer and the train began to move. For the third time, Blackford was in the path and Frazee finally gave up the attempt. The detectives smiled, the crowd yelled, and Frazee withdrew from the scene of action.

Another local train follows at 8:33, and the knowing ones watched for further developments. The detectives kept their eyes on the expressman and waited for him to renew the fight.

The local train came to the station and stopped and at the same time Frazee appeared at the center entrance to the platform. He was accompanied by his brother, George Frazee, from whose pockets stuck bicycle tires and sundry other articles. Whitney was in fighting trim and headed for the train. It was the passages and not the mail that the detectives were after, and they started for the brother. George Frazee put down his shoulder and so did Blackford and they came together like two of Frazee's game roosters. The most excited of the on-lookers howled with delight. The other detective was on hand and he interposed his shoulder in the path of the wiggling man.

Whitney Frazee had boarded the train successfully, but he now skipped off to go to the rescue of his brother. The detectives were so busy playing football with the brother that they saw not the stealthy approach of the messenger. With a dive that would have done credit to an acrobat he made a plunge into the group of struggling forms and emerged waving a tire triumphantly over his head. Back he danced to the train waving the tire tauntingly at the detectives. They stood a moment as if uncertain which man to pursue. That moment was all that George wanted and he made a break for the train where his brother was waiting on the steps. The train started to pull out. Blackford again interposed his body in the way of the hurrying man. The other detective came to his assistance.

Frazee had made up his mind to go, and go he did. The crowd ran to see the fun but still the detectives blocked. George and the two detectives finally came to a standstill in front of the platform of the car where Whit was waiting. Out of the bunch shot George's short arms with the packages clasped firmly in his hands. Whit grabbed at them and so did the detectives. There was a brief tug-of-war and then Whit was victorious and the train pulled slowly out of the station with the excited messenger on his knees on the platform with the little finger of one hand on his nose and the fingers wiggling farewell to the detectives. The crowd fairly howled with delight and the detectives departed.

It is understood that the Frazee's have decided not to let the matter rest this time. Whitney Frazee claims that the spotter has been following him all over the city and dodging his steps wherever he goes. George Frazee says that he was going to Elizabeth yesterday when he was and Blackford prevented him. He had bought a ticket and was all prepared, when, he says, Whitney asked him to carry a few of the packages for him. The Frazees are planning to take the matter into the local courts and have the detective and the spotter arrested for interfering with a passenger at the station. They also expect to make complaint against the spotter for following Frazee.

RED MEN AND MR. NEWELL

STATEMENT MADE BY DEPUTY GREAT SACHEM NEWCORN.

Report of What Was Said When a Committee Called on Rev. Mr. Newell and Asked Him for an Explanation.

After a long silence with apparently no interest, the matter regarding the recent alleged remarks of Rev. G. Kennedy Newell about the burial services of certain lodges has again come to light, and this time in the way of an explanation on the part of the Red Men, whose auxiliary, Degree of Pochobontas, the remarks seemed to be directed at. During the interim the matter has been under investigation by a committee appointed for that purpose, and after due deliberation they have decided to make known the result of their work through their Deputy Great Sachem, Wm. Newcorn.

Soon after the matter became known through the newspapers, the committee very courteously asked Mr. Newell for a copy of the notice he read and the remarks he uttered at Hope chapel, before giving the order's versions on the subject. Mr. Newell disclaimed all responsibility for the published accounts and he refused to grant the request. The entire correspondence was laid before the committee on Friday evening, February 5th, and acting on the advice of Mr. Newcorn, decided to make another effort to see if Mr. Newell would state his position in the matter. The committee waited on the latter, Monday evening, February 8th, at Hope chapel, and they were accorded the interview asked for. At first Mr. Newell took the same stand as he did in his original letters and replied so to that effect. He said that he had no objections to discloss individually what he had said or intended, but did not desire to state his position to representatives of any organization. His attention was called to the fact that he was not dealing with individuals but with an organization, which was really the only one injured by his remarks, and that he was accountable to them. Mr. Newell then stated his position by saying that he took exception to the use of the word "Kishe Manitou" in the form of service conducted by the organization. He objected to the use of any word in calling upon the Deity. He was met with the reply that every nationality calls on God in their own language and that it is not disrespectful or heathenish. Mr. Newell thought that the church service was sufficient and he did not believe in the service of societies.

The question concerning the dove as used by the lodge was then recalled, and Mr. Newell said that he did not object to that so much, and when he was asked concerning the report that he had said that a mother whose son was buried had become hysterical because the dove descended instead of rising, he replied that if he did make that remark he would apologize. The committee demanded no apology from Mr. Newell, desiring to let the public judge for themselves as to who was in the right. Continuing Mr. Newcorn said:

"The Improved Order of Red Men is a strictly American order, and its ritualistic work is founded after the customs and habits of the aborigines, and more especially the six great nations. Its objects are to care for the sick orphans and widows, and to practice charity. Its work being derived from the Indians, the use of a great many Indian names are employed, among which is Kishe Manitou, the word taken exception to by Mr. Newell. The order is non-sectarian, and one of the qualifications for membership is that a person shall declare that there is a Supreme being, the Creator of the Universe.

The ceremonies are grand and impressive, and each meeting is opened and closed with prayer. At present the membership of the order, male and female, is 200,000, representing people in every walk in life, and possessing intelligence. During the past year $700,000 was spent for the relief of its members and the burial of the dead. When members of the order use the words Kishe Manito it only means one thing and that is the Supreme Being, and in its use the members do not consider that they are any more disrespectful than the French or Germans in calling upon God in their own language. If Mr. Newell's idea is carried out people would have to go back to the use of the original Old Testament word "Adonay," which means God, and then they would not be using an English work.

"The order teaches that faith is the foundation of all spiritual belief, and that it is not the language, but what is felt and done that constitutes the devotion, showing a last token of re-

WAS HOME AT LIFE'S END

DEATH OF FRED S. DUNN OCCURED AT NOONTIDE THURSDAY

Could Not Withstand the Ravages of Consumption Though He Sought Recuperation in the Balmy Air From the Pacific.

It was a sorrowful contrast at noon Thursday, as the sun passed over the meridian and cast rays of brightness down on this world, that a life-light should have been extinguished at an age when it is counted to be in its prime, but with all its sadness to relatives and friends there was one particularly consoling line in the pallor of Death, and that was in the simple thought that there is no place like home to a dying man.

Three years ago the ravages of consumption began to evidence themselves in the health of Fred. S. Dunn. The rigor of the eastern weather with its varying changes was not conducive to longevity with the malady, and on the advice of physicians Mr. Dunn went to the Pacific shore that he might recuperate his broken health in the mild semi-tropical weather of that section Though he banished the thought of the inevitable—that must come to all in the end and that seemed to be grasping at him while he was yet in his youth—from his mind, it was no use, and gradually he realized that he could not long survive the inroads of the lung disease. It was not until he fully realized that all hope for recovery was gone that he forsook the country where he was living—3,000 miles from the scenes of the best and happiest part of his life, from old associations, from dear friends—from home.

It was on Saturday, January 30th, that he left the Pacific slope for what he called home—emaciated and health broken, but with the courage of a Spartan that he might withstand the fatigue of a six days' tiding journey—over rail and he among old associations in his last days. Though the trip was a trying one he made it, and in the quiet and satisfied demeanor of the week since he arrived he had shown unmistaka le pleasure.

Since his arrival here he has been staying with Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Dunn, 210 West Fourth street, his late wife's parents, where every comfort was accorded him.

It was not until Thursday that his condition was considered so serious, from a physician's view, he failed rapidly and at 12:08, noon, the end came. In his dying hours he was surrounded by W. F. Dunn, his brother, who did everything he could to make him easy, Mrs E. T. Dunn and other relatives. He was conscious up to almost the last moment and had made every arrangement for the disposition of his effects after death.

Mr. Dunn was nearly 31 years of age, and an exemplary young man in every respect. He was a member of the Christ Reformed church, and his devotion and faith to the teachings of the Bible as death neared, is a great consolation to his relatives. To his family he was tenderly affectionate, and to his friends always affable and obliging.

He was born on East Second street in this city and has lived here the greatest part of his life.

PASSED THE FOUR SCORE MARK.

Robert B. Dunham Dies in His Eighty-Second Year.

The death of Robert B. Dunham, one of the oldest residents of this city, occurred Thursday at his home, 323 East Fifth street, after a brief illness with grip. Though Mr. Dunham was in his eighty-second year he was a man who retained his health remarkably well and up till last Tuesday was able to get around the city with considerable activity. Tuesday, he was taken with an attack of the grip and seemed unable to withstand its ravages. Last night at 11 o'clock he had a sudden sinking spell from which he did not recover.

Mr. Dunham was born in New York and for many years was a prosperous farmer near Millington. Twelve years ago he retired from active work and has since resided in this city. He was a member of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. He leaves a widow, three sons and two daughters. The sons are Oscar W., of this city, Charles R., of Millington, and Daniel H., president of the Firemen's Insurance Company, of Newark. The two daughters are unmarried and reside with their father.

No Word From Her Sister.

Miss Mamie Reniger, of Watchung avenue, has as yet received no word from her sister, Miss Anna Reniger, who started for Chicago a few weeks ago, and she does not know whether she arrived safely or not. She has become quite anxious regarding her sister, for she has not even received any word from the relatives with whom her sister was going to visit, in response to a letter written by her sometime ago.

Both Parents Consented.

In justice to Mr. and Mrs. E. P. T. Smith, who were recently married, it is stated that the consent of the parents on both sides was given to their marriage. It was Mr. and Mrs. Baglin that arrived too late to witness the ceremony, and not the bride's parent's, as stated.

COLLUCCO HAD NO RIGHT TO SELL BEER UNLESS ON AN ORDER.

After Many Adjournments the Case Was Tried Before Judge DeMeza Yesterday and a Decision of Guilty Was Rendered

Plainfield is a good city as a general thing, but one of the greatest evils with which the police have to contend is the illegal selling of beer and liquors. Within the past two years quite a number of offenders have been convicted for selling "Jersey lightning" or something else of the same order without a license. After many adjournments, another of these cases came before the City Judge Thursday afternoon, and after a long trial the accused was convicted on one charge, and then on advise of counsel pleaded guilty to another charge of the same nature.

The prisoner was Carminino Colluccio, a wholesale liquor dealer of Westfield, and he was charged with coming here in his delivery wagon and selling a dozen pint bottles of lager beer to Special Officer Jeremiah Cash without the same being ordered.

Colucco has a license whereby he can deliver beer ordered from him, but he can not sell the same without a previous order. He has quite a trade among some of the Italians of this city and all the surrounding towns Colucco's place is in Westfield.

According to the charge, he came to this city on September 18th, and when asked by Cash if he had any beer, his reply was that he had and he immediately struck a bargain with the officer and sold him a dozen bottles for thirty-nine cents. The alleged offense was reported to Chief Grant, and in December the warrant was issued in the case. Colucco was arrested and held in his own recognizance to appear for trial which he did yesterday. The city was represented in the case by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, while Abe J. David, from the office of Fred C. Marsh, of Elizabeth, was the lawyer for the prisoner.

The trial was held in the city court room before City Judge DeMeza. Special Officer Cash was the first to take the stand and he produced the beer which he alleged that he had bought from Colluceo. He said that he stopped Colluceo's wagon at the corner of Woodland and Watchung avenues and bought the beer there. He was seen in the neighborhood for nearly two months trying to find Colucco, while the latter was selling beer that had not been ordered. He had been accompanied by Special Officer William Dagnall, whose story was the same as Cash's. Both produced memoranda that they had made on that day to remember the day of the offense. No vigorous cross questioning could change their testimony.

Mr. David then started the defence of his client. He claimed that his client had a perfect right to sell liquor that had been ordered, and produced the license. He also tried to prove an alibi for the liquor dealer, claiming that he was in Madison on that day.

To prove the alibi several of his Madison customers were brought into court, and all swore that they had seen Colluceo in Madison at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. None of them could give good reasons for remembering that date. A number of account books were also submitted as evidence, but there was something peculiar about all of them which was noted by the Corporation Counsel, and he declared that they had all been written for this occasion.

There was a rather amusing incident in the trial when Colluceo was put on the stand. His lawyer asked for an interpeter, as he declared that Colluceo could not speak English.

"Can you understand what I say?" he asked.

"No," said the liquor dealer in good English as he shook his head. An interpeter was finally allowed, however.

Colluceo claimed that he had never seen Cash before, while the latter testified that Colluceo had recognized and spoken to him at the station house after his arrest. Some of the testimony was rather contradictory.

After both the lawyers had summed up, the Judge pronounced the prisoner guilty of the charge.

A Tall Man in a Tall Building.

The first tenants who moved into offices in the handsome new St. Paul building at Park Row and Ann street, New York, R. F. R. Huntsman, of this city, and James J. Hundley, of the Jersey City Journal. Mr. Huntsman is manager of the New York office of the Newark Evening News, which is the largest afternoon newspaper in the United States selling for more than a penny, and far and away ahead of any paper in New Jersey. Mr. Huntsman and Mr. Hundley have a suite of offices on the sixth floor of the St. Paul building and, although the building is not yet completed, they are receiving advertisers with glad hands "just the same."

—Dora Kitchen, infant daughter of William and Jane Kitchen, died Thursday, at the parents home on Clinton avenue. The funeral was held Saturday.

DICKENS IN AMERICA.

PROF. VINCENT REFERS TO THE GREAT AUTHOR'S VISIT HERE.

While He Greatly Admired the United States He Was Distinguished With the Crowds That Constantly Followed Him.

There was a tinge of regret evidenced on the part of those who attended the last lecture given by Leon Vincent at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Thursday afternoon, for the studies into the life and character of prominent literary men and women have been a source of great pleasure to many who have availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing this talented speaker. The subject yesterday afternoon was "Dickens," and the masterly manner in which Mr. Vincent handled it was a rare treat. Those who were present, and who does not know something about this celebrated man of letters and any study of his works is enjoyable. Mr. Vincent gave a great many incidents related by Dickens in his works and the familiarity of the characters was an occasion for genuine pleasure on the part of all.

An amusing part of the lecture was that which referred to the first trip made by Dickens to this country. The great writer was at first pleased with the way things were conducted on this side, but his admiration was soon turned to a disgust, for he was unable to go anywhere unless he was sought after by a large crowd, and his attempts to seek quiet and rest were a complete failure. On his return to England he wrote his opinions concerning America and some of them were very pleasant while others were just the opposite. He thought that the American women were very beautiful, but he did not think that their beauty would last as long as that of the English women nor did he think that their figure was a striking.

The speaker said that Dickens was exceedingly popular with newspaper men and he had a great love for that kind of work. At one time he had charge of the reportorial work at the House of Parliament and was considered to be an expert in reporting the proceedings of that body.

There were many other things related about Dickens which increased the admiration of those present for the man and his works. When the speaker concluded his remarks he was heartily applauded by the audience, which is that at some near future time they will again have the opportunity of hearing him.

REVOKING A JUST EDICT

A FRENCH KING'S RESORT TO RELIGIOUS PREJUDICE TO REGAIN POWER.

Sought to Crush Out the Protestant Church by Compelling Adherence to the Church of Rome—Many Then Left the Country.

The audience that gathered in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church Tuesday night to hear Rev. James L. Riggs lecture on "The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes" was a cultured one and the speaker held the closest attention until the finish. He was introduced by Isaac L. Miller who made a few remarks appropriate to the occasion. A portion of Dr. Rigga' lecture was as follows:

"At the time of which our subject treats there was a strong literary movement in France and there was an intense thirst for books, because the people had no newspapers or other kind of literature to read, and for that reason John Calvin's Institute" was literally devoured by the people. This was an occasion for the advancement of Protestantism. In order that the King of that nation might regain his power his mistress suggested that an attempt be made to reform all the heritics, and a sort of "Board of Home Missons" was organized. This did not seem to please the King and he was in a state of anxiety.

"The edict was a guarantee that the Protestants might have the privilege of erecting churches and worship according to their own ideas. This edict was revoked and a price was paid for converts to the Roman church. Thousand of people were forced to join this church, and thus dishonor was brought upon France. It was the first grand mistake made by France, and it drove thousands out who would not be subjected to this order. On October 17th, 1685, everybody was forbidden to worship at any place except the Roman church. This drove nearly half million people out of the country who would not worship at the Roman church. The rapid progress of Protestantism was due to the move made by Louis XIV who cancelled the rights of the latter people, and the fact that no one State ought to be so strong as to absorb another became evident. Louis XIV was very angry to think that he had been checkmated by the far-seeing William, Prince of Orange, and he ordered his soldiers to destroy all property, and thus it was that so many places along the Rhine were burned and devastated. Although Protestants were driven out of France there has always been a church of that faith located there and it has been recognized.

A WATER SUPPLY SCHEME

MIDLAND WATER COMPANY TO HAVE A BIG PUMPING STATION

Contract Entered Into to Supply the Lehigh Valley Railroad With 250,000 Gallons a Day—Will Supply Metuchen.

A few days ago preliminary steps were taken in what will probably be one of the largest water plants in this State and the seeming quietude on the part of those interested has just come to light.

A corporation known as the Midland Water Company are the owners of the property at South Plainfield on which are located several well. These wells were driven some time ago and after a fair test were found to be ample in supply. But for some reason no public movement was made until recently, when the company appeared before the town committee of Piscataway township and asked for the privilege of laying water pipes through Metuchen. This meeting was held on Wednesday 10th when Frank Bergen, of Elizabeth, who is president of the water company, appeared before the committee and made known his request. In the meantime the matter had been referred to the counsel for the township and he approved the plan. Mr. Bergen was treated courteously and after a discussion of things in general the company was given the right to go ahead.

The plans of the company are to remove the old flax mill building at South Plainfield and in its place erect a modern and substantial pumping station suitably equipped with all the necessary machinery for carrying on an extensive business. From there they will lay water pipes to Metuchen. They have three routes to select from and it has not yet been decided which they will use. They have agreed to furnish the Lehigh Valley Railroad company at South Plainfield with 250,000 gallons of water every twenty-four hours, and from there they will run their pipes to Metuchen where they will furnish the people at that place with water.

As soon as possible the work of erecting the pumping station and laying the water pipes will be started. The water company have other plans which are not fully matured as yet, so nothing can be said regarding them.

Thomas Dowd has the contract for doing the work of laying the pipes and putting in the pumping station, and he also met with the committee last Wednesday for the purpose of getting the necessary details concerning the work.

COW WAS STARK MAD.

BITTEN BY A DOG AND FELL A VICTIM TO HYDROPHOBIA.

The Animal Raved and Swooned in a Most Terrifying Manner and Finally Had to be Shot to End Its Misery.

L. C. Wyckoff, 26 Howard street, lost a one-year-old heifer, yesterday, through the ravages of hydrophobia caused by a dog bite. The case is such a rare one that the attention of a number of people has been called to it. It was Wednesday that the heifer was in a field when a dog appeared on the scene and attacked and bit the animal. When Mr. Wyckoff went after the young cow at night he noticed that she was injured. He called in Dr. Linbarger who left some medicine. The latter thought that the animal would come around all right, but Mr. Wyckoff noticed that the heifer was acting strange and again he sent for the doctor. When the latter arrived and examined the animal he at once learned that she was attacked with hydrophobia, and he instructed the owner to stay away from her. From that time until it was found necessary to shoot the cow in order that she might be put out of misery, she raved and swooned until it was thought that there would be nothing left of her. At first she was fastened in a stall and securely locked in, but in spite of that could be done she broke through a heavy wooden partition. During this time she frothed at the mouth and also lost a great quantity of blood. Frequently these fits came on and the animal made sounds similar to the barking of a dog. The cow did not seem to tire any and it is hard to tell what might have happened had she not been killed by the owner.

A Daily Press reporter met Mr. Wyckoff last evening and in talking about the affair he said that he was going to hold some one responsible for it. He said that he knew who the dog belongs to that bit his cow and he will prosecute them at the proper time.

Smashed Two Fingers.

Timothy O'Brien, of Somerville, a brakeman on a coal train, met with an accident about two o'clock Friday morning at the Greenbrook Tanks, while coupling cars, which resulted in the crushing of two fingers. The man was brought to Plainfield by a fellow brakeman and taken to Dr. Simpson's office, where the latter dressed the wounds. The doctor is in hopes that he will be able to save the fingers but it may be necessary for O'Brien to lose them.

TROLLEY COMPANY PAID.

SETTLED IN FULL FOR DAMAGES CLAIMED BY W. S. SLAPE.

Slape's Carriage was Struck by a Street Car, when No Warning was Given—Damage to Man and Beast Remedied.

The rights of a driver on the tracks of a traction company have been the cause for considerable trouble. Only last month, in a suit in the New Jersey Supreme Court, which involved this question, was settled by the Plainfield Street Railway.

Last August, William S. Slape was driving from Plainfield to his home on West Front street, near Dunellen, in the evening about nine o'clock. As he was going down the incline beyond Clinton avenue, he saw a flash of light on the ground in front of him but heard no bell. Thinking that perhaps there was a car behind him, he started to turn off the track when one of the trolley cars crashed into the carriage from behind, throwing out Mr. Slape, wrecking the carriage and injuring the horse.

He was carried home and remained there for several days under the care of Dr. Gaston, unable to go out on account of his injuries. When at last he was able to be out again he placed the case in the hands of his attorneys, Reed & Coddington. The company was notified of the accident and an investigation made by the attorneys in which it is alleged that it was found that the alarm bell had not been sounded and no attempt made to stop the car until an accident was unavoidable.

A settlement was sought with the company, but the offer was refused and suit was started in the Supreme Court for $2,000 damages by Mr. Slape. The horse was the property of Mrs. Slape and a suit was brought in Justice Newcorn's court for $125 for damages done to the equine. In the same court suit was brought in the name of Clarence Slape, brother of William Slape, for $50 damages to the carriage.

As soon as the matter was brought into the courts, Reed and Coddington met with Riker & Riker, of Newark, the attorneys for the company. The cases have been pending for several weeks, but last week the company made an offer which was accepted by Mr. Slape. They settled for every dollar asked for by the plaintiff in the case, and the cases in the Supreme Court and in Justice Newcorn's court have been stopped.

Reed and Coddington have brought several cases for their clients against the street railway and have been successful in all of them.

According to the State laws, the company is expected to sound an alarm and give the driver of the vehicle ample time to get the vehicle off the tracks. If the driver persists and acts obstinately in the matter and remains on the track, then the company can have him punished according to law, but the company have no right to take the law in their own hands and run into the vehicle.

BRAVED STORM FOR PLEASURE

Ladies Aid Society of Hope Chapel Know How to Entertain.

Notwithstanding the storm and the general bad walking, Hope chapel was comfortably filled with members and friends, Friday night on the occasion of the musical and literary entertainment given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society for the benefit of the chapel fund. Rev. Mr. Newell, the pastor, presided and announced the several numbers on the programme, beginning with a well-executed piano solo by Mrs. S. R. Struthers and a recitation by Miss Gerholk. Miss Howarth sang a beautiful soprano solo and her encores were so prolonged that she was obliged to respond several times. Miss Addie Parker Jackson recited "The prize violin," and Miss Howarth sang sweetly "If they'd only write and ask me to come home," and of course she had to respond to a flattering encore, as did also Miss Jackson after reciting "The Usual Way." On the whole the entertainment was a pronounced success and at its completion ice cream was offered for sale by the ladies "with cake thrown in."

HIS SIXTIETH BIRTHDAY.

Informal Gathering of Friends at the Home of John Bushnell.

A pleasant social event took place last Friday at the home of John Bushnell, of Central avenue, when the latter celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his birthday. An informal gathering of a few friends including Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bushnell; Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Schoonmaker, Miss Gertrude Andrews, F. H. Andrews, of this city, and Miss Holland, of Pittsburg, was an occasion of genuine pleasure. The host was the recipient of many happy returns of the day, and judging from his hale and hearty appearance he will live to see them.

Nearly Severed a Digit.

Frank Vanderhoof, of the butcher firm of DeHart & Vanderhoof, of 140 Central avenue, nearly cut off the thumb on his left hand while using the cleaver, Thursday. Dr. Simpson dressed the wound.

COTILLION CLUB DANCED

ENTERTAINED BY MISS MURPHY AT THE CASINO FRIDAY NIGHT.

The Interior Presented a Beautiful Appearance With Its Decorations of White and Yellow—Those Who Were Present.

There has not been a more successful meeting of the Cotillion Club than the one held in the Casino last Friday. The Club was entertained by Miss Annie Murphy. The Casino presented a charming appearance. The principal decorations were in white and yellow bunting, and the colors were festooned about the large open fireplace and along the walls. The room was divided into two parts by screen of trellis work, which was decorated with evergreens. Rugs and cushions were distributed about the sides of the room, and little open books were arranged. Pink shades covered the electric lights. Large Japanese umbrellas were suspended overhead while smaller umbrellas were used in the decoration of the walls.

The guests were received by Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Mrs. D. T. Van Buren, Mrs. G. W. VanBoskerck and Mrs. T. L. Murphy. These same ladies presided over the favor table. The German was led by Clarence L. Murphy and many new and novel figures were introduced. Pretty and appropriate favors were numerous and were used very effectively.

There were about thirty couples who took part in dance. Among those present were the Mesdames Saunders, VanBuren, Strong, and Paxson, the Misses Waring, Reinhart, Smalley, Van Boskerck, Murphy, Huntington, Clarkson, Durand, Wharton, Graves, Harte, Holland, Talmadge, Dunellen, Ginna, Stewart, Wilson, Chaplin, McCready, Cooley, Waltz and Worman, and the Messrs. Huntington, Holmes, Van Boskercek, West, Dashfield, Hedges, Waring, Waltz, Shepard, Murphy, Wharton, McGee, Henderson, Sykes, Corbett, Bigelow, Schoonmaker Stewart and Strong.

SPEAKER DIDN'T COME.

Principal Attraction at Vincent Chapel Was a Disappointment.

There was something of a disappointment in store for those who attended the Lincoln sociable of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church, held in Vincent chapel last Friday. The feature of the evening had been expected to be an address by Cyrus G. Shepard, of Newark, who was one of the party that accompanied Boston Corbin at the time when he shot Wilkes Booth, the murderer of President Lincoln. Owing to the storm, however, Mr. Shepard's visit to this city was postponed and the address was given up for the evening.

The rest of the programme was a short one but the evening was passed in social chat while the refreshments were in readiness to pass at the close of the programme.

After the singing of "America," which opened the programme, J. W. Jackson, who was the master of ceremonies, led in a short prayer. Clarence Mills rendered a violin solo in an artistic manner, accompanied by Miss May Whitney.

"The Burglar" was the title of a recitation by Miss Lehleiter. Then should have come the address but, as it didn't, a solo, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," was sung by Elmer E. Tryon while all the audience joined in the chorus.

Coffee and crullers were passed by members of the society, assisted by some of the young men and a social hour followed.

The committee which had charge of the sociable consisted of Mrs. Winter, chairman; Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Sheppard, Mrs. Thorn, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Stephen, Mrs. Tingley, Mrs. Riker, Miss Roberts, and Miss Van Middlesworth.

A POVERTY PARTY.

Novel Affair to be Given at the First M. E. Church.

"Poverty! Poverty! All is Poverty!" is the rather strange inscription on the invitations which are now being passed to the members and friends of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church. A closer inspection of the inside of the invitations informs the reader that he is cordially invited to attend a poverty party to be held in Vincent chapel on next Friday evening at 8 o'clock sharp. Admittance, 5 cents. This novel party is to be given by the Epworth League of the church and promises to be a very enjoyable affair. The rest of the invitation is devoted to the list of items that will be used on that occasion.

All who have ever attended a like entertainment know that all the guests are fined according to their poverties, those showing the least signs of poverty to be fined the highest, of course. There will also be a programme that will occupy part of the evening.

For the Piano Fund.

A concert will be given in the North Plainfield Public High School on the evening of Washington's Birthday, for the benefit of the piano fund. All of the talent will come from New York and the sale of tickets has been limited to two hundred.

OLD OR NEW TUNES?

THAT IS THE QUESTION AGITATING THE CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

Some Want a Change to a Modern Hymnal While Others Do Not—A Committee Appointed to Examine the Subject.

Evangelistic Work in Missions was the subject of the meeting held at the Crescent Avenue church last week. The attendance was large and the interest was marked. F. H. Andrews was the leader and he spoke entertainingly on the subject. A portion of his remarks were as follows:

"During the past few years a great interest has been awakened in mission work and the person who is not in sympathy with this work does not live near to Christ. Many of us remember the early days of this work when the missionaries started out and we felt as though we would not see them again. The early missionaries did a pioneer work and they broke the ground so to speak. In the present day more aggressive work is being done and the missionaries resort to all kinds of methods by means of travel to accomplish their purpose of saving souls. Great work is being done among the college students and John Mott, who started out about eighteen months ago, has established student conferences all over the country.

"The work that I am particularly interested in is that in the South Sea Islands. The annals of this work should be written in starlight. When the first missionary landed on those shores there was nothing but savagery of the worst sort, but during late years rapid strides have been made in modern improvements. During the first year that a missionary labored among those people $1,500 was raised for the work, and during the following seven years a great many of the people discarded their idols. In the Fejee Islands, when the first missionary landed, about sixty years ago, there was the very worst kind of barbarity practiced among the 200,000 people that inhabited the Islands, so much so that some one has said that the history should be written in blood and registered in hell. After much hard work the Gospel was spread, and in 1885 the fiftieth anniversary of missionary work was celebrated."

After the singing of a hymn W. D. Murray gave a brief talk on the student volunteer movement among the colleges. He gave a great many figures to show that this work is growing very rapidly and an immense amount of good is being accomplished by the leaders of this work. He said that the motto of the students is "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation," and every student is working hard to accomplish this purpose. He spoke concerning John Mott, who is now travelling among the world-wide missionary fields, under the supervision of the Y. M. C. A. Executive Committee, and he hoped that the people in the city would have the opportunity to hear him when he returns to this country.

The above service was followed by a meeting of the congregation which was presided over by Charles Place, as Moderator. It was held for the purpose of considering the advisability of changing the style of hymn book which is now used by the church. Some time ago John Leal and I. C. Pierson were appointed a committee to look into the matter and report, and at the meeting last evening Mr. Leal made a report on the sub ject. He stated that both he and Mr. Pierson had carefully considered the matter and in their best judgment they thought that the new Presbyterian hymnal recently adopted by the Presbytery was about the best book for the church. This he said could be purchased at 75 cents per copy. It contained the best of the old tunes together with many new ones, and was a worthy successor to the "Songs of the Sanctuary," which had been in use for a third of a century.

The report brought out considerable discussion on the part of many who were interested in the proposed change. Dr. E. W. Hedges said that he had a copy of the book at his home and that he had tried most every tune. He thought that it was a good book and that it would be just the thing for the church. In regard to some of the new tunes in the book he said that he would consider them in the light that if he had a mother who persisted in wearing clothes that were old and not up to date, he would if possible try to get her to wear clothes that were be seemlier and up to date. In this respect he thought that the church was in a similar position, and he recommended that the church adopt the book. The incident related by the doctor caused considerable laughter on the part of those present. Later Dr. Hedges offered a resolution that the book be adopted. Isaac L. Miller did not agree with the doctor and he said that he did not think that the church was in a position to adopt the book at present. He was not wholly in accord with the idea of giving up the old tunes and book. Dr. Richards was asked to express his opinion. He thought that there should be a change. He felt as though the old book was very much out of date and he would like to see a new one. Some others thought that it would be a difficult thing to learn the new tunes and in this respect a change would not be a good thing. After a great deal of discussion Mr. Kimball offered an amendment to Dr. Hedges' motion to the effect that a committee of twelve be appointed to examine into the subject and report at a later meeting after every member of the church had been given an opportunity of learning of the proposed change. The amendment was adopted and it was decided that six women and six men should compose that committee. This concluded the business and the meeting adjourned.

WILL ENTHUSE CRANKS.

PLAINFIELD ATHLETIC CLUB TO HAVE A CRACK BALL TEAM.

Some of the Best Players in the City Have Been Signed and Will Strive to Make a Name For the Club on the Diamond.

The Plainfield Athletic Athletic Club is going to have a first-class ball team to represent them this coming summer, from all appearances. The team is about made up and the players are all anxious for the season to begin. Among those to be seen in a P. A. C. uniform will be Fred Winn, who pitched such a strong game last year. He will officiate in the same position this season, and is confident that he can outdo his 1896 record. Ed Erickson, who caught last season very creditably, will also occupy the same position this year. Symonds who played right field for the Y. M. C. A. team last season, will play first base and captain the team. Among the new faces on the team will be Jack Freeman, who removed to this city last fall. He will hold down second bag. He is a good fielder and a heavy batter. He played last season in the Trenton City League, and season before last with the Bordentown club, who defeated such teams as the Cape Mays, Cuban Giants and other strong teams. Moran, who played short stop, and Firstbrook, who played third base, last season will be in their old positions again this year, to stop base stealers, and cut off hot grounders. The outfield will be much stronger than last season and will be made up as follows: Cose, right field; Fleming, left field; Dederick, centre field. Muir and Owens will be substitute fielders, and Welsh extra pitcher. The club will elect its manager at its meeting next week.

PEOPLE BOUND TO TALK

MANY NEW TELEPHONE SUBSCRIBERS IN CITY AND BOROUGH.

Local Company to be Organized at Bound Brook to Complete With the New York & New Jersey Telephone Co.

While the past month has not been a prosperous one in all lines of business, the e has been a marked increase in the business of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company in this city. A number of new telephones have been put in throughout the city and borough while the calls for "Central" have been so numerous that it has been necessary to increase the force of operators in the exchange. New phones have been put in the following places during the last month: C. W. Krause, plumber, Vine street; D. J. Kelly, residence, Franklin place; A. D. Phillips, electrician, Central avenue; C. H. Rugg, coal office, Madison avenue; Dr. Charles R. Thiers, dentist, Grove street; Benjamin R. Western, residence, Washington avenue; Dr. J. H. Crosier, Crescent avenue; Mrs. H. Gould, residence, Rockview Terrace; John M. Whiton, residence, Central avenue; William D. Murray, residence, West Ninth street; DeHart & Vandeveer, butchers, Central avenue; F. W. Perry, residence, Willow avenue; Mrs. I. W. Rushmore, residence, West Seventh street; George T. Rogers, residence, Myrtle avenue.

Another attempt is being made to organize a telephone exchange in Bound Brook by a local company, which has just been incorporated under the name of the Somerset Telephone Company. The incorporators are William W. Smalley, L. S. Cook, R. H. Brokaw, O. B. Reynolds and William H. Powelson, a number of the prominent citizens of that borough. The company is capitalized at $3,000 with $1,000 paid in. Several years ago a New Brunswick company, now defunct, canvassed the town with the intention of extending its lines to that place but the result was so discouraging that the attempt was given up. The new company will, of course, be in opposition to the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, but how the local organization will be able to hold its own without any outside connections, remains to be seen.

Granted a Patent on a Shoe.

Andrew C. F. Marsh, of Vine street, has just received his official allowance for his recently granted patent for an overshoe. The invention consists of a series of four little bolts, with blunt edges, which are placed on the four corners of an overshoe to prevent the wearer from slipping. The invention has been thoroughly tested by Mr. Marsh and his friends and pronounced very effective.

A RECTOR IN ONE PULPIT FOR JUST TWO DECADES

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF REV. T. LOGAN MURPHY'S CONNECTION WITH THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY CROSS.

Celebrated With Special Services in the Church Yesterday Morning and Afternoon—Episcopal Clergymen in Attendance and Spoke Words of Congratulation—Rev. Mr. Murphy Delivered a Sermon in Retrospection of His Work.

For almost a quarter of a century Rev. T. Logan Murphy has been the rector of Holy Cross church, North Plainfield, and in recognition the members of his church very pleasantly remembered the valuable services which Mr. Murphy has rendered to the church during the past twenty years he has been their pastor, and the event was celebrated Sunday at both services. In the morning there was special music by the choir under the direction of Mr. Hoskins, the organist, and Mr. Murphy delivered an anniversary sermon which took the form of a retrospection. In substance Mr. Murphy spoke as follows:

"The memory of joy reaches far back in the annals of every person's life. Indeed, there are many who persuade themselves that they never experienced true pleasure except in the earliest stages of their career, who complain that when the hours of childhood flew away they bore off the best joys of life upon their wings, leaving passion to be the minister of youth, and care to be the portion of manhood and unrest and pain to be appropriated to old age. We cannot pass through the world without the experience of sorrow, and of this as well as of joy, memory becomes the monitor. Here also she has a tale to tell of the days of old. For even innocent childhood is not exempt from grief and many a cloud will rise to interrupt the brightness of its morning. So it is with every succeeding period of our brief day.

"Let us not complain that the shadows of sorrow return to haunt us after the term of its actual existence is over. Why should they not be permitted the same license as the phantoms of delight? The laws of memory are impartial and do us no more injustice than the laws by which the realities of our condition are dispensed to us. If our own sufferings as well as our own enjoyments are rightly ordered, why not the remembrance of both? Whether we are led to it more frequently to the bright or the gloomy passages of life depends very much upon the structure and tone of our minds and the character of our present circumstances.

"Memory is given for a good purpose. But in memory is not where men should live. They should not take their stand there. A man's place should be just between the present and the future, with some roots running back and some roots penetrating in the other way. Living forever toward the future with his illumined face in that direction and never turning his back upon the future to look into the past. Many men live almost exclusively by reflection and memory. And yet the Christian type of wisdom is hope. 'He that has kept me hitherto shall keep me yet.' When we are brought into occasions of despondency, remember the occasions of old in which, when we were despondent, the Angel met us on the way, and all our fears fled in the greatness of His salutation and in the power of His comfort. Men's courage sometimes goes down as the courage of overspent warriors. But they remember having been bidden to stand, and they that stood found victory not afar off. Never remember the past to renew your grief, but only to renew your courage.

"In times of excitement, of delusion, of trial, when the enemies of our consistancy are out upon with their forces, and we waver in the conflict, may we be stimulated to victory. May a review of the past always stimulate us to renewed energy in the future.

"As we have now dwelt at considerable length upon the days of old mentioned in the text, I take this opportunity of mentioning that this is the twentieth anniversary of my rectorship of this parish. Two decades have passed. In that time the children have grown to adult years, have married and settled in life. Time has been hastening on. Church festival after church festival has appeared and vanished. Children have been brought to the font, prepared for confirmation during that summer. In 1881 the large organ was built, with pneumatic action, giving the organist and choirmaster full oversight of his choir. In 1891 the parish building was enlarged to double its original size. Last summer the church was newly carpeted and other necessary improvements made. Various memorials from time to time have been given for the decoration and adornament of the interior of our beautiful church. We are free from debt save a few hundred dollars on the rectory.

"We have a most efficient and flourishing Ladies' Auxiliary Society; its members are most zealous and active in parochial affairs as well as missionary enterprise. Every year valuable boxes are sent by them to the various missionary fields. We have a society of Kings's Daughters, a Willing Circle and altar and vestment committee, which are very efficient. Holy Cross Brotherhood, a society of the men of the parish, have added materially to the working force of the church. The east room of the parish building is fitted and furnished for their use. We have an excellent Sunday-school which is prospering under our efficient superintendent and faithful corps of teachers and officers. Our church music is rendered by a vested choir of men and boys, under the able management of our organist and choirmaster. During my rectorship there have been 384 baptized, 38 adults; 1 have been confirmed. There have been 92 marriages and 221 funerals. It is not well for any of us to linger too long over the past in reviewing the days that are gone. We miss too many who have finished their course and have entered within the veil. They in imagination stand before us and this cannot fail to bring sadness to the heart. Let us look to the future and work and strive in its interests."

The anniversary service of the day was held in the afternoon at 4:30, when addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Glazebrook, of Elizabeth; Rev. E. M. Rodman and Rev. S. P. Simpson, of this city. The church was prettily decorated around the chancel with potted plants and choice roses, while here and there a beautiful lily. The choir gave several special selections in the usual faultless manner. After the opening part of the service, Mr. Murphy with a few appropriate words introduced Dr. Glazebrook, who spoke in part as follows:

"There are two elements that enter into this occasion today that make it exceedingly pleasant. The first is met is 'Friendship,' and next to God's gift of His Son, I think that that friendship holds second place. Friendship, of the loyal and true kind is one of God's best gifts to men. This rector has never faltered and has always been faithful in his work. I am glad to be one of a number to present today and speak a few words on such an occasion, for I have always considered Mr. Murphy one of my closest friends.

"The second element is 'Duty' on the part of the congregation. This rector has stood here among you for twenty years, subject to the closest scrutiny of the public, and any man that can do that is deserving of recognition and honor. Put yourself in his place, and ask the question how could I do it? Let the doctors, lawyers and citizens ask themselves that question.

"I congratulate the rector of this church and the congregation on their success. I notice that there are many young people here today, and I suppose that many have been baptized and married by the rector of this church, and a strong feeling of love has evidenced itself among you. As you grow older that love and admiration will become stronger. God grant that your rector may be spared many years and that the fruits of his labor may be abundant."

The next speaker was Dr. Rodman, rector of Grace P. E. church, who spoke somewhat as follows:

"My brother and I believe in long rectorships, for we think that there are very many advantages to be gained. The Methodist people are wise and next to the church of Rome they show as much worldly reason as anybody I know of. They keep a minister two, three or four years and then they think that he had better obey the church injunction and leave. Short rectorships are like the small boy who planted some seeds and then unearthed them every day to see how much they had grown. On the other hand long rectorships are like the great and sturdy oak with its mighty spreading roots. To my mind there is no question as to the advantages of long rectorships. The State courts have decided that you cannot remove a rector, that it takes the higher power to do that.

"It takes a man years to learn who his parishers are and where they live. After that there is the strong growth as the years roll on. I wish you a good luck, and may God bless you abundantly for years to come."

The last speaker was Rev. Mr. Simpson, pastor of St. Stephens' church, Netherwood. His remarks were in part as follows:

"There is very little left for me to say as those who spoke before me have well covered the ground. Twenty years service is quite an epoch. It means two things, namely: fidelity on the part of the priest and affection on the part of the people. It certainly speaks well for you and your rector. You could scarcely pass those years without some clouds, but God has never allowed a storm to overcome the ship. You never find a rectorship that is not full of light and shadow, but there is always a silver lining to every cloud.

"How often do you pray for your rector? A priest requires your help to carry out God's plan. If you pray for him there is one thing certain and that is you will not have grace to find fault. As a rule men generally wait until a person dies and then we cover their coffin with flowers, and possibly a monument is erected. It is possible that that same person may have lived for years without sympathy.

"I have known your rector for many years and there is a very strong affectionate feeling between us. Let him know that you love him now and don't wait until he passes away. Talk him to his face that you love him. Wish you good luck in the name of God and I trust that you may be greatly prospered."

At the conclusion of the addresses Mr. Murphy thanked his fellow-rectors for their kindness in speaking words of cheer and he hoped that all would profit by what was said.

The service closed in the usual way and many remained to extend greetings to Mr. Murphy and wish him many years of prosperity.

This Wednesday evening of this week a reception will be held at the home of the rector, when the members of the church will have an opportunity of honoring by their presence and good cheer.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy was born at Pittsburg, Pa, and the largest part of his life was spent in and around Philadelphia. After leaving college he studied at the Philadelphia Divinity School. He then became assistant rector of Grace church, Philadelphia. Sometime later he was rector of a church at Newport, R. I., for a period of seven years. He entered upon his rectorship at the church of the Holy Cross, February 14th, 1877, and has honorably held the position ever since.

OVERTURNED THE STOVE

Narrow Escape of a Little Boy From Receiving Serious Burns.

There was a little conflagration on West Second street last Friday, although no alarm of fire was sounded. The young son of William Snell had a narrow escape from serious and perhaps fatal injury while playing in the parlor, and in some unaccountable way accidentally upset the stove. The red-hot coals were scattered about the floor and a serious fire seemed inevitable. The parents of the lad were near by and quickly rescued him from his dangerous position and then extinguished the flames that were devouring the carpet. The boy thus escaped serious injury, while the only damage done was to the carpet.

Mrs. Henry Van Name, of Elmwood place, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Weeks, of Rochester, who is her guest, have returned from a visit with Brooklyn friends.

UNION DEFENDERS DAY.

OBSERVED BY THE SONS OF VETERANS LAST WEEK.

Rev. W. C. O'Donnell Delivered a Talk Salient With Patriotic Points of the Martyred President—The Programme.

Union Defenders' Day was appropriately celebrated last Friday by John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, who gave an entertainment and lunch-box social in their rooms. There was an excellent attendance and the well select d programme was enjoyed. It included piano solos by Mrs. Reilly, Miss Dodge, John O'Brien and an address by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell. Each of the above numbers were enthusiastically received and in each case encores were called for. The address made by Mr. O'Donnell was full of patriotism. He took for his subject "Abraham Lincoln," and from that he gave one of the best talks ever listened to. He spoke of the many excellent qualities of the late "Martyred President" and drew striking lessons therefrom. There was an earnestness about the speaker's remarks which held the closest attention of everyone present, and at the finish he was loudly applauded. When the programme came to an end the lunch-boxes were sold to the highest bidder and the prices ranged from twenty-five cents up. Every box was sold and a profit of about $10 was realized. As an addition to the lunch hot coffee was served by members of the Relief Corps and the members of the committee from the Sons of Veterans. The social time enjoyed while the refreshments were being served helped to pass a pleasant evening. Praise is deserving the committee for the pleasing programme presented. Before the happy gathering left for home a short time was spent in singing familiar war songs.

THE LINCOLN DINNER.

PROMINENT UNION COUNTY MEN DINE AT ELIZABETH.

Mayor Fisk, the President of the Association, Unable to be Present on Account of Illness—The New Officers Elected.

The Lincoln Association of Union County celebrated the birthday of the great emancipator last Friday by a dinner at the Y. M. C. A. in Elizabeth, Hall. Covers were laid for 100 persons, including most of the prominent Republicans of Union County. Among those seated at the tables were John Kean, Senator Voorhees, Mayor Rankin, Sheriff Kirk, County Collector Wood and Assemblymen Clauss and Codington. The menu was elaborate.

The principal speeches of the evening were delivered by Gen. Wager Swayne, of New York, and the Rev. James H. Brady, of St. Mary's church, Elizabeth. General Swayne responded to the toast, "Some Aspects of this Celebration," and his eloquent and witty remarks aroused great enthusiasm. Father Brady made a brilliant response to the toast, "Lincoln, the Man." John B. Green, of Westfield, although called upon on short notice, made a fine response to the first toast, "Abraham Lincoln." The Rev. Dr. Campbell, of the First Presbyterian church, offered prayer.

In the absence, through illness, of the president of the association, Mayor Fisk, of Plainfield, the opening address was effectively delivered by Ira B. Wheeler, of Elizabeth.

At the business meeting of the association held prior to the dinner, the following officers were elected: President Ira B. Wheeler, of Elizabeth; vice-presidents, Frank Scudder, Westfield; Yale Lamiz, secretary, Walter Timms, of Elizabeth; treasurer, Edward L. Tillon, of Elizabeth; chairman of the executive committee, E. W. Hale, of Cranford. The committee which arranged for this, one of the most successful of the Lincoln celebrations in Union County, were Edward C. Woodruff, E. M. Wood and M. W. Halsey, all of Elizabeth.

A Lincoln Social.

A Lincoln social was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wilson, of Grandview avenue, last Friday, when a most excellent programme was presented. It consisted of piano solos by Bert Simpson, selections by an instrumental trio, Messrs. Stewart Splen and Simpson, recitations by Miss Coddington, and readings by Mrs. Taft. Ever number was well received and hearty applause accorded. After the rendition of the programme a collection was taken for the work of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, of Grace M. E. church, under whose auspices it was held. The committee in charge of the social consisted of Mrs. Taft, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Powell and Mrs. Stevens.

Received a Splendid Offer.

J. Linn Edsall, retiring proprietor of the Commercial Palace, has received an excellent offer from one of the largest department stores in Helena, Montana, for the position of superintendent. Mr. Edsall is considering the offer and will probably accept it in a few days.

TO RESCUE CRIMINALS.

Senator Voorhees has introduced a measure in the Legislature embodying the ideas of Mrs. Burlington Booth with respect to the care of convicts after they shall have served their sentences or shall have professed religion. The bill provides for the appointment of probation officers and an advisory board of parole, to consist of five members, including the keeper of the New Jersey State Prison and two moral instructors. This board will recommend to the Board of Pardons those prisoners most entitled by their conduct to be released upon parole. When released, Mrs. Booth's idea is for the American Volunteers to establish a home and provide places for the paroled convicts.

VAGARIES OF POLITICS.

Politics certainly do make strange bedfellows, as the saying goes, and especially true it seems right here in Plainfield—stronghold of the O. P. A twelve months ago Vincent L. Frazee was considered one of the never say fall Democrats, but today he stands honored by Republicans with a place in the very Councilmanic body in which two years ago he sat as the "Lone Star" of Democracy's hope in municipal life. Mr. Frazee retired from the circle of city fathers with the halo of Jeffersonian ideas hovering around about him, but now he asserts his total absolution of things Democrtic. There are those who think political life in Plainfield is void of neat and picturesqueness, but such is not the case.

LISTENED TO HONEYED WORDS.

Assemblyman Roll is keeping up his reputation as a friend of corporate interests. A lively tilt was precipitated in the House yesterday by Assemblyman Roll, when he moved to have recommitted the bill providing for the vestibuling of trolley cars. Assemblyman Scovel opposed the motion in a fierce speech, and said the motion was designed to promote the smothering of the bill by burying it in Chairman Roll's desk. He intimated that Mr. Roll had made his motion after listening to the honeyed words of a member of the House representing the trolley companies. He said that Mr. Roll was up to his old tricks, Assemblyman Roll's motion was defeated, he being the only one to vote for it.

A MAN FOR THE PLACE.

The fitness of James K. Arnold as Borough Clerk has been demonstrated a number of times during his administration, and only recently another evidence was afforded for this claim. The auditing committee of the Borough Council held a meeting a few nights ago, during which time they inspected a new set of books that was recently opened by Mr. Arnold. Their neatness, thoroughness and easiness of comprehension were so marked that the committee paid him a high compliment over the fact.

LONG RECTORSHIPS.

The Episcopalians of this place seem prone to retaining rectors for long terms of service. Only last year Rev. E. M. Rodman passed his twenty-fifth year as rector of the Grace church and now Rev. T. Logan Murphy celebrates his twentieth anniversary as the mentor of the Church of the Holy Cross. Both pastors are men of high intelligence and are among the first in the ministerial ranks of Plainfield, a place especially prolific with bright pulpit minds.

A GOOD LETTER.

From the Clerk of the Circuit Court.

Fernandina, Fla., Feb. 28, 1896.

Mr. J. George Suhrer, Druggist, City.

Dear George:—Please send a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I would not feel easy if I knew there was none of this valuable Remedy in the house. I have given it a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children. Yours respectfully, Geo. E. Wolff. Sold by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, Park & North avenues.

A Soldier's Story

The next entertainment of the Y. M. C. A. Star Course, which is to be "A Soldier's Story," as recited and sung by Alfred E. Pearsall, is a powerful war monologue, by Major Calhoun, and will be given at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, the evening of Washington's Birthday Don't fail to hear a good thing.

CHRISTIAN TYPE OF MAN

EULOGY OF FRED S. DUNN BY REV. CORNELIUS SCHENCK.

Final Obsequies Over the Remains of a Young Man Whose Life, Though Burdened With Ills, Was Exemplary.

The obsequies of the late Fred S. Dunn were held from the home of E. T. Dunn, 210 West Fourth street, Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The large attendance of friends that gathered with the relatives evidenced the esteem and love which they held for the departed. Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, conducted the services. His remarks were full of consolation to the bereaved ones, and those who were friends. A portion of Mr. Schenck's remarks were as follows:

"On such an occasion as this it is customary for a clergyman to deliver some homily or speak on some kindred theme, but today it is not in my heart to speak such words. Ever since our brother returned my mind has been in a reminescent mood, and has wandered back through the years to the time when he took his first stand for Christ, and I have thought of his peculiar checkered career within such a comparatively short time.

"With some people nothing exceptional happens to mar the even tenor of their ways, but with our brother it was vastly different. Soon after his confession of Christ and his marriage his life journey began.

"It was in June, 1884, one year after I came to Plainfield, that he decided for Christ. I remember that Sunday well when he assumed and made his confession. Since that time he has lived in the fear of God. A few months after that he was married, not far from where we are assembled today. He and his bride started out in life with a bright future full of promise. In 1890 they left Plainfield in search of health. A little later they joined the Presbyterian church at Fairhaven, Wash. The fact that they wanted a church home was an evidence that they were walking close to God. They did not tarry long at the latter place, but they sought a different clime farther west and south. Finally they returned to Plainfield so that Mrs. Dunn might spend her last days with her loved ones. On October 2d, 1892, they were again received into the church of their first choice, and two weeks later that beautiful personality returned to the God who gave it.

"It then became the husband's turn, and he sought health in the west, but he came back to pass his remaining days with his friends. This is a brief story of life from the church records. In this life there are one or two things which should be empasized; not to eulogize, for that would be distasteful to our brother.

"In the first place, when he accepted Christ he came out bright and took a bold stand. Since then he had not, to my knowledge, ever retraced his steps. He lived a good Christian life, and occupies a front seat in the Kingdom of God. I remember that soon after he was married he and his bride occupied a front seat in church. They attended regular the services of the church and the Christian Endeavor meetings.

"Secondly, our brother always carried his Bible to church and Sunday-school. That always pleased me, for it is not very often that we see a person carry that book to the services, and I think it is worthy of emulation. There was a singular regularity about his attendance at all church services. It was his pleasure to hold the honorable position of president of the Christian Endeavor society, and I noticed as he lay in his coffin today that he wears the badge of the society.

"His desire to spend his last days at home reminds us of the story of Jacob of old, who had the same desire. He was not content to lay in foreign lands, and he was granted more than that desire, for he was allowed to be surrounded with his friends and kindred. We should be grateful that it was granted and that God gave him the strength to travel three thousand miles to the city that he loved. He found the religion of Christ his portion in health, and a source of strength in sickness. When he was asked whether it was his strength, he replied that it was, and that there was no cloud or anything between him and Jesus. He was awaiting the summons from his Maker.

"Years ago he committed his soul to God who was his support and comfort. We shall ever think of him tenderly and kindly, as a true disciple of Christ. Our sorrow today is tempered with the fact that he is with Christ. His departure teaches a lesson to the young especially, and it teaches that we should all be ready, having used the talent He gave us for His glory."

Mr. Schenck's remarks were brought to a close with a spiritually-uplifting petition to the Throne of Grace, after which those present were given an opportunity of looking for the last time on the form of one whom they all loved and admired.

The floral tributes were beautiful tokens of love from relatives and friends. They consisted of a large Christian Endeavor monogram of choice roses, blended in delicate harmony, also a number of beautiful lillies, and several other choice tributes arranged in the shape of wreathes, pillows and otherwise. A bunch of violets, breathing their sweet perfume, rested on the bosom of the departed as a silent testimony of the love of one who was very near and dear to him.

The love and tender hands that bore the departed to his last resting place were John L. Force, Theodore H. Hardy, Alfred K. Willett and James A. Love. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way in or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

Mr. Ward L. Smith, of Fredericks-town, Mo., was troubled with chronic diarrhoea for over thirty years. He had become fully satisfied that it was only a question of a short time until he would have to give up. He had been treated by some of the best physicians in Europe and America but got no permanent relief. One day he picked up a newspaper and chanced to read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He got a bottle of it, the first dose helped him and its continued use cured him. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

DIED IN A TRAGIC WAY.

JOHN PEARSON, AGED 17 YEARS, KILLED ON THE RAILROAD TRACK.

Was Attempting to Cross the Tracks and Did Not Notice the Approach of a Passenger Train—Was Instantly Killed.

In the death of John Pearson, aged 17 years, which occurred Saturday afternoon about 5 o'clock at the Grant avenue station on the Central railroad, a young life was suddenly taken away in a most tragic manner. Only a short time before he had stopped work at the Pond Tool Works, where he was employed as an apprentice, and as was his usual custom, he attempted to cross the railroad tracks, a short cut to his home on Wilson avenue in the borough. When he reached the tracks a coal train was passing, and after waiting until the train had passed the point where he was standing, he slipped behind it just in time to be struck by a passenger train which was going west. He evidently did not see the train coming and he was unable to get out of the way. The engine struck him in the head, breaking his neck and inflicting several wounds about the head. It is not supposed that he knew what struck him, so quickly was the tragedy committed. His body was quickly picked up and placed on a passenger train which was coming to Plainfield. It was placed in the baggage-room at the North avenue station and Undertaker Casey was notified to take charge of it. The body was then removed to the morgue where Dr. Westcott, the county physician, viewed it and gave a burial permit. Afterward Undertaker DeMott took charge of the body and removed it to the home of the parents on Wilson avenue. When the parents learned of the accident they were grief stricken.

Young Pearson was well thought of by all who knew him and his quiet manner won for him many friends. About a month ago he joined Somerset Council, J. O. U. A. M., and his parents will receive from that order a death benefit. The boy had worked about two years at his trade and was considered an excellent workman.

SLAIN BY A COUNTRYMAN

ITALIAN MURDERER NOT CAUGHT TILL TWO WEEKS AFTER.

County Physician Investigated the Death and All the Italians Claimed That it Was Accidental—Proved to be a Lie.

Two weeks ago County Physician Henry D. Wagoner, of Somerset county, received information that Giovanni Placci, an Italian laborer, had met with an accident near Mine Mount in the northern part of the county. On investigation the county physician found Pilacci's dead body lying in a shanty occupied by a gang of Italian laborers at Mine Mount. His skull was fractured near the temple. A number of Italians who were watching over the dead body testified that Pilacci received his injury by striking against the corner of a step in attempting to ascend the ice-covered stairs outside of the shanty. The county physician could receive no information to the contrary, and granted a burial certificate that death was accidental. A few days latter Francisco Fortunatti, a wealthy Italian contractor of Madison, accompanied by three Italian laborers appeared before County Prosecutor Nelson Y. Duncan, of Somerset county, and testified that Pilacci had been murdered by Francisco Dilucci, who struck him a fatal blow on the temple with a club. Deputized as a special officer, Fortunatti followed Dilucci for a week and captured him Saturday afternoon in Brooklyn as he was about to sail for Italy.

NEW HEALTH INSPECTOR.

William Addis, Sr., Received the Appointment Last Saturday.

Wm. Addis, Sr., the veteran plumber, was appointed, Saturday, plumbing and health inspector by the Board of Health, and will enter upon his duties at once. Mr. Addis came to Plainfield twenty-six years ago, and that time there were only two plumbing shops in this city, which were Berry & Thorn and P. J. Regans. In consequence of the above, the term of Mr. Weaver as health inspector has expired.

Mr. Addis performed his first duty yesterday by placing a yellow card on the house occupied by Patrick Bergen, No. 617 South Second street, where the latter's one-year-old son is confined with the diphtheria.

Pleasantly Surprised.

A pleasant surprise was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Norrie, of 1031 Arlington avenue, on Saturday evening. The time was passed in singing familiar songs and listening to instrumental selections. Those present were Mrs. Sperling, Miss Lou Norrie, Mr. and Mrs. V. W. Nash, Mrs. Geo. Leland, Miss Ada Nash, Mr. and Mrs. C. I. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. J. Klein, J. H. Carney, Eli M. Odam, Mrs. Pennington, Alton Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Bowman, Mrs. John Rittenhouse, Mrs. Tunison, Thomas Osment and Charles F. Stephens.

Your Idea is that oatmeal is oatmeal—there can't be much difference.

But there can!

Even in ordinary oatmeals there can be a difference—good oats and good milling are better than lean and shrivelled oats and poor milling.

But oatmeal may be something more than a matter of fat groats and smart millers.

The oat in its natural state is the most nutritious of grains, but it must be adapted to man's physical needs. The starch cells—the indigestibility—must be broken.

Steam cooking will break the cells, change starch into sugar, make the indigestible digestible.

And there is such an oatmeal, steam-cooked.

RIDICULED BACON THEORY.

SHAKESPEARE DESERVING OF CREDIT.

Prof. Fiske Lectured in His Happiest Vein Saturday Night.

"The Bacon Shakespeare Folly" was the subject of an unusually bright and entertaining lecture delivered by Prof. John Fiske in the Casino, Saturday night, before a cultured and appreciative audience. The lecture was in Prof. Fiske's happiest vein—clear, persuasive and witty. He seemed rather to hold the Baconian theory up to ridicule, in a good-humored way, apparently thinking it too foolish to deserve serious consideration. However, he was careful to give an answer to every point brought up by those who hold the theory that the plays we know as William Shakespeare's were really written by Francis Bacon. In reply to the argument that the plays show a greater amount of book-learning than would be likely to be found in a man of Shakespeare's position, he said that Shakespeare's works show far fewer evidences of the scholar than Ben Jonson's. Though Shakespeare takes his materials from whatever strikes his fancy, they are woven together with little regard for classical models. His works show genius, but of the sort that our universities cannot give; that sort of man is as likely to be born in the peasant's hut as in the palace. A scholar like Bacon would have avoided the mistakes Shakespeare makes in his historical allusions; he would never have introduced such an acronism as the use of cannon in the reign of King John. Bacon is one of the most interesting characters of modern times, but also one of the most over-rated. His work shows him to have lacked the creative quality which enables a writer to lead men into new fields, and he is entirely without the exuberent fun which we find in Shakespeare's plays.

Slipped and Fractured His Arm.

Charles P. Bull, of East Ninth street, sustained a fracture of the radius of his arm last Sunday, about 8 p. m., while he was calling on a neighbor. He was walking up the steps, which were covered with ice and his feet slipped allowing him to fall very heavily. He was assisted by his friends to the house, and later he was taken to the hospital for treatment. The fact that Mr. Bull's family is away led him to persue this course so that he might have the best of care. It is not thought that he will be confined very long.

NECK IN A ROPE NOOSE

EXCITING EXPERIENCE OF A POLANDER WITH TWO ASSAILANTS.

Dragged Out of the House With a Lasso and Unmercifully Beaten by Two Men and Trouble Early in the Afternoon

There were exciting times in Netherwood Saturday afternoon and evening, and one Polish resident of that neighborhood was frightened half out of his wits besides being the victim of a serious assault.

George Becker, who is a native of Poland, came to this country some time ago, and recently secured a house to start ashes. He, and his wife have been caring for the house on the Fiske property on Woodland avenue. On Saturday afternoon Becker drove his horse with his ash wagon attached to the residence of F. B. Martin, of Hillside avenue, and on his way he passed the residence of William F. Hobbie, corner of Hillside and Watchung avenues. One of Mr. Hobbie's young sons was standing in front of the house, and Becker alleges called to Becker and told him that if he passed that way again that he, young Hobbie, would shoot his horse.

"You try," called back Becker. Becker went after the ashes and as he was coming back saw young Hobbie standing there as before. Then, Becker alleges, Hobbie raised his Flobert rifle, which he had hitherto kept behind him, and fired. Becker claims that the bullet passed through the horse's mane. Then Becker jumped out of the wagon and took the gun from the lad and drove to Plainfield and laid the rifle with Chief Grant.

Later in the afternoon a crowd of boys visited the Becker home and threw snow at the house and into the kitchen. They also kicked the dog, which attacked one of the boys and inflicted a slight wound in the calf of the leg.

In the evening at about 8 o'clock Mrs. Becker looked out of doors and saw two forms. Becker opened the front door.

"We have a warrant for your arrest," said someone outside, "and we want you to come along."

"All right," replied Becker. "Let me get my coat and hat."

Becker was in his shirt sleeves at the time. He made a movement backward and then a rope noose settled around his neck and he was dragged out on the piazza. He was thrown down before he could make any effort to resist and the assailters sprang on him, kicking and beating him. The larger of the two drew some shining weapon from his vest pocket and hit Becker in the chest. The weapon pierced Becker's vest and shirt and inflicted a small flesh wound. Similar wounds were also made in Becker's wrists and hands while he was trying to hold fast to the piazza railing.

The rope was thrown by the smaller of the two men and Becker claims that an attempt was made to choke him with it. He bit the stranger in the hand, however, and the latter gave up the attempt. Becker's clothes were torn to shreds and his body was covered with bruises. The assailants departed and Becker had just strength to crawl into the house. Meanwhile his wife had gone to the residence of S. A. Crulkshank, on Belvidere avenue, for assistance.

Becker is very positive as to who his assailants were. The smaller of the two, he says, is Willie Hobbie, the older brother of the boy who's rifle was the cause of the trouble. The other he is equally positive was Geo. Simon, of Lake street, who was formerly in the employ of Mr. Hobbie.

The noise of the disturbance was heard for some distance by a number of people who were in the vicinity at the time. There were several who also saw the assault.

Becker appeared before City Judge DeMeza in the morning but the case was out of his jurisdiction and Becker afterwards went to Justice Newcorn and swore out a warrant for the arrest of both of his alleged assailants.

Seven Young People Confirmed.

A class of five young men and two young women were confirmed at St. Stephen's church last Sunday by Bishop Scarborough. The service was an impressive one largely attended.

MARITAL WOES ENDED.

RECONCILIATION BETWEEN MR. AND MRS HUGO B. KURZHALS.

While the Witnesses Waited to Give Their Testimony in the Divorce Proceedings the Couple Decided to Makeup.

While the twenty-five witnesses and several reporters waited in the office of Counsellor W. K. McClure to offer and to hear testimony in a divorce case, the estranged husband and wife, Hugo B. Kurzhals and Laura Kurzhals, met on the quiet and agreed to let bygones be bygones. The meeting of the couple was held at the office of Winfield S. Angleman, the lawyer for the husband. The divorce suit of Kurzhals against Kurzhals was begun some time ago by Mr. Kurzhals, as was stated at the time in The Press. Kurzhals is a barber in Westfield. He is the son of Theodore Kurzhals, of West Second street.

The first hearing was set down for Monday before Counsellor W. K. McClure in his office on East Front street and twenty-five witnesses were subpoened for the case. They all appeared at the appointed time and waited for the hearing to commence.

For several days it has been understood by those interested in the case that both parties were willing to effect a reconciliation. Last Monday, Mr. Kurzhals came to see his lawyer, Mr. Angleman, and was advised by that gentleman to "make up," if they could, before the hearing. The more the couple thought of it, the less they wished that they had become estranged.

Mr. Kurzhals and her lawyer, Paul Q. Oliver, of Westfield, were invited to a conference at Angleman's office before the hearing. They came and it did not take long for the young couple to put aside the past and unite in a loving embrace. There were no traces of anger on the faces of either when they met. Smiles predominated and the eyes of the young wife glistened with tears of joy. After all was satisfactorily settled, Mrs. Kurzhals went to the station with her lawyer, while her husband followed in a few minutes after a short talk with his counsel. Word was sent to the expectant crowd in McClure's office that the suit was off and they departed, greatly astonished by the sudden turn of affairs. The reunited couple met at the station and departed for Westfield together, where they startled the good people of that town by returning home as of old.

THE CONGREGATIONALISTS.

THINGS THEY HAVE BEEN DOING.

A History of the Church Read by the Endeavorers.

Some idea of the Congregational denomination, its history and what it has been doing, was given to those who were present at the meeting in the Congregational church, last Sunday. The meeting was under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society. The subject was the "Congregationalists and what they are doing." The leader was the pastor, Rev. C. L. Goodrich.

Rev. Mr. Goodrich first told something of the history of the denomination and explained that it was the oldest of them all. The principles were the autonomy of the local church and the fellowship of the churches. There are 5,800 churches in the United States with a membership of over 600,000. Robert LaBoyteaux told of the strongholds of the denomination in the country. Mrs. C. L. Goodrich told of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions. A. C. La Boyteaux spoke of the work of the American Missionary Association. Something about the Home Missionary Society of the Congregational Church was read by Miss J. Louise Jenkins. The work of the Congregational Church Building Society was described by Miss G. M. Morse. Miss Anna E Manktelow told of the Congregational Society. The Congegational Sunday School and Publishing Society was the subject of a few remarks by Josph A. Robinson. William Whiting read a list of the leading states in benevolences.

Mr. Goodrich then referred to the claim that Congregationalism is the denomination that educates and a few arguments in favor of that claim were advanced by Miss Ella Miller. She told of the numerous colleges and schools which have been founded by the denomination and are now being conducted as denominational colleges and schools. Several charts showing the growth in the country and individual churches were exhibited.

A few months ago, Mr. Byron Every, of Woodstock, Mich., was badly afflicted with rheumatism. His right leg was swollen the full length, causing him great suffering. He was advised to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first bottle of it helped him considerably and the second bottle effected a cure. The 25 and 50 cent sizes are for sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

—H. L. Hastings, the anti-infidel lecturer, of Boston, will speak in the Y. M. C. A. hall on Tuesday, Feb. 23d, at 8 o'clock.

AGAIN THE PARK'S WON.

WHIST VICTORIES ARE A REGULAR THING NOW WITH THE BIG FOUR.

Monday the Jersey City Club Met Their Waterloo at the Whist Board in Contest For the Challenge Trophy.

The Park Club challenge whist trophy still remains in the club house of the Park Club. Another was added to the list of the Park Club's victories. It was hard for the whist players of the Jersey City Club, but it couldn't be helped as the Parks could not be prevailed upon to loose their grip on the challenge trophy.

The team from the Jersey City Club came to Plainfield last Monday to play a match for the trophy and they were defeated by the famous four from the Park Club by a score of 15 to 7. The game was played in the club house of the Park's. This was the fifth consecutive victory for the Park's in the contests for the cup.

The Jersey City team was composed of the Messrs. Watson, D. Bowly, C. Bowly, and Macabe. The regular team, Messrs. Townsend, Rogers, McCutchen and Howell, represented the Park Club. In the first round the Parks secured the lead by a score of 4 to 3. The second round was even more in favor of the home team, the Park's winning by the score of 8 to 1. The visitors improved their playing in the last round and succeeded in beating the Parks by one point, 4 to 3 The total was 15 to 7.

The Jersey City players put up a good game but the trouble was that the Parks put up a better one. When these teams met several months ago, the match was won by the Park's by a score of 20 to 6.

TO THEIR PARTING FRIEND.

FAREWELL RECEPTION TENDERED.

Fred Warton Surprised in a Most Pleasant Manner.

Fred Warton, of West Third street, was tendered a surprise on Saturday evening at Hope chapel by some of his many friends prior to his leaving Plainfield today for Providence, R. I., where he has secured a lucrative position.

An enjoyable programme was presented, which consisted of piano solos by Miss Annie Gray; duets by Mr. and Mrs. R. Gow and Messrs. Comerford and Warton; songs by Messrs. T. Hendry, W. G. Gray, S. Smith and Mrs. McInnes, and a recitation by George Leighs. During the evening a pause was made to present Mr. Warton with a token of their esteem which consisted of a handsome teachers' Bible. The presentation speech was made by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, pastor of the chapel. Mr. Warton replied in a suitable manner.

Among those present were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Fred Warton, Mr. and Mrs. T. Hendry, Mr. and Mrs. F W. Mundy, Mr. and Mrs. George Leighs, Mr. and Mrs. D. McInnes, Mr. and Mrs. S. Smith, Mr. E. Wild, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. N. Head, Mr. and Mrs. R. Gow, Mr. and Mrs. D. Bowden, Rev. G. K. Newell, Miss Annie Gray, and Messrs. H. R. Munger, A. M. Leland, C. A. George, N. Gourlay, A. Cowley, I. Montgomery, C. Leighs, T. Comerford, W. Bradford, R. Kenney, W. W. Fowler, T. McNeil, Jas. Storah and J. Loudon.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completly derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by druggists, price 75c. per bottle. QUEEN WILHELMINA.

STORIES OF HOLLAND'S YOUNG AND POPULAR SOVEREIGN!

She Says that She Will Choose Her Own Husband, and that No State Matchmakers Need Apply—She is Intensely Loyal to Her Mamma.

When Queen Victoria inherited the British throne she was scarcely more popular than is the young Queen of Holland at the present moment. The Dutch simply adore their young sovereign, and take the most intense interest in her coming of age (which will take place next August), and in her possible marriage. Queen Wilhelmina is credited by her people with much force of character. It is thought that she will attempt to rule as well as reign, and her choice of a husband is therefore a matter of utmost importance to the Dutch. The "Wochen Zeitung," Amsterdam, says on this subject:

"The many rumors of the Queen's approaching marriage are premature. More than once she has declared that she would prefer to remain single as long as possible. At any rate, it is certain that the Queen will choose for herself. She will not be railroaded into marriage. Only recently she said: 'I love my loyal subjects, and hope to please them in every way. But if they believe that they have a voice in the choice of my husband, they are decidedly mistaken. If extreme measures should be resorted to against me, I shall be more energetic than ever. I will not be married at all if I am not allowed to have a voice in the matter.'"

So far the Dutch people are rather pleased with these expressions of independence. They, however, are anxious to have certain legal formalities settled before the Queen comes of age. The "Courant," Rotterdam, writes as follows:

"It will be necessary to define the position of the Queen before the law, to remove the conflict between the Queen's position as head of the state and his wife, and it is best that this should be done before she has chosen a husband. According to the civil code the wife is bound to obey her husband, and the latter has a right to demand that his children should be called by his name. More. The husband can compel his wife to reside in whatever place he thinks fit to choose as his abode. The Queen is not above the law; she must obey it as well as her subjects. The rights of the Prince Consort would therefore clash with the constitution, for the seat of government may not constitutionally be transferred to a foreign country. The Queen's exceptional position should be defined by special legislation while she is yet free."

Although there are many points of similarity between the position of the Queen of England and that of the Queen of Holland, there has sprung up between the two countries an estrangement since Wilhelmina inherited the throne of Holland. For some unaccountable reason the young Queen has a violent aversion to everything English. The British press returns this dislike with interest. "Her figure is ungainly, her lips are bloodless," etc., are things we read of her in "Life" and other English society papers. These descriptions are reported to her and do not assist her in overcoming her dislike of Englishmen. The "Vaderland" relates the following incident:

"During a recent tour abroad the Queen expressed a wish to the Dutch Ambassador accredited to a foreign court to meet his daughters. 'I do so wish to meet some Dutch girls,' she said. 'I am just dying for some one to speak to in my own language. Do send your daughters to me.' 'But my daughters do not speak Hollandish,' replied the unfortunate nobleman. 'My girls were not born in Holland; they only speak English.' 'Then, for heaven's sake, do not send them to me,' replied Queen Wilhelmina, very naturally. 'I will have nothing to do with Dutch girls who do not understand their own language!'"

Wanted Spices of Variety in Life.

The expression of his face showed that he was easily irritated, and the contractor into whose office he walked braced himself for trouble.

"I wish," said the irritable man, "that you would do me a favor in connection with the work on my house."

"Anything that we can do will be cheerfully attended to."

"Thank you. I wish you'd send a new man to the painting."

"But the one we have there is an excellent workman."

"I don't doubt that. But he's been there three days and he hasn't whistled anything but 'Tell Them that You Saw Me.' I'm getting sore on catching a tune, but I've learned that with all the variations, and if it's just the same to you I'd like to start in on a new one."—Washington Star.

A Wise Precaution.

Mr. Williams: "Wha' yo' doin' dat fo', Mr. Jo'son—puttin' mosquito nets up dis time in de year?"

Mr. Johnson: "Waal, yo' see de doctor tole me de air was full of dese yer micro bees; I's takin' precutions 'gin gittin' 'em into de house."

A Soft Language.

The Turkish language is said by scholars to be the softest and most musical language of modern times, being better adapted to the purpose of musical notation and recitation than even the Italian.

By washing the clothes at the undertaker's the second wife of a Banbor, Me., man is paying off the bill for the burial of her predecessor.

FEATHERED DRUNKARDS.

She-king Depravity on the Part of Birds without Nerve a Dish here.

A queer story is told by Mr. Andrew Lang. The incident came under his own notice, and occurred under the bridge over the Lochy, below the Ben Nevis Long John Distillery. From this tale it is obvious that animals are only sober from lack of wit to obtain alcohol.

"That establishment disgorges into a burn a quantity of refuse, no doubt alcoholic. When we crossed the bridge in the morning to fish, the ducks from the farm opposite were having in a drunk and disorderly manner—flying, beating the water, diving, spluttering, and greedily devouring the stuff from the distillery. Their antics were funny, but vulgar. By 2 o'clock we found the ducks sleeping off the effects of their debauch. We wakened them, and they all staggered eagerly to a bucket of water, from which they quenched the torments of thirst. A small seabird behaved in a still more deplorable way. He slowly drifted down the burn from the fatal intoxicated burn, nor could pebbles judiciously thrown at him induce him to take the wing. He tried to dive, making efforts comic and unsuccessful. After drifting through the bridge, I regret to say that he returned to the burn and "took a cup of kindness yet," getting all the more intoxicated, and drifting back in a yet more deplorable condition. What a lesson, we said, is this to mankind, who, after all, need not speak of the boasted reasonableness! The wild and tame things of stream and ocean are as unwise as we."

A Boy's Hard Fight With Owls.

Martin E. Simson, aged 13, son of Charles Simson, a well-to-do farmer living near Willow Springs, is certain to lose the sight of one eye as the result of an encounter with two large owls in a stretch of woodland near the drainage canal on Sunday afternoon, and it is not certain whether the sight of his other eye can be saved.

On Sunday young Simson went on a hunting trip down the Desplaines River. In a patch of woodland between Willow Springs and Lemont he saw a huge owl perched high up in a tree, and brought it to the ground with a well-directed shot. Supposing it to be dead he went down to pick it up when the bird, which was only slightly disabled, made a fierce attack upon him, and before he could defend himself fastened its talons into the flesh of his right hand. Another owl apparently the mate of the injured one, just then appeared upon the scene, fastened its claws in the boy's uplifted arm, and with its beak destroyed his right eye at a single stroke. The lad fought desperately for his life, and succeeded in freeing himself from his tormentors long enough to seize his gun, which was upon the ground unloaded. With this he quickly despatched the injured bird, and finally succeeded in beating off its infuriated mate.

Blinded with blood, which flowed from a dozen cuts and deep scratches upon his face, the boy finally reached a neighboring farmhouse, where his wounds were dressed and he was sent home.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Why Do the Lost Walk in Circles?

The question is often asked: Why is it that a person who is lost, whether he be in a dense wood or on a prairie, invariably walks in a circle, and always to the right? No satisfactory answer has ever been given for this well-known peculiarity under the circumstances mentioned.

Some physiologists, anatomists, and speculative philosophers claim that the left leg in the human species is slightly longer than the right, and so takes longer steps, thus causing a motion to the right which in time completes a circle, if the mind is so bewildered that it has no fixed objective point in view. Perhaps the real answer to this queer question lies in the fact that most persons use their right hands in preference to the left, and are accustomed to passing objects on their right-hand side, and so, unconsciously, keep edging off to the right. On a prairie, however, where there is nothing in the way of obstacles worthy of mention, this cause or reason for walking in a "right-handed" circle would hardly hold good.

Does any reader know whether it is a fact or not that left-handed persons who are lost make the circle in an opposite direction to that made by a right-handed person?—St. Louis Republican.

Pictured as He Died.

An extraordinary photograph is that taken a few days ago of the execution of a Seminole Indian in the Indian Territory. This is a picture which shows a man at the instant of his death.

Death in this instance was almost as quick as the camera, for the man was shot in the heart, and died as it is said, "instantly." The method of execution was peculiar.

The prisoner, who had been condemned for murder, was taken out to the edge of a field and a red spot on a small rock. A large, white heart had been cut from some calico, and this had been carefully stitched upon his coat just over the heart.

This made an unmistakable mark for the executioners to fire at. There is no other photograph of this kind in existence, for pictures of death scenes are rare.

"I am willing to split hairs with my opponent all day if he insists on it," said a very distinguished lawyer, in a speech at the bar.

"Split that, then," said the opponent, pulling a coarse specimen from his head, and extending it.

"May it please the Court, I didn't say bristles."

HIS INTEREST IN ONE OF HIS OWN COUNTRY WOMEN.

Appoints Her as a Representative to the Woman's Congress, to be Held in London in 1898, After Having Become Acquainted With Her Story.

Some time ago a Chinese Christian girl named Marguerite Wang came to America with the intention of obtaining an education. She remained here a year and was just about to enter a woman's college when she received word that here father had betrothed her to a man whom she had never seen. Under the consular regulations she was forced to return to her home, foregoing her education, to marry this man. Miss Hartford, one of the principal workers in the Foo-Chow Mission, who was here on a visit, accompanied her on her return.

On the same ship with them was Li Hung Chang and his suite. The Viceroy noticed the Chinese girl and sent his secretary, Lord Li, to inquire about her. A day or two after he sent word that he would like to talk with Marguerite and Miss Hartford. They went to see him and told him the story of the girl's attempt to obtain an education. The Viceroy was much pleased with his country-woman and seemed to take a great interest in her. He told her and Miss Hartford about the Woman's Congress which is to be held in London in 1898 and said that he wanted the women of China represented at the congress.

After a little talk he told Marguerite that he would appoint her to represent China and its women at the congress. He then asked Miss Hartford if she did not know of some other woman in China that was qualified to be a delegate. Miss Hartford told Miss Hartford at once recommended to him Dr. Hu King Eng, the first Chinese woman to study medicine. Some years ago she left China to come to America, and after a course in the woman's medical school at Philadelphia she received her degree. She then returned to China and became one of the most valuable members of the Foo-Chow Mission, where she now is. Li Hung Chang was much interested in the story and after a few questions said that he should be appointed as the second woman to attend the congress. So China will be represented at the Woman's Congress and by two Christian women. After the Viceroy's arrival in China he made the appointments in a formal manner.—New York Tribune.

INDIAN DIVORCES.

The Reservation Indians Throw Off the Galling Bonds at Will.

With most of the plains Indian marriage consists simply of picking out the maiden, leading her to a cabin or wigwam, and installing her as mistress of the house and cornfield, sometimes with the necessary preliminary of paying the father a pony or two or a few blankets. Divorce is also occasionally with some slight ceremony performed by a chief or medicine man. And when the brave grows tired of his partner he can get rid of her as easily as he won her.

The people who are now flocking to the Dakotas or Oklahoma to get divorces would be supremely happy if they could throw off the galling bonds of wedlock as easily as does the reservation Indian. The fact having been formally announced by the head man of the clan, the divorcee takes place when the tribe is gathered at a dance. When all are assembled and the circle formed, the discontented warrior strikes a drum held by the revellers, gives away a few presents (of times making a present he may be intends to take next) and then in a short bombastic speech he stigmatizes his wife by giving her over to the tender mercies of other braves, while they look upon him seriously and consider that he has performed an act of bravery in his desertion.

Often as many as half a dozen divorces are thus obtained at a single dance. No tedious waiting; no courts, no lawyers and no trouble about alimony or the custody of children. And the squaws thus cast off, as a general thing, seem to take it as a matter of course, and before the close of the dance are using the wiles known and used by women the world over in an effort to repair as speedily as possible the break in their hearts and matrimonial experience.

With the taking of land in severalty and putting on of citizenship, however, the Indian finds that he has cemented the ties that were formerly before for the courts everywhere are deciding that the tribal marriages are legal and binding upon the Indian who becomes a citizen. And if the weight of one legal marriage wears somewhat heavily upon a white man, how must it be with the red man, who has contracted two, three, four, or even more alliances which the court now declares legal, and at the same time takes away his former avenue of relief?—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

TO JUNGFRAU'S TOP.

THE ASCENT WILL BE EASY WHEN THE RAILWAY IS DONE.

An Engineering Marvel Which Will Enable Electric Cars to Climb the Famous Swiss Mountain—People May Rise Almost 14,000 Feet Above the Sea.

Thomas Commerford Martin, the well-known electrical authority, during his recent trip abroad, made a special journey to Switzerland for the purpose of inspecting some of the electric railways in the Alps, and has brought back some hitherto unpublished data concerning the new road to the summit of the Jungfrau. He says concerning it:

"The building of the new electric road to the top of the Jungfrau will be, I think, one of the greatest engineering feats of the century. I have witnessed the beginning of the work, and have been over most of the route to be traversed by the electric cars, and I must confess a feeling of awe when brought face to face with the difficulties to be overcome. One gets but a poor idea from the published accounts that have reached this country. Think of cutting through the center of the highest mountains in the world, and constructing a street car route up an altitude nearly 14,000 feet above sea level! This new electric road will revolutionize Alpine travel, and guides can be placed aboard the cars, and in an hour and forty minutes be set up on a mountain peak, which no one but an experienced mountain climber has attained. Even the Alpine clubs approve of it. In the future we may climb the mountain and descend on the cars, or vice versa, or if a climbing party be overtaken by a severe storm the members can find safety and civilization via the nearest station. Alpine casualties will decrease.

"The difference in levels between the terminal stations of the road will be 7,000 feet. The length of the road will be 12 kilometres, or 7½ miles. The fare for the round trip will be $9, or its equivalent in francs, with the proportionate reduction for passengers going only part of the way. At least 10 kilometres of the road length will be in tunnels, with openings at frequent intervals, from which the tourist may obtain momentary views of the surrounding scenery. The maximum speed of the cars on grades above 25 per cent will be five miles an hour; on lesser grades it will be slightly increased.

"The motive power for operating the road will be obtained from the glaciers themselves. The waterfalls and streams will be harnessed, and made to operate turbines, which in their turn will be transmitted along the length of the road. The cars will be lighted and heated by electricity, which will be most necessary, as it is estimated that the temperature of the tunnels will range from two to ten degrees centigrade below zero as the summit is approached. This will make the temperature of the air at the opposite ends of the tunnel, it is believed, will be ample to set up a circulation of air sufficient for ventilating purposes. In fact, it is feared the currents may be so strong at times as to render it necessary to close the portals in order to control them properly and to avoid the entrance of warm, moist air from below, which will cause the deposit of moisture on the inside of the tunnel, and cost it with heavy frosts.

"The first section of the road will be ready for traffic by next August. The whole line will be completed in five years. The rack rail type of road will be employed. The standard gauge will be one metre, and a minimum curve of 100 metres will be adopted. A maximum grade of 25 per cent will be the limit, and all down grades will be avoided whenever possible. The heaviest down grade will be that between the Monchjock and the Jungfraujock. But these considerations of engineering detail will not affect the tourist. Even the scientist must be impressed with the aesthetic side of the case. The cars, as such an altitude in a street car; to be conveyed into the clouds by means of the very force which emanates from them, and to stand with the Alpine world at your feet, will give you an impressive idea of what modern engineers can do."

Hetty Green and Politics.

Hetty Green doesn't like to hear politics spoken of since her son Eddie failed to carry Texas. She dislikes it as much as she does running money in unprofitable enterprises. Stephen Van-Tassel, a Democrat, and Frank M. Buck, a Republican, both know this now. They became embroiled in a heated argument on a train for Mount Vernon yesterday, and their voices were so loud that they attracted much attention. Finally Mrs. Green went to them and said in a tone that filled the car:

"Gentlemen, will you pardon me for saying that the election is over? There is a time for all things. Politics has had its. Will you not stop talking politics until you reach home? I am not deaf and you make me nervous."—New York Press.

A Drawback.

A writer in the short-lived New York Tatler once said to Whistler: "It must be delightful being an American in London, and always getting the better of people." "Ship!" returned he, with melancholy, "it takes them such a long time to find it out."

A Compromise.

"Tony, me husband, bayn a Italian, wanted to give the baby a Italian name; but ol, av courtse, bayn Oirish, wanted um to have a name with a Mac in it, so we sethled the mather bol callin' um Macaroni."

OLD AUNT BETSY.

Typical Characters Whom Everybody Is Conversing Knows.

Aunt Betsy, writes Wallace P. Reed in the Chicago Times-Herald, is a privileged character in Cottonville, where she is a leader in church or society circles among the colored people. She is shrewd and thrifty, and has accumulated enough property for her support.

When my attention was first attracted to Aunt Betsy she was quarreling in the kitchen of my boarding house with the landlady over some wretched looking peaches she was trying to sell.

The old woman was very proud of being a "Fergitny niggah," and her tongue wagged freely when she was talking to her white neighbors. On this occasion my landlady felt it necessary to speak very plainly about the peaches, and she finally succeeded in getting them at about double their value.

Then the old woman's brown and wrinkled face assumed an expression of serene satisfaction, and she began to talk to a little colored boy who had been listening good naturedly to the war of words. The boy was one of the house servants, and Aunt Betsy did not want him to think that there had been any unpleasantness.

"Yer heerd me," she said, shaking her bony forefinger impressively at him, "yer heerd me, an' yer heerd Miss May. Now, some foolish pussons thought think that Miss May was quarlin' wid me. But she wuzzan't. Dottertail, nottertail. Yer see, hit's 'cause she's a Mistis she has. Hit's all on account of her noble voice. Dar's thar all de trubbul comes in. She set lets out her noble voice when she talks, an' folks think she's quarlin'. Lor' bless yer, boy, I know's better."

"Are you going to town?" asked the boy, with a view to changing the subject.

"Yassum, terreckly. I'se got ter git some redemption milk and some concrated lye."

"What does she mean?" I whispered. "Condensed milk and concentrated lye," was the answer in a low tone.

Aunt Betsy heard us, and her black face snapped with indignation.

"People neenter think thet they's got no sense 'than use jist 'cause ther skins is white," she said. And with this parting shot she started off.

It so happened that I walked to town a short distance behind her, and along the road I could hear her singing in a jubilant and almost triumphant voice. The words of her song, repeated many times over, ran as follows:

"Oh, my Re-deemah, great Jehovah!
Bin a-brekin of de bread,
Bin a-drinkin' de wine,
An' fo' thousan yeahs!

"Oh, my Re-deemah, Oh, sweet Jesus!
Bin a-drinkin' of de wine,
An' a-breakin' of de bread,
Fer ther thousan' yeahs!

"Aunt Betsy," I shouted, "why do you first say four thousand years, and then drop to three thousand years?"

"Oh, I don't mind what white folks say," she replied. "Some of 'em ain't got no mo' sense than my old mas'sa'r."

Electricity at Play.

Electricity has become so powerful an agent in the great achievements of the nineteenth century, that its equally wonderful successes along minor lines are in danger of being eclipsed. In the lighter matters of life, however, electricity is a valuable servant, and its results are often as fascinating as they are wonderful.

A dish of ordinary jelly can by no means compete in attractiveness with the concoction of the same name in which electricity performs an important function. The dish, hidden beneath a silver cover, and still further shaded by a skillful arrangement of flowers, cannot fail to be a brilliant object when the cover is suddenly removed, and the transparent jelly is displayed to view, bright beams of light are centre, where an electric light is ingeniously placed so that its rays shine through the jelly in every direction.

More wonderful still was a table ornament once displayed by Edison. It was an aquarium containing goldfish, every one of which was a living light. The tiny fishes were all ablaze within, and their delicate bodies showed clearly the details of their anatomy. Each fish was provided with a swallow of tiny electric lamp connected with a dynamo by a hairlike wire passing out of its mouth.

Apples Shipped in Boxes.

Apples still go in nearly every seagoing vessel that leaves this port, and are all in barrels, for Mr. R. W. Shepard is sending lots of boxes packed like eggs. The fruit has been grown in blossom orchards at Clonee, where he selects the suitable kinds for the English and Scotch markets. They bring better prices done up in this way than they do in barrels, and the quality is better every way, especially use. The shippers prefer the boxes to the barrels, as there is no space lost with the boxes, and they pack better. A box contains about 200 apples, and a barrel nearly 500 of the ordinary size. The box costs a shilling, 40 cents, with a paper compartment for each apple.

His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, having received Fameuse apples from Mr. Shepherd some time ago, ordered another lot recently, and they were shipped in the cold storage compartment of the new Dominion Liner Canada on Saturday last. The fruit was the very best obtainable, being the largest, reddest, and most perfect specimens that could be selected from about a thousand trees, and will do credit to this Province and the whole Dominion.

ONE WOMAN TRIED IT.

RESULTS OF TRYING TO BE WIFE, MOTHER AND DRUMMER.

Changes that Have Taken Place in Her Home, Her Husband and Her Children Since She Became a Traveller—A New Woman in Real Life.

This story is in the nature of a contribution to the world's knowledge on the subject of the new woman, so called. It is an account of a woman who is trying to be a wife, a mother, and a commercial traveler all at the same time, and of some of the results of her experiment.

This particular new woman was, as a girl, bright, spirited, popular, and full of gumption. Her father was a bookkeeper. He died suddenly, leaving his family with straitened means. The daughter quickly decided that she would set herself to work to earn money with which to help out her mother. She found employment in a big store, and liked it. She had an aptitude for her employment, was clear headed and energetic, and did so well that she assured for herself such promotion as the place offered. Before promotion came she married.

Although a wife never neglected her domestic duties, she spent a good deal of time with her friends, and was constantly seeking outside channels into which to direct her surplus energy. One of these channels happened to be charitable fair, the management of which, owing to a series of mischances, fell almost exclusively into her hands. Here she displayed so much energy and business ability that the success of the affair was attributed to her efforts. One of the persons interested in the fair was a business man with a large trade outside the city. His attention was attracted by her work and evident talent, and he spoke to her several times on the subject.

"I wish I could get women with your shrewdness to go traveling for me," he said repeatedly. "I could make it well worth their while by the money they would earn."

The suggestion set the woman thinking, and eventually she acceded to his proposition.

The money so earned eased up certain matters considerably in the household and overcame whatever scruples the husband had about permitting his wife to be a drummer. The wife had simple time apart from her household duties to attend to her family and her household. Up to this point no specified harm had been done.

After awhile the family moved from the suburbs into the city, because that was more convenient for the wife. They found a pleasant home in a good neighborhood, let out two stories as furnished rooms, and occupied the rest themselves.

The husband proved to have elements of weakness in his character, and lived in the city developed them.

While she remained home between trips she could not conceal from herself the evidence of a process of deterioration that was going on. The wife was seriously considering whether she should not make up her mind to abandon her profession and home at once, when something else happened.

The rent of the house in which they lived was far more than they could afford to pay, and by letting out two floors in furnished rooms they got their home practically rent free. Of the income from this source by far the larger part came from the second floor, which was rented to a man with his family. Some doubt had been felt by the wife about him, and she had asked her husband to investigate his reference, because she had not time to attend to the matter herself. When she returned from one of her trips she found the tenant installed in the house, her husband having let him in to avoid giving himself trouble.

This man showed a sociable disposition, and one night met the husband on his way home.

"Let's have a drink," he said.

The result was that the tenant helped the husband home. The next morning he stopped in to see his landlord.

"Say," he said, "you're such a good fellow that I want to ask a favor of you. I want to hang you up for the week's rent, I am a little short now because I'm out of a job, but in a couple of weeks I'm promised a $5,000 place. Is it all right? Then have an eye-opener."

Having once established his credit the tenant paid his rent when he pleased. The husband was supposed to look after the house while the wife was away, and there was a disagreeable surprise for her when she discovered one day that they were a couple of months behind in their rent, because this tenant had been permitted to run up a debt whose proportions were serious enough. At the same time further inroads had been made on her husband's business capacity by his sessions with the tenant. Then the wife found herself confronted with the necessity of earning money enough to pay off the arrears of rent as well as the notes for unpaid furniture.

That is the situation of the family at present. The husband is earning little and less, and the house is costing more and more because they do not dare to put the unprofitable tenant out, fearing to lose what he owes if they should do so.

U. S. PENITENTIARY.

THE WARDEN'S KINDNESS AND THE GOOD RESULT OBTAINED.

It Is Located at Fort Leavenworth, and Is the Pioneer of Other Government Civil Prisons Which Will Grow Up Over the Country in Due Course of Time.

The penitentiary is located at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and is the pioneer of other Government civil prisons which will grow up all over the country in due course of time.

How many people in the United States are aware that there is one United States penitentiary in all of the United States?

At Fort Leavenworth is the only prison which is a United States penitentiary.

The prison force consists of the warden, assisted by a staff of seven officials and fifty guards, and is conducted on strictly military basis, Warden Warden French is a Democrat.

Warden French disciplines by kindness and firmness. Guards or officials are not permitted to strike a prisoner except in defence of themselves or others, neither are they permitted to use profane or abusive language.

The majority of the prisoners are between the ages of 16 and 30, and three-fourths of the convictions are for larceny, counterfeiting, violation of revenue laws, and assault. Almost all ratings are represented, there being two editors, five printers, three preachers, two bartenders, one doctor, four lawyers, and 343 farmers, this last being a most comprehensive term in a section which is largely out of doors.

As an evidence of the good that is in these men, Warden French told a number of stories, one of which is the following:

"I was sitting in my office when an elderly woman, accompanied by a younger, came in, and the elder woman asked if they could see any of the prisoners, I told her they could if they were relatives, and she told me her boy was there, and the husband and brother-in-law of the other woman also. They said they had come from Minnesota, I. T., and that they had driven the entire distance of 500 miles in a buckboard with two horses and a dog. She pointed out of the window and I looked and saw the outfit answered just as she stated. I sent for the three men, and went with the two women to meet them in the room for receiving, and there the poor old mother broke down on her boy's neck and cried, the boy, a young fellow of eighteen, bracing up quite manfully and not showing a tear. I told her not to cry so, but to cheer up the others, for the boy was a good boy, and would soon get out and be all right. After a while she was chatting away cheerily, and even got so interested that the boy moved over where he could see out of the sallyport across the road where the turnout was. He nodded over that way, and said to me, "That's my dog over there, sir. I'd like to see him a minute." It was so wistfully spoken and it seemed such a small favor that I let him step out to see the dog. He stood by me and gave a little short whistle, and the dog looked up quickly to if remembering the sound, then whistled again, and the dog got up and began to show signs of excitement. Then he called him by name, and on the instant the dog gave a cry of joy and came to the boy with a rush and flung himself all over his master. The boy could keep a stiff upper lip when his mother wept over him, but he couldn't stand the dog's joy, and he broke down and cried like a baby, the meantime hugging the dog and kissing him as if he were a human being. When he had finally quieted down he said the horses were his, too, and he would like to step over and see them, and I let him go. The horses knew his voice and whinnied when he spoke, and he rubbed their noses and laid his face down on their necks and wept some more. But it was doing him good and I never interfered, but let him have it out. He came back at last to go in where his mother and the others were, and I noticed a great effort to get her him to leave the dog, so I told him to take it along in and make a family parting with the dog and all of them, and enjoy himself all he could while he had the chance. He did it with many thanks, and when the party broke up at last it seemed to me almost as if we had had a revival of religion, and the effect of it on that boy I am sure will never be effaced if he lives to be a thousand."—New York Sun.

Funeral Customs in Greece.

Many funeral customs in Greece are unique. The body of an unmarried girl is always dressed as a bride, the common saying being, "She is married to death." The body of a boy is always dressed as a sailor. Women never accompany funerals to church or to the grave. Processions are always on foot, the priest leading and accompanied by acolytes bearing the cross and censers. The body of the deceased is invariably exposed to view, and at the close of the service in the church, which concludes with the words "Take the last kiss," both friends and strangers press about the body and give this token of farewell.

Efficacy of a Felt Hat.

It is not generally known that when a person falls into the water a common felt hat may be made use of as a life-preserver, and by placing the hat upon the water, rim down, with the crown round it pressing it slightly to the breast, it will bear a man up for hours.

THOSE WHO BELIEVE IN FATALITY.

Men Who Brave Danger and Demonstrate Their Idea to the Letter.

Soldiers are often heard to say, "If I'm going to be shot, I shall be shot." Mr. R. G. Wilberforce, who was an ensign of the 52nd during the Indian Mutiny, says he never met but three men who carried into practice the adage. One of these men was a friend, who, on Wilberforce's arrival in front of Delhi, got up on a rock to show him the pickets, assuring him that the journey was safe. As they rode along, Wilberforce suddenly heard the ping of a bullet, quickly followed by a second and a third. "Hullo—what does this mean?" he exclaimed. "Oh, it is only the rifle-pits; we are just on their line of fire!" answered the friend. Instantly Wilberforce put spurs to his steed and galloped into a safe place. Turning round, Wilberforce saw that his friend had dismounted, and was picking up the whip that he had dropped. Having done that, he slowly remounted and walked his horse to where Wilberforce was awaiting him. On another occasion a live shell came inside a siege battery, and began burying itself in the ground. Everybody went down except this fatalist. "Lie down, you fool!" they called out. Removing his cigar from his lips, he said, "I am not going to put myself out for you." The remark was interrupted by the explosion of a shell. A fragment cut off a piece of the standing man's trousers. He pointed to the torn portion as an illustration of the truth of the adage. The other man who lived up to this fatalist doctrine was seen by Wilberforce standing still to light a cigar in the middle of a street down which a heavy fire was pouring. Wilberforce, who was under shelter, called to him to come under cover. He looked up and blew often and said, "I told you that, if I am to be shot, I shall be shot, whether I am where I am or under cover? Then, taking out another match, he finished the lighting process which his friend had interrupted. This third instance occurred at the Delhi bank on the day of the assault. Seated on the steps of the bank between two men was Wilberforce's most intimate friend. The houses opposite were thickly lined with Sepoy rebels, who kept up a harassing fire, to which the three men were directly exposed. Wilberforce called to them to join him under the shelter of a wall. The friend answered, "If I am to be shot, I shall be, no matter where I am." Scarcely had he spoken when his companions were killed. He himself was not touched, though seven bullets struck one companion and two the other. He called attention to the fact as a proof of the truth of his theory.

LI AND THE LOCOMOTIVE.

The Wily Diplomat Knew How to Manage the Mandarins.

There is a story concerning the first locomotive in China. Li Hung Chang was given permission to construct a railway from the sea to his mines upon the condition that steam power should not be used, and for several months the cars were hauled by mules. Then Mr. Kinder and some of the foreign machinists secretly constructed a locomotive out of such materials as they could find in China. It was a rude affair, and it was never able to make more than five or six miles an hour, but it was a great advantage over the mule teams, for it could haul seven or eight cars of coal at that speed, where it took four mules to haul one. But when the mandarins at Peking learned that foreign devils were using a screaming monster on the railway they immediately made a tremendous fuss about it, and called Li Hung Chang to account for violating his concession. The old gentleman took it very much as he had pretended not to know anything about it, but he afterward restored himself in favor by issuing an order rebuking Mr. Kinder and his associates for their presumption and forbidding them to introduce any more new things or foreign notions into China. Shortly after he secretly patted them on the back and raised their pay. The excitement quieted down and was soon forgotten. Then Mr. Kinder got up steam in his clumsy old engine again, and was allowed to run it without interference. Later a couple of regularly made locomotives were imported from Europe, and have since been hauling coal trains on that road.—Chicago Record.

The Cat Wears Glasses.

Max, the handsome Maltese pet of Miss Thompson, of San Francisco, is perhaps the only cat on record that wears spectacles.

Miss Thompson says she has owned Max since he was early youth, and has found him a most invaluable possession besides being a loving little companion in her loneliness. A few months ago, much to her distress, Miss Thompson discovered that Max was losing his eyesight, so she carried him to a well known oculist to be treated. At first the man of science refused to make the experiment, scarcely knowing how to begin, but at Miss Thompson's suggestion, he secured a line and the picture of a mouse, and by holding these alternately and at varying distances before Max was finally enabled to test his eyes quite thoroughly. After the necessary treatment, the doctor fitted Max with a pair of glasses, the gold frames having to be made to order. Of course, now the big cat looks as wise as the proverbial owl with his double eyes, and Miss Thompson declares it is as good as new again.—Philadelphia Times.

ROYALTY LABORS.

PRINCESS LOUISE ADDS TO HER INCOME BY HER CHISEL.

People Desirous of Obtaining Favorable Notice from Queen Victoria Will Understand the Secret to Gaining Her Approbation.

Sculpture is a favorite art among those royal and imperial ladies of the Old World who are most distinguished for the exuberance of their temperament, the independence of their character and the strength of their mind.

The young Princess of Naples has already distinguished herself as a sculptor. One of her works is a statue of her ancestor, the Vladilla Danilo of Montenegro.

Queen Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria, adds to her annual income by her chisel. She is far from rich, her husband, the Marquis of Lorne, being actually compelled to work as one of the junior partners in the first-class firm of decorators in Chelsea, London. The Princess always has her hands full of orders for statues and busts of her mother, the Queen, from people desirous of social and titular distinction.

It has been found by persons of this class that the best way to attract the favorable notice of the sovereign is to present a statue of Her Majesty to some town or city, and when in addition to this the statue thus presented has been executed at a more than ordinarily large cost by her daughter Louise, of course the Queen is especially appreciative of the compliment paid. Thus some time ago Proprietor Borthwick, of the London Morning Post, who has been created a Conservative in the Kensington district of the metropolis, announced his decision to present to his constituency a statue of the Queen to be erected in the chief square of the district. He placed the order for the statue with Princess Louise, and gave her a long time in which to do the work. The result was that the Queen herself presided at the unveiling of the statue, and before a year had elapsed the sagacious proprietor of the Morning Post had been elevated to a peerage under the name and title of Lord Glenesk.

One of the Queen's grandnieces, Countess Gleichen, whose father was Prince Victor Hohenlohe, earns her living by her chisel, which renders her independent of the relatively small allowance which Queen has placed at her mother's disposal.

Another royal lady who is renowned from one end of Europe to the other for her skill with mallet and chisel is the widowed Empress Frederick of Germany, eldest daughter of Queen Victoria. Some of the best busts and medallions of her lamented husband have come from her studio.

An imperial lady who runs her very close in this respect is the widowed Archduchess Marie Therese of Austria.

HOW WORTH WORKED.

And the Long Waiting Women Would Endure to Be Crowned.

On days on which there are to be Court dinners or other functions Parisian ladies who had ordered gowns for them came to Worth, the well-known dressmaker, to be dressed. First come, first served; but there was a waiting room in which the waiting ones were necessary arrangement. If a fair customer might have to wait seven or eight hours. When her turn came she entered the consulting-room. Worth stood there, armed with a pair of scissors. Two women stood beside him. Then, undressed, the lady behind a screen—for her petticoats were to the skirt of the gown what the skeleton is to the flesh. When her toilet so far was complete the new gown was donned, and the customer, still prudently screen to be passed in review by Worth. He was particular about the cut and plastic points. He criticised aloud, worked here and there with the scissors and pins. The women acting under his orders were busily plied their needles. Glasses of wine were administered when nerves had run down from long waiting.

A Considerate Dog.

A neat dog story, which was related by a gentleman the other day, can be verified. He was riding upon the rear of a trolley car when the car passed over a nice, light, soft hat, which had blown between the tracks. The hat was not injured, but the wind gave it a little flirt after the car had passed and dropped it fairly upon one of the rails. A big New York car was coming and ahead of it a big mongrel pointer dog was trotting along.

The dog glanced at the hat, looked at the car, and then picking up the hat in his teeth ran over to the curb and deposited it upon the sidewalk near a group of pavers who were working alongside of the court house. After putting the hat in a safe place the dog loped after the big car and took his place in front of it.—Newark Call.

Turned Black and Died.

A peculiar case from a medical standpoint was that of Luther W. Thrasher.

The strange part of the case and the feature which proved so interesting to the physicians consulted was that about three months before he died the boy began to turn black. The nigrescence continued, and at the time of his death he was as dark as, or darker than most negroes.—Hartford Courant.

TO DO JUST AS MEN DO.

MRS. OSGOOD FINDS APT PUPILS IN PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

The Women's Club of Jersey City Now Knows All About Motions and Amendments to Motions and Amendments to Amendments.

Mrs. E. S. Oswood gave what she designated as a "parliamentary law lecture and drill" to the Women's Club in Hasbrouck Hall, Jersey City, on Thursday afternoon. The lecture was given under direction of the Educational Committee of the club. The hall was well filled with club members. Mrs. Osgood comes from Maine. She has a very commanding presence. She said she did not intend giving a lecture, but an object lesson, and then proceeded to explain the meaning and uses of motions dependent on subsidiary motions. A presiding officer, she said, is the servant of the club. She should preside, not assume to order, present the business, protect the minority, be impartial, have tact, "and Mr. Thomas B. Reed says," she added, "have a good presence." The gist of club constitutions. Mrs. Osgood said, should contained in the rules which her 7-year-old niece told her governed her club. The members were enjoined to mind their own business, and the bosses were directed not to boss around too much.

"When you take the floor," Mrs. Osgood continued in the rules which her 7-year-old niece told her governed her club. The members were enjoined to mind their own business, and the bosses were directed not to boss around too much.

"When you take the floor," Mrs. Osgood continued, "you must not think, or, at least, you must not say so. If you want to make a motion don't say, 'I think.' Or course, you think, or you wouldn't have taken the floor. And don't say, 'It seems to me,' because it does, or you wouldn't talk about it. Don't say, 'I make a move,' or 'I make a motion,' or 'I move you.' You don't do either of these things. You might find it hard sometimes to move the President. What you should say is, 'I move.'"

Mrs. Osgood then requested the ladies to imagine that they were there in response to a call for a meeting in the interest of correct dress. Carrying out that theory, she said they would suppose that Mrs. Brett had signed the call for the meeting. That made it Mrs. Brett's duty to call the meeting to order. Mrs. Brett, who is the wife of the Rev. Dr. Brett, seemed a little embarrassed, but walked over to Mrs. Osgood and asked her in a whisper, "What shall I say?" Mrs. Osgood whispered something in return, and then Mrs. Brett braced up. Tapping her fan on the back of a chair, she said in firm voice:

"The time having arrived for which the meeting has been called, you will please come to order and nominate a temporary chairman."

Mrs. Keating, Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. Cushing, and Mrs. Osgood were placed in nomination, and Mrs. Osgood, Mrs. Osgood was elected. Mrs. Brett whispered to Mrs. Osgood again and then said: "I appoint Mrs. Rohrback to escort Mrs. Osgood to the platform."

Mrs. Cushing was elected secretary.

Mrs. Osgood made a brief speech explaining the object of the meeting and impressing on her hearers the importance of correct dress.

"Now let somebody make a motion of some kind," she said, "so that we can have a drill on motions."

Mrs. Keating stood up and said, "Mrs. President."

"Mrs. Chairman, if you please," interrupted Mrs. Osgood. "I am not President."

"Mrs. Chairman, then," said Mrs. Keating. "I would like to move whether—"

"Please say, 'I move,'" said Mrs. Osgood.

"I move, then," said Mrs. Keating, "whether it is advisable to shorten the skirts four inches from the ground in rainy weather, or whether we should do it all the time?"

"Such a statement of a motion is impracticable," said Mrs. Osgood. "Never state a motion negatively and always put it as concisely as possible."

Mrs. Keating looked at the ceiling a time, "I move," she said, "that we wear walking skirts four inches from the ground."

"I second it," said Mrs. Newbury.

"Please rise and address the Chair, Mrs. Newbury," said the chairman.

"Mrs. Chairman, I second the motion," said Mrs. Newbury, rising.

Mrs. John A. Walker, the wife of a former President of the Board of Education, tried to offer an amendment to the motion, but Mrs. Osgood informed her that it could not be entertained until after the motion had been stated. The Chairman stated the motion, and then Mrs. Walker offered an amendment to make it three inches, instead of four.

Mrs. Hershey moved to amend the amendment by inserting the words, "in rainy weather."

"I am glad you said that," said Mrs. Osgood. "What you offer is not an amendment to the amendment, but an amendment to the original motion, and cannot be entertained until the amendment is disposed of." Mrs. Walker asked if it would be an amendment if the amendment to substitute two inches for three, and she was told that it would. By this time the ladies were very much interested. Mrs. Walker's amendment was lost, and then Mrs. Horsky got in her amendment about rainy weather. Mrs. E. V. E. Brinkerhoff offered an amendment to include muddy weather. She said she thought muddy weather was just as bad as rainy weather. The amendment to the amendment was carried, and without any further discussion the original motion as amended was adopted. The ladies left the meeting thoroughly convinced that they are as well informed on parliamentary law as some Congressmen.

CALMNESS WAS A FAILURE.

It Was Very Well in Theory, but It Did Not Work in Practice.

"never tell me about that Hindoo preacher again," she said impatiently, "and don't you dare to say a word in favor."

"I haven't," responded the girl in the bolero, meekly, "and I'm not going to. But what has he done to you."

"Everything. Everything which a man can do. He's upset all my plans and made me miserable for life."

"You remember that lecture on calmness? It sounded lovely, but it was all bosh. I thought that by the new theory worked out, I was so tired of worrying anyway. I've tried faithfully for a week or more, and everything unpleasant which could possibly happen has come to pass in that time.

"It began just the minute I got home from the lecture. Papa was in a hurry to get to bed that night, and the boys were just nervous with weariness. I can see that now, but at the time I couldn't see anything but my resolve to be calm. So papa hurry a bit, and we lost the train. They've been cross ever since, and I've been miserable.

"It was the same thing next morning; mamma wanted me to go down town with her, because she thought I know how she hurries, and I just knew I shouldn't be calm one minute after we started. So she had bad and our family life has been perfectly horrid for a week.

"Then one night even Charlie went back on me. We were going to the theatre, and he was waiting down in the parlor. He sent word by one of the boys for me to hurry, but I wasn't going to break my calm after all that horrid week of trying to keep it. So I dressed just as slowly as I could, and when he remonstrated with me on my way to the car I told him that he was hindering my spiritual progress. And what do you think he said? Why, 'Darn your spiritual progress. Why can't you be nice as you used to be?'

"Of course I wouldn't speak to him all evening unless he apologized, and when he apologized he was so unpleasant about it that it only made me madder. So we had a miserable evening. I wouldn't have come down town with him at all, only I didn't want the folks to know we'd quarreled. And he made me the barest speaking for over a week, and we got home again. I cried most all night.

"This morning I rode down in the same car with him, and I smiled just as sweetly as I could, but he never came near me. When we got off at the same time I made a little bit and got next to him, and I said, 'Why don't you speak to me, Charlie?' and he said, 'Because I don't want to hinder your spiritual progress.'

"Well, that made me madder than ever, and I told him he need never speak to me again, or come to see me, and just now, as I came over from the office, I saw him walking into the Saratoga with Maud Strong. And all just because I followed that blessed Hindoo's instructions and 'kept calm at all hazzards.' Charlie will never get over it, I know, and we would have been so happy together, and I wish I was dead, I certainly do." And she dopped disconsolately down on the bed and buried her face in a pillow again.—Chicago Times-Herald.

MUSIC WILL MAKE THEM WORK.

A Man Must Whistle Lively Tunes to Obtain Work With One Employer.

The cheering effect of brisk music is well known in the military service, when the fife and drum, playing lively airs, have often kept men on the march after they had grown too much exhausted to go on without it. Acting upon the same idea a large employer of labor in one of our great cities has built over each of his establishments to play almost constantly in his employment, and keeps them performing nothing but lively music.

In the same way a builder had one question which he always asked of those who applied to be employed by him into his employ. If the applicant were found to possess all the other necessary qualifications, the "boss" would ask him:—

"What are your favorite tunes?"

"Why, what do want to know that for?"

"Oh, yes."

"Well, what tunes do you generally whistle or sing?"

"Oh, there's 'Old Hundred's' and 'Auld Lang Syne,' and 'Down by the Weeping Willows,' and——"

"That's enough" the boss would exclaim, and then he would say, "Too slow, them tunes be. Good-day."

On the contrary, if the applicant answered, "Oh, I generally whistle 'Yankee Doodle,' or 'The British Grenadiers,' or something of that sort," the builder would engage him at once.

"I think you'll do! Take off your coat if you want to, and go to work."—Tid-Bits.

Bad Time for Pat.

There was once an Irishman who had a face on him that, as one of his friends once remarked, was "an offence to the landscape." Next to his homeliness his poverty was the most conspicuous thing about him. Hence the unsympathetic comment of a neighbor, "How are ye, Pat?" he asked. "Mighty bad!" was the reply. "Sure 'tis starvation that's starin' me in the face." "Is that so?" rejoined his friend, adding: "Sure it can't be very pleasant for either of ye."

Not Epidemic.

THE GREELEY VOTE.

GEN. GRANT HAD A MAJORITY OF 234 OVER THE TRIBUNE EDITOR.

Mr. Greeley Had the Nomination of Two Parties, but He Carried Only Six States—Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Texas and Georgia.

In many of its details there is a singular resemblance between the last political campaign and the Presidential contest of 1872 between Horace Greeley, the editor, and Gen. Grant, the soldier. Mr. Greeley, with many other leading Republicans, argued that the only method by which Grant could be defeated for a second term, which he sought, and perhaps a third term afterward, was to nominate an independent Republican ticket and ask the Democracy to endorse it. As a result of this movement a Liberal Republican National Convention met at Cincinnati on May 1, 1872, and adopted a platform of principles. Commendable or which anybody could conscientiously stand. At the outset there had been a general disposition to nominate Charles Francis Adams as the most available Presidential candidate to hold together the heterogeneous elements opposed to Grantism. But, through some unseen causes, Horace Greeley was chosen on the sixth ballot by a vote of 482 to 187 for Adams. Then B. Gratz Brown of Missouri was nominated for Vice-President.

The nomination of Greeley twenty-four years ago was greeted with a furor of general approval. In some of its aspects it was dramatically proper. It carried consternation into the ranks of the regulars. Greeley had a great personal following, and through his newspaper wielded a powerful influence throughout the North. It was feared that he would stampede the Republican party. Many very intelligent Republicans believed that if he were indorsed by the Democracy, Greeley's election was assured. The country awaited with breathless anxiety the action of the National Democratic Convention, which met at Baltimore on the 9th of July. Strong undercurrents of hostility was manifested toward Greeley, but the hope of success finally overcame all objections. The convention adopted the Liberal Republican platform in its entirety, and nominated Horace Greeley for President by a vote of 686 to 46. This proceeding seemed to settle every doubt as to the result. It was received with acclaim all over the land.

Horace Greeley was now the nominee of two parties for the Presidency. He possessed many elements of strength. He was an old politician of ability and experience, and read the people like a book. He immediately entered upon an energetic personal campaign. He spoke everywhere and drawing great throngs. For once the Liberal Republican-Democratic canvass was marked by the greatest enthusiasm and confidence.

As was inevitable from the first, Grant had been renominated, and was vigorously supported by the rank and file of his party. He remained at home and maintained a dignified silence. On the surface it seemed as if the Republican party was on the verge of dissolution. But little black clouds no bigger than a man's hand hung in the remote horizon of the Tribune philosopher's hopes. His strength had been overestimated. He failed to draw away the expected Republican vote.

The North Carolina election, which occurred in August, was the first important indication of public opinion. The Liberal candidate for Governor was defeated by a small majority by the regular Republican candidate, a result totally unexpected. It was a death-blow. It was followed by more important elections in Maine and Vermont, both of which went Republican by heavy majorities. West Virginia also elected a Republican Governor. These disastrous results showed that the bottom had entirely dropped out of Greeley's canvass. But Mr. Greeley continued his personal appeals for support, with unflagging zeal. The October elections in Ohio, Indiana, and Pennsylvania confirmed the verdict of the September States, although Thomas A. Hendricks, the Democratic idol, was elected Governor of Indiana by less than 1,200 plurality. The result in November was inevitable; Mr. Greeley's doom was sealed. He was simply nowhere, carrying but six States in the whole Union, viz., Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Texas, and Georgia, with 66 electoral votes. Grant carried all the others, securing 500 electoral votes, a majority of 234. His popular majorities were overwhelming: in Pennsylvania 137,000, in Massachusetts 75,000, in Illinois 56,000, in New York 52,000, in Iowa 50,000, in Michigan 43,000, and so on. Grant's majorities were greatest in the very states where Greeley had drawn the largest crowds and apparently made the strongest impression.

The cause of this tremendous defeat did not lie in Mr. Greeley himself. His personality was most satisfactory enough; many thousands who voted dead against him would have been glad to see the old man President under other circumstances. His candidacy at that time represented principles and elements extremely repugnant to the masses of the North.

She Knew the Ropes.

"I always hate to hear about a man's being henpecked," the small woman with the firm-set lips remarked. "I don't see why."

"Because I don't believe that any such thing as being henpecked exists. When a man complains of it, it generally means that he's too indolent to do his own thinking."—Washington Star.

PARK CLUB CONTESTS.

PROJECT ON FOOT TO ORGANIZE A WOMAN'S TOURNAMENT.

Several of the Fair Members Have Made Their Mark in the Various Games—Standing of Other Contests.

All of the tournaments at the Park Club are now under way and the members are having lots of excitement in the different contests. There is also a project on foot to hold a ladies' tournament for the ladies of the club, and such an event will be held if a sufficient number of entries can be secured. The Park Club has a number of ladies who can roll a good game and make scores that no one would be ashamed of. Mrs. Charles A. Reed has made a great record at the game in previous seasons and there are others who keep their scores close to the 200 mark.

The pool tournament has just been opened and only a game or two has been played as yet. The schedule is now completed and play will continue every evening.

The billiard tournament has been started and a number of games played. Only about half of the contestants have played as yet, however, but the standing of those who have is as follows:

	Handicap.	Won.	Lost.
Peck	75	3	0
Rogers	45	2	0
Lee	55	2	0
Reed	25	2	1
Alexander	35	2	1
Townsend	30	1	2
Randolph	30	1	4

Nearly all of the contestants in the bowling tournament have been out on the alleys and there have been a number of exciting games rolled. F. O. Ball, of the regular bowling team, is having everything his own way so far, and is ahead in the tournament. He is a scratch man. Of the big handicap men, Laing and Dryden are doing the best work and are keeping close behind Ball. The standing of the contestants is as follows:

	Handicap.	Won.	Lost.
F. O. Ball	scratch	9	1
Dryden	20	8	2
Laing	20	8	2
VanHoren	scratch	5	2
Dr. Thiers	scratch	5	4
Matthews	5	4	2
F. H. Ball	scratch	4	6

CYCLING COMMENT.

A better line of wheeling cannot be found in the city than at the store of the Plainfield Cycle and Sporting Goods Company. The most particular can be suited at this place, in price and quality.

The last season was such a successful one for the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company that, with the opening of this season, the company is planning to extend its field of operations. A branch store is to be opened in Westfield under the management of A. H. Barnett, the well-known bicycle man. Yesterday morning George M. MacIntyre, of the company, went to Westfield to take charge of the opening of the new store. The store is located on Main street, in the center of the town, and with the combination of a good company, a popular agent, and a reliable line of wheels, the store promises to be as successful in Westfield as it was in Plainfield.

STRIKES AND SPARES.

F. H. Ball now holds the high score at the Park Club alleys for the month of February. While rolling there the other evening, he managed to put up a score of 246. He has twice rolled over 200 in other games this month.

Accepted a Better Position.

John Garno, who has been in the employ of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company in this city as lineman and inspector for the past two years, resigned his position on Saturday to accept the position of manager of the telephone district comprising Wells River, Bradford and Littleton, in Vermont, and Whitefield, N. H., with headquarters at Wells River. Mr. and Mrs. Garno left town Saturday evening for New Hampshire, where he will assume his new duties to day.

PASSING COMMENT.

At the home of Wm. H. Pangborn, on Chatham street, there is a beautiful southern fern which has attracted the admiration of a great number of people. It is especially large and its beauty is almost unequaled.

There are two men in Plainfield who bear such a striking resemblance to each other that their friends are of en getting them mixed. The two men in question are Rev. A. E. Main, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, and H. S. Thomas, of the reportorial staff of the News. The resemblance is so great that Mr. Main is often taken for the reporter by Mr. Thomas's collegues on the News and the latter wonder why it is that Thomas has come to the lecture, or what ever it happens to be, when it was assigned to them.

A credulous person had a hard time at the cycle show last week, if he tried to believe all that was told him. Every booth had its attendants who told of the advantages of their special make of wheels and why it was so much better than any other. At one booth the visitor was told of the great advantage of a certain kind of brazing on bearings while at the very next, perhaps, he was told that the other kind was of no use whatever and the only kind was the brand condemned in the first booth. And so it was with saddles, lamps and tires, to the complete mystification of the visitor.

A dangerous place for the life and limb of travellers on the river road between Bound Brook and New Brunswick has been done away with. The Press has already noticed the unsafe condition of the bridge over Bound Brook on that road, the bridge being condemned by the county authorities and yet left open to traffic. A portion of the road including the bridge has been shut off and no more traffic allowed over it. There is another road, however, by which the traveller can reach Bound Brook which is only a trifle longer. The old bridge has been partially torn down and a new iron structure will be put up as soon as the weather permits.

MAY RESULT IN WIFE MURDER

Raritan Woman Brutally Beaten by Her Husband With an Axe.

Liba Pivirotto, known as the prettiest woman in the Italian colony at Raritan, lies in the Emergency Hospital at Somerville with her skull crushed in and seven gashes in her neck and face, which were inflicted by her husband with an axe. About four years ago Giuseppi Pivirotto deserted his wife. During his absence Mrs. Pivirotto has been earning her living as a weaver in the Raritan woolen mills.

Two weeks ago Pivirotto appeared at his wife's home and asked forgiveness for his long absence. Mrs. Pivirotto took him in and continued her occupation in the woolen mills. Pivirotto refused to work, but started in to squander his wife's savings.

At an early hour Sunday morning the woman's moans aroused her sister, who found the door locked from the inside. Pivirotto, after stealing all the money and valuables from his wife's chest, turned the key in the door and escaped by lowering himself from a second story window to the ground. The doctors believe that the woman will die.

DAVIS-TERRY MATCH A TIE

A SHOOT BETWEEN LOCAL CRACKS.

George Davis and William Terry Contest at Live Birds.

A gre t many sports of the shooting fraternity of this city went to Elizabeth Monday to witness the pigeon match at Nate Astfalk's club grounds between George Davis and William Terry, both of Westfield. The conditions of the match were that each man was to shoot at thirty-five birds for $50 a side. Quite some money changed hands, but there was not enough Davis money to cover the money Terry's friends had to wager on him as he was the favorite in the betting ring. No extra score was made, as the birds were not a very fast lot, but Mr. Terry drew the hardest birds of the two. Following is the score as it was shot, Davis winning the toss and went to the trap first:

TWO LICENSES REFUSED

COUNCIL THINKS THAT THERE IS TOO MUCH LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

J. J. Sullivan and William Wills Fail to Have Applications Granted—Alfred H. Leivers Councilman From Fourth Ward.

Now that the liquor licenses have been granted and a successor has been found to fill the place of ex-Councilman Randolph, it can reasonably be expected that the Council will settle down to some solid work. Previous to the meeting of the Council Tuesday one member remarked: "This is the meeting of the year when the Councilmen would rather stay home than to attend." And that remark was true.

It was confidently expected that the session would be a short one, but this was the time when all signs failed, for it was 11 o'clock when the meeting adjourned. In the absence of President Dumont, Councilman Westphal was chosen president pro tem. Immediately after the Council was called to order Councilman Barrows moved that a recess of ten minutes be taken. It was taken, with forty minutes added to it.

Of course it is not known exactly what the recess was for, but it is fair to presume that the members were looking for a man to take the place of Mr. Frazee, who was elected a member one week ago, and who refused to serve, and that the question of granting the licenses was discussed.

When the members reconvened Mr. Barrows called up the resignation of Councilman Frazee, which was read. No reason was given for the action, and on a motion it was accepted. Mr. Serrell then offered the name of Alfred H. Leivers to fill the vacancy. On a motion the clerk cast the ballot and Mr. Leivers was elected. The new Councilman is an expert tool maker at the Pond Tool Works, and resides at No. 70 Jefferson avenue. He was recommended by several of the political leaders. Soon after he was elected he appeared and took his seat.

The regular order of business was then taken up and a petition was received from the Town Improvement Association asking the Council to put suitable street signs where needed. The matter was referred to the proper committee and it will receive attention later.

Residents of Madison avenue asked that the electric lighting be extended to Randolph road, and residents of West Front street asked that a crosswalk be placed on the southwest side of Albert street. Both petitions were referred.

Michael Powers presented a bill of $175, together with an explanation to the effect that he had been ordered to lay certain stone walks on West Front street, and that after he had secured the material for doing the work he was informed that the property owners had been given the privilege of securing whoever they pleased to do it. He thought that the Council should re-imburse him to the amount of $175 which he claimed was due him. On motion of Mr. Frost the matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel.

At this time a number of petitions were received from different people and organizations protesting against the granting of liquor licenses. One petition was from the Woman's Temperance Aid Association signed by Mrs. G. W. Updyke. Another was from the members of the Mt. Olive Baptist church asking that no saloon be located in the vicinity of their church. Ethan Lanphear presented a petition as did also the Society of Friends. Mr. Frost presented one from the members of the W. C. T. U., signed by 1,268 names, and on his motion a number of the names were read. Mr. Frost stated that a great deal of time had been spent in getting the signers, and he thought the petition should receive careful attention. Mr. Barrows moved that all the petitions be received and filed.

The usual batch of hack and cart licenses were granted with the exception of the applications of Peter Seader, C. Guinee, John Kennedy, H. DeMott and Charles Barry.

Mr. Baker stated that the bond certificates would be ready within ten days, as it would require that much time to finish them.

Mr. Barrows made a motion that the petition of the Plainfield Sanitary Company be granted on the following conditions: That the company deposit $1,000 as an evidence of good faith that the work will be done right, within five days after the adoption of the motion. Further that the Council reserves the right to approve the permission to establish a similar plant; that the city is not obligated in any way; that the contract has to be approved by the Corporation Counsel; that the company has to defend all litigation that may be brought against them, and

SEEKING RIGHT OF WAY.

TROLLEY ROAD MAY GET THROUGH PISCATAWAY TOWNSHIP.

The Hearing Given by the Township Committee Continued Tuesday—Railway People Ask Those Interested to Inspect.

The conference between the Piscataway Township committee and the representatives of the Brunswick Traction Company at Nelson's Hotel, New Market, was continued Tuesday afternoon, when several farmers were heard in the matter. None of them really disapproved of the proposed route or the introduction of the trolley. Some of the farmers, however, wanted the committee to go so far as to compel the traction company to lay its track or tracks as the case may be on either side of the centre driveway. The company agrees to make its own road bed and keep the same in repair, build its own bridges and keep the gutter next to its track open and in repair.

The trolley people kindly invited the property owners to accompany them in stages over the proposed route on Friday of this week, so that the objective points, if any exist, may be pointed out and noted. The proposed route as laid out is from New Brunswick direct to Bound Brook, thence through a centennial road laid out in 1876 through New Market to Centre street, in Dunellen.

An ordinance relating to the matter was introduced, and it will now become necessary to have it advertised for a certain length of time before final action can be taken. Meanwhile adjournment was made to Friday next, when another meeting will be held at Judge Cowenhaven's farm near Piscataway.

Another Trolley Petition.

Dunellen and New Market seem just at this time to be the scene of much contention among the several trolley companies which are trying to pass through their quiet precincts. The latest company to apply for a franchise is the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company and representatives of the company will be granted an audience with the Piscataway Township committee at L. B. Nelson's hotel on Thursday of this week, when application will formally be made asking for a franchise to construct and maintain a trolley system from Bound Brook to Dunellen and to the Borough line on the east. The proposed route is along North avenue, the road recently laid out by the surveyors of highways, and passing directly through the new town of Lincoln.

WHERE NOBLE MEN FOUGHT

MONUMENT TO MARK THE SPOT.

Battle Ground of Bound Brook to be Made Prominent.

At a meeting of Washington Camp Ground Association at Bound Brook Tuesday it was decided to spend $150 to erect a monument to mark the spot where the battle of Bound Brook was fought.

Although very little is heard concerning this battle, yet it was perhaps the most decisive defeat which the Americans experienced in New Jersey. It was fought on April 13th, 1777, between 500 Americans under General Lincoln and over 4,000 British under Cornwallis, and resulted in the Americans being dislodged and routed after stoutly contesting every inch of ground. The monument is to be a boulder found near by, when the excavation for the Delaware and Raritan canal was made in 1832. It weighs several tons and will mark the exact position of the battle, just north of the new undergrade crossing. Upon one side will be a shield and upon the other a tablet with suitable inscriptions. The unveiling will take place upon the 13th of April next, the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the engagement.

A Small Fire.

Prompt use of a garden hose and the city water extinguished a lively little blaze in the cellar of the residence of Willard M. Miner, of 428 East Sixth street, Monday afternoon. The hot ashes heated the metal plate under the furnace and set fire to the wood floor underneath. Mr. Miner extinguished it with the stream from the garden hose before the department arrived. An alarm was sent in from box 23 by Ralph K. Miner. The damage was fully covered by insurance. The house is owned by J. T. Vail.

Do You Wonder

Why you are obliged to hold your evening paper at arm's length in order to see the print? Growing old? Not necessarily. Many people of twenty-five are obliged to do this. Come and see us and we will tell you without charge. At 107 East Front street every Thursday. Leech, Stiles & Co. Hours, 10 to 4.

COLONIAL DAMES WERE HERE IMPERSONATED.

MARTHA WASHINGTON TEAS GIVEN BY TWO CHURCH SOCIETIES LAST TUESDAY THAT WERE SUCCESSFUL.

One in the Park Avenue Baptist Church and the Other in Trinity Reformed Church, Where Sociability Was the Most Pleasant Feature—The Programmes and the Participants in Both of the Entertainments.

Martha Washington fairly owned the city last Tuesday, to judge from the numerous affairs given in her honor. There was none, had she been present, that she would have more enjoyed than the entertainmnet given in the chapel of the Park Avenue Baptist church by the members of the Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters. It was something out of the natural run of church entertainmens and was pleasing to all promoters and spectators.

The programme opened with a selection by the Ladies' Orchestra, rendered in their usual satisfactory manner. A regular little stage with all the necessary adjuncts, including footlights, had been built at the front of the room. On this was acted out a proverb, which the audience was required to guess. The proverb was: "There's many a slip 'tween the cup and the lip."

The story as acted out was exciting. Wesley Brokaw was the crabbed old man. Peppergrass, who was determined that his ward, (Mrs. Jennie Smalley), should not marry the man of her choice, Harry Coleman, (Thomas A. Cuming). The ward and the persistent lover were equally determined that the wedding should take place. Old Peppergrass hurried his ward off and they traveled afar while Coleman followed them. They happened to stop at an inn during their travels and here the principal scene of the farce was laid. They were received by the smiling proprietor, (Joseph M. Hawkins), and they sat down in the dining room. Peppergrass went out to see about some of their affairs and Coleman appeared at the other door. Peppergrass returned and the bold lover hid beneath the table for safe keeping. Peppergrass and his ward ate their dinner, while the latter quietly passed choice bits to her lover under the table. The maid, (Miss Adelaide Runyon), appeared to tell Peppergrass that there was some trouble over the baggage and he went out to investigate. Meanwhile the ward and Coleman departed by the back door for the nearest clergyman's house and were married. Then they returned to brave the displeasure of Peppergrass, who finally relented and all ended happily.

A recitation was delightfully rendered by Miss Rita Pond. Then the orchestra gave another selection. The tableau, "The Explanatory Letter," was given by Charles Hayes. The only character in the tableau was a college boy, who had written home for money to buy a wheel. He received an answer that the crops were poor but that his mother sent her spinning wheel so he might take his wheel and go out for a spin.

Mrs. Jennie Smalley was the principal figure in the next tableau, "The Old Oaken Bucket," and a quartette, composed of Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Miss Adeline Runyon, W. S. Lowry and Thos. A. Cuming, sang the selection of that name from behind the scenes.

The next part of the entertainment was a charade. The word acted out was "antidote." George Eckhardt appeared as the invalid and Miss Elma Runyon as his aunt, who was keeping house for him. His cousin, (Mrs. W. S. Lowry), came to visit them and finally proved that the illness of the invalid was nervousness, and her lively actions completely drove it out of his mind. G. W. V. Moy was the doctor.

A recitation by Miss Pond followed, and then another selection by the orchestra. The programme closed with the tableau, "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" The old couple of the tableau were represented by Wesley D. Brokaw and Miss Myra Runyon. The quartette sang the song of that name.

Everybody then adjourned to the parlors where ice cream and cake were served and a period of sociability was spent.

The committee from the Circle that arranged this delightful affair consisted of Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Mrs. Jennie Smalley and Miss Jennie Jeffers. They were greatly assisted in their efforts by J. M. Hawkins and Thomas A. Cuming, who made themselves generally useful in the preparation of the entertainment.

Many of the waitresses were in the costume of the eighteenth century and wore their hair powdered.

—The competitive drill between the members of Somerset Council, of this city, and Monroe Council, of Newark, will probably take place in this city March 19th.

It was a national affair and Dame Martha Washington was the reigning heroine of the hour. It is the custom of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church to hold a sociable once a month. Last Tuesday the sociable for this month was held and it was made a Martha Washington tea in honor of the holiday just past.

The first part of the evening was spent in enjoying the intellectual tea in the shape of a programme of recitations and instrumental and vocal selections. The members of the reception committee were on duty near the door and the new comers were cordially welcomed.

At the opening of the programme all united in singing several stanzas of "America." Then followed a duet by Miss Nellie Winckler on the piano and Dyckman Winckler on the violin. Miss Hoagland, dressed in the costume of a century ago, recited "When I First Learned to Skate." Miss Grane sang a soprano solo and was followed by Miss Mary A. Luckey who gave a very enjoyable recitation. Horace J. Martin and his two sons gave a vocal trio. Miss Hoagland recited again and Miss Grant also sang. Another recitation by Miss Luckey was next on the programme which concluded with a violin and piano duet by Dyckman Winckler and Miss Nellie Winckler. All the numbers on the programme were well rendered and thoroughly enjoyed by those in attendance as was shown by their hearty applause.

Then, while the guests gathered in groups for a social chat, tea cruller and other old-fashioned refreshments were served by members of the society in eighteenth century costume. The ladies assisting were Miss Alice Rose, Mrs. F. C. Adams, Miss Lillian A. Force, Mrs. David Richards, Miss Helen Bogert, Miss Crissie Smalley and Miss Nellie Fenner. On the tea table, which was arranged in one of the alcoves to the basement where the sociable was held, were many relics of the time of Washington or before.

The room was decorated for the occasion with many American flags of all sizes. The table was somewhat decorated also.

The sociable was arranged by the social committee of the society which consists of Miss Rose, chairman, Miss Crissie M. Smalley, Mrs. F. C. Adams, Miss Edith DuBois and Elmer Garretson. The reception committee was also on duty. It is composed of the following: E. E. Anthony, H. W. Marshal, Mrs. A. J. Moore, Miss Mary Van Fleet and Miss Viola Huff.

KNIGHTS WERE BUT PIRATES.

Dr. Riggs Thus Characterizes the Chivalrous Men of Medieval Times.

University Extension has hitherto been confined to the east side of the town, the lectures being given in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, but Tuesday there was begun a series of University Extension lectures in the chapel of Irving School, West Fourth street and Monroe avenue, especially meant for the dwellers on the westside.

The first lecture was delivered by Dr. James F. Riggs, of Rutgers College, so well known to all Plainfield University Extension students, and dealt with "Chivalry and the Crusades." Dr. Riggs was seen at his best in this lecture; his style always brilliant, entertaining and racy, was on this occasion often witty and humorous, and full of bright illustrative anecdotes.

In beginning his lecture, Dr. Riggs described the medieval knight and the strange condition of society which was necessary for the existence of such a remarkable institution as chivalry, an institution which would not be tolerated six months in one of our strong modern governments. In those early times when society was rough and brutal enough, the best of it was represented by the knights and the priests.

KICKED INTO A FEED-BOX.

A Woman's Miraculous Escape From Serious Injury by a Horse.

Mrs. Somerset, of Sycamore street was kicked by Dr. Berg's horse yesterday while she was performing some work about the stable. The blow threw Mrs. Somerset a considerable distance and when she alighted she found herself in a feed-box. As soon as she learned that she was not injured she arose from her position and returned to her house. She escaped with a slight scratch on the head.

WHAT WOMEN HAVE DONE

TO BEAUTIFY AND MAKE DESIRABLE THE TOWN OF CRANFORD.

Mrs. Bates, President of the Cranford Association, Tells Plainfield Women the Secret of Their Success in the Work.

The regular meeting of the Town Improvement Association was held at the Y. M. C. A. building Tuesday afternoon. In the absence of the president, Mrs. Pierre Mali, the secretary, Mrs. S R. Krom was chosen to fill the position temporarily. The report of the treasurer showed that there is at present $30.23 in the treasury, and that during the past month $55 has been expended.

Mrs. Bates, the president of the Village Improvement Association, of Cranford, gave an informal talk in which she told some very interesting things concerning the work accomplished by her town. She said that the disposal of garbage, postoffice idlers, the condition of the sidewalks and the state of things in general about the railroad station, were the four principal reasons for the formation of the association, and since the organization the members had succeeded in making an improvement in whatever they undertook. At present they have a membership of eighty women and twelve men, while they have an auxiliary composed of school children with a membership of seventy-five. Among the things which the association is trying to do at present is to secure a new station at the railroad, a new school house with all the modern improvements, and many other things of smaller importance.

Mrs. Smith, a member of the Montclair Association, was present and related some of the interesting things about the work of that association.

Before the meeting closed the members decided to invite Miss Griffen, the president of the Children's Association, of Cranford, also the vice president, to address a meeting of children to be held in this city at an early date.

The committee on trees and parks would like to receive contributions of flowers, and they desired the city papers to make a plea for them. The flowers will be used at convenient places to beautify unsightly spots about town.

MORE LAWYERS.

Two Plainfield Students Successful in Passing Examinations.

Another batch of attorneys-at-law was turned out at the Trenton court, Tuesday, and two Plainfield law students were included in the list. They were Walter G. Williams, of the law offices of S. S. Swackhamer, and Isaac P. Runyon, of the law offices of Harry C. Runyon. Williams was admitted under the five counselors act and had to take two examinations, while the others only took two. Williams will probably remain in the law offices of Mr. Swackhamer for the present. He will try his first case this afternoon in Justice Thomas' court at the hearing of Glazier for assault and battery. Williams will represent the complainant, Coriell. The lawyer for the other side will be City Judge DeMeza.

Mr. Runyon will go to Somerville, where he will go into partnership with Fred A. Pope.

S. S. Swackhamer took his examinations for counselorship and was successful.

A Farewell Reception.

It is the custom of the Temperance Cadets of the St. Mary's Parochial School to give a farewell reception to each of their members as he becomes old enough so that he has to leave the school. A farewell reception was given to John Butscher Monday evening in the school building. A programme was given in the first part of the evening and consisted of a temperance song, a recitation "Taste It Not" by John Barry, a solo and chorus "God Bless You," violin and piano selection by John Madden and Tom Mack. All present than partook of a bountiful repast that had been prepared. At the conclusion of which John Butscher made his valedictory address, Edward Lynch one of the oldest of the alumni of the society, made a few remarks, song by Thomas McCoy and Theodore Shirley and dances by Joseph and John Conway were then given. Father Smyth brought the reception to a close with a few appropriate remarks.

Glad to Get Back Home.

The two New Market runaway boys, Albert Johnson and Daniel Moody, the account of whose disappearance was exclusively told in The Press, have returned. They set forth with flying colors to find fame and fortune in the great city of New York but they returned quietly Saturday evening, glad enough to enjoy the comforts of home again. They were willing to remain at home and attend school as usual and have had all they want of that kind of adventure for the present.

CORPSE LAID ALL NIGHT.

NOW THOUGHT THAT MICHAEL McCARTY WAS KILLED MONDAY NIGHT.

Did Not go Home at Night as Was His Custom and His Family Did Not Know His Whereabouts Until Word Came of Death.

Certain facts have come to light which go to prove that Michael MacCarty, who was found dead in the cellar of the residence of Mrs. J. H. Ackerman, on West Seventh street, with his skull crushed, did not meet his death Tuesday morning as was thought at that time. The accident evidently happened the evening before.

The last seen of MacCarty was when he went into the residence of Marion S. Ackerman, of West Seventh street, to look after the fire and then went over to the other house to look after the fire there. It is his custom to look after the fires and then go home for supper. His family awaited him but he did not come and somebody went to the house to see if he was there. The house was locked and no one came to the door when the bell was rung. It was therefore supposed that he had left the house. His family waited anxiously for him but he did not appear. In the morning came the news of the finding of his body.

It would thus seem that he met his death Monday evening, and that his body lay there all night until found by the plumbers in the morning. The doctors say that death was instantaneous and that his proximity to the furnace probably accounted for the warmth of the body when it was found.

County Physician Westcott came to Plainfield Tuesday and granted permission to have the body removed and interred. There seems to be no doubt but that he met his death through a false step when going down the stairs in the dark.

A POST-LENTEN WEDDING.

John Hillier Hart to Take a Wife at Orange Next Tuesday.

One of the notable weddings of the post-Lenten season will take place in Trinity church, Newark, Tuesday afternoon, March 3d, at 2:30, when John Hillier Hart, a member of the firm of Hillier & Co., and Miss Adeline Corie Martin, of Orange, will be united in marriage.

The bride is a well known public school instructor, while the groom is considered to be one of Newark's best business men. He is also well known in this vicinity where he has a host of friends.

The wedding will no doubt be one of the most largely attended in Newark for sometime past, as there has been nineteen hundred invitations issued. Receptions will be held on Wednesday, April 21st and 28th, at No. 68 Carnegie avenue, East Orange, from 5. to 9 p. m.

FOUGHT ABOUT A TICKET.

A Dispute on the Tracks Ends in Arrest and Punishment.

The trouble was over a ticket. VanNest said that it was his and that Kearns tried to take it away, while Kearns claimed that he only wanted to look at it. They quarreled. Detective Blackford saw them fighting on the North avenue station platform last Tuesday and promptly arrested them both. They were locked up and arraigned before the City Judge this morning. Both culprits were young men. One was Joseph and the other Henry Van Nest. They admitted that they had been scrapping over the cause already mentioned. Kearns has been up in the city court three times already. He was sent to the county jail for twenty days as he could not pay the $5 fine. VanNest paid a $3 fine.

Commencing With Children.

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" is surely true in temperance work, as in everything else. The Loyal Temperance Legion, the children's temperance society organized some time ago by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city, has been doing unusually good work this winter, under the efficient direction of Miss Eda Beckman as leader and Mickham Beckman as secretary. The meeting this week was held Tuesday instead of Monday, the latter day being a holiday, and a special programme was arranged. Rev. A. M. Phelps, of the Plainfield Business College, gave a very interesting talk on "The effects of alcohol on the stomach," illustrated by charts showing the condition of the stomach in health and under the effects of alcoholic drinks.

—The jury in the Davison trial at Elizabeth, Tuesday, brought in a verdict for acquittal. Davison was accused of breaking into cars at Cranford and the case was tried sometime ago, the jury failing to agree. The case was tried again with the result above mentioned.

A FARCE AND A DANCE

SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN BY IONA COUNCIL.

'A Precious Pickle" Was the Title of the Farce and it was Given in a Funny Way—Other Part of the Programme.

The entertainment and dance given by Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas, last week, was one of the most successful ever held and the large rooms were not sufficient to accommodate all that attended. A great surprise was given the members of the council, for a fine new hardwood floor had been laid especially for the occasion and additional pleasure was given those who danced.

The entertainment was opened with an address of welcome by Mrs. A. J. Stiglitz, chairman of the committee. This was followed with a selection by the orchestra, which preceded some funny remarks by William A. West phal, whose talent in this direction is well-known.

A farce entitled "A Precious Pickle" was then given by the following persons: Mrs. A. J. Stiglitz, Mrs. Fred Westphal, Mrs. Radin, Mrs. Holstein, Mrs. Dodwell, Miss Dodwell and Miss Pullin. The acting brought forth great applause, as did also the selections by the "Juvenile Quartette." W. R. Mattox gave some of his best recitations, and the programme closed with selections by jubilee singers.

The floor was then cleared for dancing which was continued until an early hour this morning. Each gentleman present was given a "pipe of peace," as a token of remembrance. Those who took part in the farce, together with Mrs. Stephany, composed the committee having charge of the affair.

A BIRTHDAY SURPRISE.

Friends of Miss Minnie Nischwitz Gave Her a Pleasant Time.

A pleasing birthday surprise was tendered to Miss Minnie Nischwitz at her home on Manning avenue last week. The affair was arranged by her younger friends who gathered at the home of Harry Joseph, previous to the taking of their friend by surprise. The evening was passed in playing the usual games, and after refreshments were served the young guests departed for home wishing their hostess many happy returns of the day. Those who were present included Clyde Slater, Emma Powers, Minnie Nischwitz, Nettie Bauersachs, Hazell Martin, Clara Martin, Carrie Krewson, Mary Woolston, Harry Joseph, Willie Emmons, Arthur Humble, Irving Harned, Edward Schroppe, Leonard Mantz, Willie Nischwitz, H. Nischwitz

MARRIED AT ST. MARY'S.

Nuptial Knot of Miss Annie Kiely and Joseph Galbraith.

The marriage of Miss Anna Kiely, of this city, and Joseph Galbraith, coachman for E. S. Hooley, of Rockview avenue, was celebrated Thursday afternoon at 4:30 at St. Mary's church. Rev. Father Murphy officiated in the presence of a large assemblage of people. Miss Mary Kiely, sister of the bride, was bridemaid, and Dennis Galbraith, brother of the groom, was best man.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the groom, No. 521 South Second street, which was attended by a large number of people. Mr. and Mrs. Galbraith received many costly presents.

European Tourists Met Again.

Twenty-four of the same party who spent last summer so pleasantly together in a tour through Europe, under the guidance of A. V. D. Hoagman, gathered at the home of one of their number, Mulford F. Estil, of Grove street. The evening passed very pleasantly. There were guests present from Elizabeth, Raritan, Jersey City, Brooklyn, Somerville, Wayne Junction, Flemington and Plainfield. Mr. Honeyman and his wife were also present.

Reporter Thomas Did Not Appear.

A meeting of the Consistory of the German Reformed church was held last Thursday, to which Rev. Mr. Hauser and H. S. Thomas, of the reportorial staff of the News, were invited. The object of the meeting was to learn who was really responsible for the erronious statements made in the News sometime ago, regarding the union of the German churches. Mr. Thomas failed to put in appearance and the meeting was then adjourned.

New Methodist Parsonage.

The parsonage for the pastor of the First M. E. church will be located after April 1st, at the corner of Central avenue and Seventh street, the property which adjoins that of James Clark. The present parsonage occupied by Dr. Barnes will be retained until that time.

"Caste" for the Hospital.

Good seats are still for sale at the box office of Music Hall for the play of "Caste." People in Plainfield will be glad of the opportunity to contribute 50c., 75c., or $1 each year to the hospital. Here is a chance to do this and get your money's worth of fun.

OF OLD QUAKER DESCENT

DEATH OF MRS. BURROWS TAKES AWAY A NOTED WOMAN.

She Was Born in Philadelphia Ninety Years Ago and Was Among the First of the Public School Educators.

The death of Mrs. Martha Hallowell Burrows, aged 90 years, occurred last week at the home of Mrs. Martin, No. 11 Grove street, where she had been residing for some time. During the past three years Mrs. Burrows had been declining in health and her death was the result of old age.

Mrs. Burrows belonged to old Penn Quaker stock and was born in Philadelphia in 1807. In her early girlhood days she was among the first public school educators, and at the age of 17 she was a teacher before the public school was established in Philadelphia. At that time public education was carried on by private enterprise. Later she became a teacher in one of the most important grammar schools in Philadelphia, and was identified in this work for forty years.

Mrs. Burrows moved to this city about twenty three years ago, and has always been an active woman, until several years ago. She was a faithful member of the First Baptist church and was closely identified with its interests. Her husband, Joseph Burrows, was a soldier in the War of 1812 and died in 1892. He never lived in Plainfield.

Mrs. Burrow leaves three sons to mourn her loss. In 1890 she fell down stairs, and since that time she has been unable to get about very much.

RESCUE OF ERRING ONES.

WHAT SALVATIONISTS ARE DOING.

Homes Established for Those Who Desire to Lead Better Lives.

Last week at the Salvation Army Ensign Parsons took as his subject, "Rescue Work." The speaker is an interesting one, and he stated many things which will give an idea as to the amount of work being done in this department.

In the Army there are 74 homes for fallen women, 17 homes for ex-criminals, and 10 homes for waifs and strays, while there are 82 slum posts. The number of fallen women that passed through the homes last year was 3,500, of these eighty per cent were restored to lives of virtue. There were 1,200 ex-criminals who passed through the homes provided for them, of these from sixty to eighty per cent were restored to lives of honesty.

A slum officer can be supported at the rate of $12 per month. A fallen girl can be rescued at a cost of $15, and a rescue home for twenty five girls can be kept up, in addition to the work of the girls, for $100 per month.

It is the intention of Commander Booth-Tucker to make rapid strides during 1897. He desires to open up additional rescue homes for three hundred women, also additional prison-gate homes for three hundred ex-criminals, and fifty additional slum posts.

NEW DEPUTY FOR A LABOR UNION.

Randolph Marsh Relieved as an Officer of the Masons Union.

The members of Bricklayers and Masons Union, No. 14, met in the Elkwood Building, last Thursday with president Theodore Mas n in the chair. Under the head of new business Thomas Davenport was installed as deputy to succeed Randolph Marsh who has held the office successively for the past twelve years, but had now tendered his resignation for various reasons. Mr. Marsh has been a member of the organization from its birth and was for eight years its corresponding secretary. He is now placed on the honorary list of members.

The union now has 50 members in good standing, and at the meeting last night night, two appren tices were taken in.

A Lesson at First Hands.

Every boy has read with interest the adventures of Dr. Kane in the in the Arctic regions. Thursday night, February 25th, every Plainfield boy will have the chance to hear a man whose exploits in the Far North have cast the adventures of Kane completely in the shade. The story Lieutenant Peary has to tell is a thrilling one, full of exciting adventure, and burning with interest that always surrounds deeds recently accomplished. The chance to hear Peary should be embraced by every student, boy or girl, for one will learn more of the geography of the extreme northern hemisphere by the hour and three-quarters spent in Peary's presence than can be gained by weeks of close attention to text-books. The low price of tickets places this opportunity within the reach of every one.

Progressive Heart Party.

A progressive heart party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Runyon, in the Jackson building, last Friday. The first prizes were won by Mrs. George Firstbrook and H. Drapton. There were three tables. The game occupied most of the evening and was followed by a social time.

VERDICT FOR DAMAGES.

MISS ADELLA PHELPS AWARDED $3,000 DAMAGES.

The Action Against R. O. Howell Ended in Court Last Friday By Jury Deciding in Favor of Plaintiff.

The most important case in the Union County circuit court, Thursday was the suit for damages brought by Miss Adella Phelps, of Watchung avenue, against R. O. Howell, the North avenue grocer.

The suit was for $5 000 for injuries alleged to have been received by the plaintiff in a collision with one of Howell's delivery wagons. The claim was based on the alleged fact that Miss Phelps was negligently run into by the wagon. The defendant claimed that there was plenty of room for Miss Phelps to pass and that the accident was caused through her own carelessness and not through that of the driver.

The story of the accident was told in the Press at the time. It occurred at the corner of North and Watchung avenues one evening about 5:30 o'clock last fall. The wagon was being driven toward the store and Miss Phelps, who is the daughter of Rev. A. H. Phelps, principal of the Plainfield Business College, was riding the other way on her wheel. In the collision she was thrown off and seriously injured. She was confined to the house for a number of weeks and the injuries were claimed to be very paintul.

Dr. M. B. Long, of this city, and Miss Mary Wright, M. D., of New York, testified as to her condition and the extent of her injuries. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps were put on the stand to tell how long she has been confined to be bed and to the house. The principal witnesses for the plaintiff were two boys, who claimed to have seen the accident. One was named Runyon and the other Arthur Whitlock. They testified that they had seen a box drop out of the wagon just before the accident occurred and that the driver was looking out of the back of the wagon for it when he ran down Miss Phelps. They also said the wagon was on the left of the road at the time. Frank Vosseller was sworn to counteract the testimony of one of the witnesses for the other side, Ralph Tolles. Vosseller said that he had heard Tolles say that he had not seen the accident at all.

Miss Phelps was represented in court by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh.

Miss Phelps also told her story which was, in substance, that she had been run down by the wagon.

The witnesses for the defence were: Miss Elizabeth Dunn, Miss Gardiner, Ralph Tolles, Ernest Duffy and Thos. Robinson, the driver. All were eyewitnesses of the accident and they testified that the wagon was as far to the right as the sidewalk would allow it to go. It was also claimed that Miss Phelps had struck the horse just behind the shoulder, showing that she must have run into the horse instead of being run into.

Counsellor William K. McClure was the attorney for Mr. Howell in the case.

After both lawyers had summed up, the case was adjourned until this morning when the jury was charged and retired.

The case was tried before Judge McCormick and a twelve-men jury.

The jury in the case came into court this afternoon with a verdict for $3,000.

M'VEY'S HOTEL ANNEX.

Plainfield's Well-Known Boniface Seeking Larger Quarters.

J. H. McVey, of North avenue, who owns the building at 132 North avenue, has started the work of fitting it up for a hotel annex, and when it is completed it will have accommodations for thirty or forty people. This course has been adopted by Mr. McVey for the reason that he is unable to accommodate all his customers at the restaurant building. The new quarters will be fitted up in the latest style with all the modern improvements. This will allow Mr. McVey to provide for his regular boarders at the original place.

THE CECELIA SONGSTERS.

Under the Direction of E. J. Fitzhugh They Rehearsed.

About forty women have joined the Cecelia Club and they met Thursday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. for the first time. E. J. Fitzhugh, the conductor, was highly gratified with the excellent attendance. It is expected that there will be about fifteen more members to come in. This is necessary that the financial part of the affair may be a success. The afternoon was devoted to the rehearsal of part songs, and those present entered into the work with a will. Another meeting will be held at an early date when the organization will be completed.

Nathan Lewis, of West Eighth street, is home for a few days from Stevens School at Hoboken as the school is closed on account of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Stevens Institute.

FOR FAME AND FORTUNE.

TWO NEW MARKET BOYS RUN AWAY FNOM HOME.

One Wants to be a Sailor and the Other a Circus Rider—Their Heads Full of Fancies—Their Whereabouts Unkown.

With visions of fortunes to be secured for the asking, two New Market boys have gone forth from their homes to see the world and incidentally to become rich and famous, one as a sailor and the other as a circus performer. They left Thursday morning and the parents of the missing ones are greatly disturbed over their prolonged absence.

Albert Johnson and Daniel Moody are two lads from New Market, sixteen years of age, and of reputable families. They have always been well thought of in the community although Johnson once ran away and found employment on a tug boat in New York. He tired of the life and returned home.

Of late, the boys have been coming home with their heads filled with stories of the wonderful chances to be found by a young man in New York, and how fine positions could be had for the asking.

Thursday morning young Moody rose earlier than usual, bid his mother good-bye several times, which was unusual for him to do, and said that he was going to school. He was next seen at Johnson's house with a little rifle over his shoulder. Albert Johnson also told his mother that he was going to school, and the two lads started off. They made their way down the tracks of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and told two other lads whom they met that they were going to runaway.

Both the lads were dressed in their school clothes and Moody wore no overcoat. He had about $6 in money with him while Johnson had about a dollar. The money they took was their savings.

Young Johnson's father is very ill with bronchitis and has just passed the critical point. The news is being kept from him. Moody's parents went to New York, last evening, to search for their son, but no trace of him was found.

TRUSTEES ELECTED.

A Step in the Direction of a Chapel for the East Third Street Mission.

The meeting held at the East Third Street Mission last Thursday was for the purpose of electing five trustees so that the work of erecting the new chapel could proceed.

Deacon R. K. Case, of the First Baptist church, called the meeting to order L. W. Randolph was chosen chairman and Irving L. Brady was selected as secretary. In calling the meeting to order, Mr. Case reviewed the work of the mission since it was started sometime ago in a tent on the same street where it is now located. He complimented the workers for the able and efficient service they had accomplished for the Master, and he urged them to do still more.

The following trustees were then elected: R. K. Case, L. W. Serrell, Sr., C. W. McCutchen, Irving L. Brady and L. W. Randolph. This concluded the business of the evening, and the meeting then adjourned.

FRISBIE PROVED THE CHICKEN.

Laughable Mock Trial Held at Mt. Zion A. M. E. Church.

The mock trial at the Mt. Zion A. M. E. Church, last Thursday, proved a great success. Hank Frisbie's chicken made its first public appearance and was, by a verdict of the court, returned to its owner who conclusively proved to be Frisbie. Lemuel Perry and H. A. Freeman, the attorneys for the plaintiff, conducted his case in an able manner and succeeded in tangling up the defendant in his testimony so badly that he was unable to straighten it out again. The defendant was Charles Ward and he tried to make out that the chicken in question flew over a mile from Frisbie's house to his. His attorneys, Charles Henry and Alfred White, tried to clear him from the charge but their efforts were of no avail.

The trial was replete with exciting incidents and everybody had a good time. Frisbie did a number of tricks with the chicken to prove that it was his own. A jury of twelve men heard the testimony and soon brought in a verdict for the plaintiff and the judge, William Grobes, and his associates, Grant Cannon and George Anderson, ordered that the chicken be turned over to its rightful owner.

Second Anniversary of Marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Williams celebrated the second anniversary of their marriage at their home on Madison avenue, last Friday, in company with a few of their friends and relatives. The evening passed enjoyably with games and a social time. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Smalley, Mr. and Mrs. Will F. Williams, Mrs. A. M. Runyon, Mrs. Julia L. Force, Miss Ada Chandler, Miss Mabelle Force, Miss Lottie Montrose, Miss Clara Williams and Miss Florence Williams.

WIFE SLAYER CAUGHT.

PIVOROTTO RETURNED TO THE SCENE OF HIS CRIME

Left a Note in the House Boasting of His Deed and Was Captured After a Chase—Now in the County Jail.

Guiseppe Pivorotto, who early last week tried to murder his wife, Lena, while she was asleep at her home in Raritan, and then escaped, was captured last evening after an exciting chase, and is now in the county jail at Somerville. His wife is in the Emergency Hospital with her skull crushed and her throat gashed in several places, and there is slight hope of her recovery.

Pivorotto returned to the house yesterday and left a note saying that he had taken eleven months to come from California to Raritan to kill his wife. He said he knew he did not succeed, and also said he would be more successful in the next attempt. Her brother, Frank Antonio, heard that Pivorotto was at the house, and he secured the assistance of a constable and others, all armed.

They came upon him late in the afternoon while he was trying to conceal himself in some underbrush. He tried to escape, and was being overtaken when he made a stand, drew a revolver and threatened to use it if he was molested. Constable Hale and Peter Cosbery also drew pistols and succeeded in overawing Pivorotto. They then handcuffed him and brought him to Somerville, and Justice Suthphin committed him to jail. He admitted that he tried to kill his wife, but would not tell why.

THREE MURDERERS THERE.

MEN-KILLERS IN SOMERSET COUNTY.

County Jail Harbors a Trio of Desperate Men.

Francis Dilucci, who was arrested in Brooklyn recently for the murder of a fellow-countryman in a shanty near Basking Ridge, was brought to the county jail at Somerville Thursday extradition papers having been granted by Governor Black of New York. He makes the third murderer now confined in that jail. Elmer Clawson and Jacob Johnson are both under sentence of death, but their cases are under appeal to the higher courts.

Clawson is a mere boy, who called Harry Hodges, a farmer, to his doorway one morning and deliberately shot him dead. Johnson is the local colored preacher who was convicted of killing Ann Rogers in the woods along the Raritan river.

BIG FIRM'S SPRING OPENING.

Handsome Souvenirs to Be Distributed at Amos H. Van Horn's.

Few New Jersey business concerns date boast of a bigger share of pluck and enterprise than that possessed by the Newark firm of Amos H. Van Horn, Ltd., at 73 Market street. For the past year hardly a month has gone by without some material improvements in their already capacious store, which contains over 21½ acres of floor space, well covered with reliable and latest styles of furniture, carpetings and stoves.

To make their thirty-seventh spring opening (beginning week of February 23d) of unusual interest, the Messrs. Van Horn have not only added an unusual number of new designs to their various stocks, but have made extensive alterations from top floor to basement. The basement itself has been transformed into the handsomest sales rooms in the city. It is brilliantly illuminated by electric light, and both walls and ceiling are painted white. Exceptionally handsome souvenirs will be presented on the occasion of the opening, to which, it seems, everyone is cordially invited.

DIED VERY SUDDENLY.

George L. Taynor Succumbed to Heart Trouble Last Week.

The death of George L. Taynor occurred very suddenly last Friday at his home, No. 36 Warren street. For some time past he had not been very well but nothing serious was thought of his condition. At 9 o'clock he was sitting by the stove and was feeling quite well. One hour later he went to bed and three-quarters of an hour after he died, the cause of which is attributed to heart disease.

Mr. Taynor was born in Washington ville seventy years ago, and for many years he carried on the blacksmith business. He was well known in this vicinity and was considered a good citizen. During the past few years he had done very little and lived in retirement at his home. The funeral services will be held next Monday afternoon from the house at 2:30.

Trolley Up the Mountain Sure.

The North Plainfield Township Committee and Chandler W. Riker, representing the Street Railway Company met together last week and the committee agreed to widen the roadway for the construction of the trolley road to Washingtonville if the company would have the track laid by the first of May. This was agreed to and the work on the same will be started immediately.

THE YOUTHS ENTERTAIN.

EACH ONE DID THEIR PART TO MAKE A PLEASANT EVENT.

Dialogues and Recitations Formed the Principal Features of the Programme—Audience Applauded Them Vigorously.

The youthful members of the Sunday-school of the First Presbyterian church entertained their friends in the chapel of the church, last Thursday, in a very delightful manner. The entertainment was arranged by a committee from the Sunday-school with Superintendent Lounsbury as chairman. An enthusiastic audience filled most of the seats and applauded vigorously the different selections.

Two selections, "Through the lonely vale," and "Sweet and low" were first rendered by a Sunday school choir composed of Misses Mildreth Ulrich, Beatrice Miller, Grace McLean, Ethel Laing, Florence Morrison, Mary Line, Emma Line, Lena Hammond, Winnie Hammond, Ada Dunham, Clara Dunham, Nora Schenck, and Mamie Dunham. A humorous recitation was given by Miss Edna Burr. The next soloist was rather youthful but she sang her little selection very sweetly.

A recitation by ten little girls and boys was entitled "Washington," each one bringing a letter to spell the word and reciting a few lines about the "father of his country." A flag drill by the same young people followed. A violin duet was given by William McKillop and Miss Charlotte Carr.

Betsy Bobbitt's opinions on the women's suffrage question were rehearsed in a dialogue. The part of Samantha was taken by Miss Mildred Ulrich, who spoke with the decision credited to that well-known character. Betsy Bobbitt (Miss Beatrice Miner) appeared in all her array, wearing a hat of wonderful construction. Josiah Allen was represented by Harold Luckey in a most thrilling manner and he gave vent to his opinions on the subject with the required sours. A solo was then sung by Miss Charlotte Messersmith.

The wonderful experiences of his friend Bill were told by Edward Overton in a very pleasing manner. This was Mr. Overton's first appearance on the stage. Next came a piano duet by the Misses Josephine Petrie and Margaret Alexander. A recitation by Miss Leah Hammond, the choir sang a medley which brought the programme to a close.

PARLOR ENTERTAINMENTS.

Lectures to be Given in Private Residences During Lent.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall announces a course of parlor entertainments to be given on Friday afternoons in Lent. Mrs. Hall will open the series herself with a number of humorous sketches and stories of her own composition, under the title of "The Laughing Philosopher," at the home of Mrs. Francis Wood, Franklin place, on March 19th. The four succeeding entertainments will be given by Miss Caroline Minturn Hall, Mrs. Hall's daughter, who has recently returned from a three years visit to Paris. Here Miss Hall made a special study of the works of the classic French dramatists under the tuition of graduates of the Institute of Van Horn have not only added an unusual number of new designs to their various stocks, but have made extensive alterations from top floor to basement. The basement itself has been transformed into the handsomest sales rooms in the city. It is brilliantly illuminated by electric light, and both walls and ceiling are painted white. Exceptionally handsome souvenirs will be presented on the occasion of the opening, to which, it seems, everyone is cordially invited.

On March 19th, she will speak of "Molliere" at the home of Mrs. Bowland Cox, West Seventh street.

On March 26th this subject will be continued at the home of Mrs. Laurence Myers, East Front street.

April 2d, "Racine and Camelle" will be the subject, at the home of Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers.

April 9th, the matinees given annually at the Odeon, in Paris, will be described, at the home of Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, 107 Crescent avenue.

The patronesses of the course are, in addition to the ladies already mentioned, Mrs. Warren Ackerman, Mrs. John T. Baker, Mrs. Clapp, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Miss Kenyon, Mrs. Robert Lowry, Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen, Mrs. John Doull Miller, Mrs. David W. Pond, Miss Tweedy and Mrs. Orville T. Waring.

BURNED BEFORE COMPLETED.

A New House Destroyed by Fire Early Thursday Morning.

It was exactly 2 a. m. Thursday when an alarm of fire was sent in from Box 68, South and Woodland avenues, by Patrolman Cash. The fire started in a new house, not quite completed, owned by Adam Hueber, and located on Leland avenue, and when the officer discovered the fire it was well under way. Considering the distance, the department arrived quickly, but owing to the condition of the streets it was almost impossible to reach the house. In addition to this hindrance there was no hydrant near enough to be of any service, and in consequence the structure was entirely consumed. The property was insured. All the apparatus responded except No. 1 hose wagon. The firemen did the best they could, but were unable to save the house.

CANNOT CARRY PARCELS

PERSONAL BAGGAGE DEFINED BY THE SUPREME COURT.

The Point Held That a Passenger Cannot Carry Groceries as Personal Baggage While Riding on a Commuters Ticket.

A decision rendered Thursday by the Supreme Court may have a bearing on the contention of the advocates before the Legislature of Mr. Gledhill's Bicycle Baggage bill, that bicycles are baggage. The court decided that packages of groceries are not "personal baggage." Thomas Bullock, of Dover, was riding on the Lackawanna on a commuter's ticket, indorsed as entitling the holder to personal baggage only, when his packages of groceries were taken from him by the trainmen and put in the express car. He obtained in the lower courts a verdict of $1,000 for damages.

Judge VanSyckel held that Bullock was bound by the endorsement on his ticket, and that the packages of groceries could not be considered as personal baggage. The Court held, however, that the trainmen did wrong in taking Bullock's packages away from him, and they should have put him off the train if he refused to go voluntarily. Bullock had no claim to punitive damages, however, and could only recover for actual loss. The $1,000 verdict was therefore excessive, and set aside, and a new trial ordered.

Bullock was before the Senate Railroads and Canals Committee advocating Senator Daly's bill giving passengers the right to take packages with them on the trains, provided those packages did not take up room required for other passengers. This bill has been amended by the committee to the effect that the packages must be the personal property of the passenger.

PASSING COMMENT.

Patrolman Robinson has lost his upper lip adornment and he was hardly recognized last evening when he appeared on the street.

While his older brother is wishing for the time to come when he can be out on his wheel again, the small boy is preparing for the kite flying season, which is close at hand. The high winds of the spring are all that he is waiting for. Store windows are filled with all sorts and varieties of kites intended to bring joy to the hearts of the Plainfield youth.

The recent plumbing ordinance has not found favor with all of the older plumbers of the city. They claim that by registering, men who know but little of the business are put on an equal footing with those who have spent years in studying the subject. They claim that under the new ordinance it is possible for almost anyone to go into the business without a long apprenticeship, as was customary in their time.

There has been another change in the police force. There is a new acting roundsman, new in appearance if not in name. Acting Boundsman Flynn has had his moustache shaved off and a great change it makes. Some people thought that the Board was going to have all the officers follow his example, but the mere imagination of some of the force without such an article is enough to assure all that such a step is not contemplated.

Among the owners of famous stamp collections in this city is Emil Woltmann, of West Seventh street, who has a collection containing stamps of over 3,000 varieties. Ernest R. Ackerman has a very large one also. Councilman Elliott T. Barrows has been collecting for a number of years and has several thousand different varieties in his collection. The collection owned by J. T. Wadsworth, of West Eighth street, is valued at $6,000. Henry R. Woltmann has over 3,000 varieties.

ENDEAVORERS TO BE ACTIVE.

Committee Appointed to Push the Good Work.

The Executive Committee of the Local Christian Endeavor Union met at the home of one of its members on Thursday evening, and discussed plans for the advancement of Christian work in the city. Active missionary, evangelistic and temperance work will soon be undertaken and within a short time two union missionary meetings will be held after the plan of the Missionary Extension Course. It is expected that a permanent Christian Endeavor chorus will soon be formed to assist at all union meetings; also a squad of Endeavorers who ride wheels, who will visit the societies in the outlying districts. The following committees were appointed: Music, Horace J. Martin; Correspondence, J. M. Hawkins; Good Citizenship, Irving L. Brady; Evangelistic, Miss F. G. Hawkins; Inter-Society Visitation, Irving L. Brady.

Miss Louis Spicer, of Westerly, Rhode Island, is visiting her cousin, Miss Ida Spicer, of West Fifth street.

FOR STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS HEAR REPORTS AT PLANS.

Congregational and Trinity Reformed Church Teachers Hold Meetings Friday, After Which Sociability Was Enjoyed

A new feature in the duties of the Sunday-school teachers of the Congregational church is the quarterly meeting at which the work of the school is talked over and a social hour spent. One of these quarterly meetings was held last Friday at the home of the superintendent, Joseph A. Robinson, of East Fifth street. The meeting was a very enjoyable one. Short reports were made by the officers and chairmen of the committees which showed the Sunday-school to be in even better condition than a year ago, both financially and numerically. The average attendance has been steadily increasing and it was evident that the hard work of the teachers and officers had not been in vain.

After a conference on the work and spiritual condition of the school, an hour was spent socially. An informal programme was given. There was a bass solo by Stacy Reynolds, "The Mighty Deep," and an alto solo, "There, little girl don't cry," by Miss Julia Belknap. A duet by Miss M. G. Morse and Stacy Reynolds, entitled "I would that my love," ended the programme.

The officers and teachers of Trinity Reformed Sunday school met in quarterly session in the lecture room, last Friday, and listened to the reports from the several departments, all showing the school to be in a most excellent condition. The reports are to be embodied into one general report, which Superintendent E. E. Anthony will make known later on. During the evening prayer and thanksgiving were offered by the superintendent and others, after which the meeting turned into a social gathering and coffee and cake was served in abundance and everybody was made to feel at home.

The entertainment committee, consisting of Miss Kreitling, chairman, Miss Steiglitz, Miss Lance and Frank Wikoff, desire to thank all who contributed and assisted at the gathering of the Sunday-school workers.

Howard T. Lewis, of Ashaway, Rhode Island, is the guest of his aunt, Mrs. George H. Babcock, of West Eighth street.

PARTOOK OF CHOP SUI.

A CHINESE TEA PARTY GIVEN BY CONGREGATIONAL ENDEAVORERS.

Chinese Customs Dwelt Upon in an Interesting Manner by Those Who Lead—Chop Sticks Were in Use There.

The members of the Junior Endeavor Society of the Congregational church entertained their friends, Friday afternoon, in the church parlors with a Chinese tea party. It was a novel affair and was greatly enjoyed by the children and their friends who came to watch. Several short articles were first read by some of the members. Miss Hattie Messersmith read "Helpless Gods," and Harold Norner read "The Ride of the Rain God." "Hog worship" was the title of the one read by Miss Cornelia Lance. Edward Suffren read a poem entitled "Who, Why, and How Long." The articles all referred to life and worship in China.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich, who arranged the affair, had two of the Chinese idols which he exhibited and explained the method of worship. He also had a Chinese praying stick on which he burned incense. The programme ended with a Chinese motion song by four little girls in costume. They were the Misses Carrie Fuller, Enid Fonda, Ethel Weseman and Fannie Condon, all members of the missionary committee of the society. They were accompanied on an autoharp by Miss M. G. Morse, who was also dressed in Chinese costume.

Clarence Steiner and Miss May Serrell were also in costume. The latter wore a native costume brought from the islands east of China.

The refreshments ended the afternoon's pleasure and the young folks gathered in a circle on the floor with paper napkins in front of them. They tried to partake of boiled rice with chop-sticks. Tea, crackers and rats were also served. It might be added that the rats were made of chocolate.

Gave Her Husband a Surprise.

Mrs. William Gray, of Church street, gave her husband a surprise party last evening by inviting a few friends to the house. Mr. Gray was out during the early part of the evening and when he returned he found about thirty people at the house. He accepted the situation very gracefully and joined heartily with his friends in having a good time in playing games, dancing, etc., and as an early hour this morning refreshments were served.

Charles Wakefield, of the borough, is able to go to work again after a severe attack of rheumatism which has confined him to the house for some time.

PARK'S SHARE IS DEFEAT

INGLORIOUS ENDING OF THE BOWLING SEASON FOR THEM.

Started Out With a Rosey View of Being Victorious But Finish by Losing Two Games on Their Own Club Alleys

It was a sorrofui ending for the bowling season for the Park Clubites. At the start the prospects had been so rosey and the chances of getting the trophy was so good that the final ending of the league was something of a disappointment to those who took an interest in the work. The Park's are considered almost invincible on their own alleys but the team from the New Jersey Athletic Club came up to the Park's alleys last Friday and won two victories from the home team.

Neither team did anything brilliant in the first game. The visitors took the lead at the start and kept it until the end although the Park's were not very far behind. The latter made several efforts to catch them but failed and the Jersey boys won by 23 pins. The second game was one of the best that has been bowled on the Park alleys this season. The home team woke up to the necessity that they must, at least, win the last game of the tournament, if not the trophy. Both teams set a lively pace from the start and the home club took the lead. The fight was close but still the Park's maintained their lead by a small margin. On the eighth frame, the visitors moved ahead by three pins and then they made a windup that even the Park's couldn't equal. The Jersey team won by the high score of 915 pins, 45 pins ahead of their opponents.

POND'S WON IN TWO GAMES.

Defeated the Potter Press Works Bowlers Again Last Night.

The Pond and Potter bowling teams contested in another friendly game on the Ulrich alleys last Friday, and the employes of each shop and their friends turned out in large numbers to witness the sport. The match was more or less exciting from start to finish, and at the end of the game both the victors and the defeated cheered each other in true brotherhood style. Pond's had won the first game rolled some three weeks ago on the same alleys by 64 pins, and this fact enthused that team to greater energy and the players went in to win—and they did win to the tune of 1260 to 1173. The individual score follows:

Ponds.		Potters.
Millington	132	Gallagher	114
Wood	121	Grunow	148
Owens	130	Muir	136
Craig, W	113	Hughes	112
Craig	103	Niche	104
Keegan	138	Shirley	106
Craig, T	123	Bechert	99
Shepherd	159	Squires	117
Guthrie	137	Babcock	144
Leland	127	Matthews	91
	1260		1173

Thus it will be seen that the Pond team won by 87 points, and having won two straight matches the third game is unnecessary. Some of the more prominent bowlers are, however, advocating another series of games, and they may be arranged before the warm weather sets in, when outdoor sports will take the place of indoor amusements.

A NEW MISSION BAND

Committee Appointed to Carry on Active Work.

In the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church, Friday afternoon, was held the first meeting of the Young Women's Mission Band of that church.

The Committee on Constitution and By-Laws gave their report, the same being adopted and read. Mrs. Leggett reported that the executive committee would appoint the following standing committees for the year: Domestic Missions, Miss M. Woodruff. Miss L. B. Powers, Miss E. Cutter.

Foreign Missions: Miss Mabel Wilson, Miss S. Holmes, Miss E. Fenner. Birthday Box: Miss M. Sheppard, Miss M. Williams. Flower Mission: Miss G. Emmons, Miss E. Line, Miss M. VanDyke. Paper Mission: Miss M. Schenck, Miss J. Banks, Miss Cora Laire. Programme, Miss L. Force, Miss M. Arnold, Miss G. Nevius, Mrs. F. E. Woodruff. Entertainment: Miss E. Farmer, Miss L. Emmons, Miss E. Gillen, Mrs. Startup. New Members: Miss L. Bemsen, Miss J. Quick, Miss B. Richards. The Band will study the life of the Indians at the next meeting February 5th.

Mrs. Winfield Smalley, of Newark, is ill at her home, and her little daughter is staying with Mrs. M. E. Smalley, of Liberty street, until the mother recovers.

Hiram Woodland and family, of Duer street, have leased Chas. Smith's house on Craig place, formerly occupied by Principal C. E. Boss, and will reside there after April 1st.

FINE CLOTHES TAXED.

POVERTY AND RECOGNITION SOCIABLE AT VINCENT CHAPEL.

Most of the Attendants Were Nicely Attired and as a Consequence They Had to Pay Tribute—Tracing Out Baby Lines.

The interior of Vincent chapel and the occupants thereof, last Friday, did not present a particularly poverty stricken appearance even if the Epworth League of the First M. E. church did hold a poverty party and recognition sociable there. Some of the member did follow the spirit of the affair and appeared in as unconventional garb as possible. Most of the guests came all arrayed in their best and the treasury of the League grew in consequence.

The guests were captured on their arrival by the committee and carefully examined them for articles for which they could be fined. The women were examined by the men of the committee, who were Arthur Crone and James A. Stafford. D. S. Dunavan looked after the door and collected the admittance fees. The men were examined by the Misses Ida Angleman, Elsie Horne, Madeline Day, Ametia Day, and Bessie Day.

The fines were made according to the following lists:

Ladies:—Silks 5 cents, shoes, fancy tips 3 cents, gloves 5 cents, velvets 5 cents, ribbons 5 cents, lace 2 cents, hair curled, 5 cents, ruffles in front, satins 5 cents, sash 2 cents, flowers, artificial or real, 5 cents, jewelry 5 cents.

Gentlemen:—Silk or satin ties 5 cents, collars and cuffs 4 cents, shoes shined 3 cents, shoes, russet or patent leather, 4 cents, starch goods 5 cents, hair, dude style, 5 cents, jewelry, each article, 5 cents, coats, cutaway or Prince Alberts, 5 cents, flowers 5 cents, moustache or without 5 cents.

The costumes were varied. Some of the young women wore sun-bonnets and calico dresses, others wore old clothes of some queer style, but the majority were not prepared for that kind of an event. Miss Lucie Palmer Davis wore one of the most appropriate gowns. A big sun bonnet completed the costume. Miss Eva Jenkins and Miss Alice Jenkins were also dressed in the same manner. Several of the guests looked very youthful with their hair hanging in a braid.

Robert Davis and Charles W. Sprague divided the honors among the young men. Davis looked as tough as might be wished. His clothes were old and ragged and he had an old bandana knotted at the throat while a soft felt hat which appeared to date back from the middle ages completed the equipment. Sprague wore an old suit and low-crowned dilapidated derby. Long whiskers almost disguised his identity. A number of the young men wore their sweaters in honor of the occasion but as many of them had a new appearance, their owners did not look particularly poverty stricken.

A feature of the sociable was the collection of juvenile pictures of the different members of the congregation. It was difficult to trace the resemblance in many cases between the extremely youthful figure in the picture and the original in the room. Some of them were easy to guess and there was lots of fun in comparing them. Everybody was supplied with a card on which they wrote their guesses as to the originals of the pictures.

The principal part of the programme was a number of selections on the programme under the direction of Donald McGee. Some of the selections were humorous and caused much laughter. A short story, "Goliath," was read in a pleasing manner by Miss Susie Davies. The selection was an exciting one and the conclusion was very humorous.

After the programme, the refreshments, which consisted of coffee and crackers, were passed and a social time followed. Everybody pronounced the sociable a delightful affair and the committee was congratulated on its success. The sociable was arranged by the social committee of the League of which Miss Elsie Horne is the chairman.

A Singular Accident.

A singular accident occurred Saturday afternoon while the mail train which is due in this city at 5 o'clock was passing Garwood station. The mail pouch from that place is picked up while the train is going through, but this time the arrangement failed to work and the pouch was dropped as was supposed. Such was not the case, however, for when the train reached this city it was found under the trucks of the last coach on the train. It was found by Mail Messenger Frisbie, of this city, and he gave it to the clerk on the train, as it was not a Plainfield mail. The pouch was damaged very little and no mail escaped.

—A detachment of fifty men from each division of the three divisions of the New Jersey Naval Reserve will be sent to Washington to attend the inaugural ceremonies. Walter B. Bittenhouse, of East Sixth street, is one of those chosen to go from the third or engineering division.

PLACE FOR PLAINFIELD

A LOCAL TEAM CAN ENTER THE STATE BALL LEAGUE IF SO DISPOSED.

The Outlook Appears to be Bright for a Good Season With the League—A Trenton Man to Be The President.

New Jersey is going to see some good baseball this season if the New Jersey State League fulfills the predictions of its promoters. Another meeting has been held and the preliminaries arranged. Whether Plainfield will be in the league remains to be seen. A place is being left for her but the local management has not been taken as yet, although there is some talk of giving it to an out-of-town party. Two applications have been received from clubs outside the State and they will be acted upon at the next meeting.

The outlook appears to be very bright in the State and the league promises to fill a long felt want in giving the people of New Jersey a good game of professional baseball. Ted Sullivan and President Powers of the Eastern League were the originators of the league and they have now come to the conclusion that the league will be a success.

In Atlantic City a little difficulty was found at first in securing suitable grounds, but that has been arranged and a prominent capitalist has taken the franchise.

Peter A. Wurfflein, of Trenton, has been selected as president, secretary and treasurer of the league. Now that the league has been put under the protection of the National Agreement, the work of signing the teams has commenced and a number of promising players have been discovered by the different managers besides some of the well known players of the State.

The question of umpires was brought up and it was decided that a majority of the managers could ask for the release of an umpire who became obnoxious to the teams. They passed a very good rule regarding teams leaving the field. The rule read:

"Any club refusing to play within five minutes, contrary to umpire's decision, shall be fined $75, the said fine to be paid to the secretary of the league within five days."

Postponed games were protected by a guarantee and to be played off on date mutually agreed upon by the managers of the contesting teams.

CLUB TO MAKE GOOD MEN

YOUNG BOYS WHO SEEK TO DISCOURAGE ALL UNMANLY HABITS

The Crystal Club Is Its Title and the Members Are Youngsters Who Want to See Playmates Free From all Vice.

One of the most novel organizations in this locality has just been organized in the borough by several boys. They have chosen the name of "Crystal Club," and the objects of the club is to discourage the habit of drinking, smoking, swearing and all unmanly habits. Those between the ages of eleven and sixteen years can become members on application if the officers think they are all right. At present the club meets in ex-Judge Sperry's office, 65 Grandview avenue, the first Tuesday of every month. Harry Woodland, Albert and Christopher Utzinger, compose the committee on rooms, and they will arrange to have a suitable place of meeting. The following officers have been elected: President, Raymond Stevens; vice president, Harry Woodland; secretary, Ernest Volkman; treasurer, Arthur Jeffrey. The constitution committee, consisting of Raymond Stevens, Arthur Jeffrey and Frank Sheppard, presented a constitution at the last meeting and the same was adopted by the members.

Donations have been received from E. L. Hyde, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Schermerhorn, of this city, and the amounts will be used to purchase badges for the members. The club will meet again next Tuesday evening at 7:30 when important business will be transacted.

Land Company Officers.

The annual meeting of the Mount Park Land Company was held last week and the following officers elected for the ensuing year: President, Chandler W. Riker; vice president, J. P. Vail; treasurer, Allen B. Wallace; secretary, Elston M. French; manager, John H. French.

SCOTCH PLAINS.

Miss Jennie Collins, of New York, is the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Blimm.

The Fanwood depot was the scene of a full-fledged scrapping match between two young men early Wednesday morning. The fracas was on account of an eighteen-year-old girl, whom both claimed.

Bucket and Engine Co., No. 1, will hold a meeting shortly to audit the accounts of the late James A. Baker, who was at the time of his death the honored treasurer of the company. Those who are in charge of the matter have gone over the account, and pronounce it to be an enviable showing.

THE BOROUGH FINANCES

ANNUAL REPORT OF TAX COLLECTOR AND CLERK.

Shows the Condition of the Municipality to be First-Rate—Auditing Committee Found the Accounts to be Correct.

Outside of the receiving of the annual reports there was very little business transacted at the adjourned meeting of the borough council held last Friday. Previous to the session of the Auditing and Finance Committee met and examined the books and accounts for the past year, and later they offered a resolution that they had performed such work and that they had found everything correct.

In the absence of the Mayor and the President of the council, Councilman Valiant called the meeting to order. The first thing presented was the report of Tax Collector H. N. Spencer, which was as follows:

Total collections reported to February 15th, $35,866.49; same to February 19th, $2,785.67; total $37,672.16; from February 15th to date, $2,785.67, less Board of Health, $10.21; account of school, $697.30; $737.41, total $2,048.26. County tax, $722.97; state school, $348.53; borough, $160.86; lights, $321.72; roads, $187.67; fire department, $201.08; poor, $80.43; polls, $15; dogs, $10; total, $2,048.26.

The report of the borough clerk was as follows:

Borough, $1,930.81; fire department, $1,671.46; lights, $1,499.32; roads, $196.78; poor deficit, $406.11; total, $4,902.26; state and county tax due collector for 1896-7, $4,238.55; balance due from the collector, $563.71; total unpaid taxes for 1896, $2,818.09.

Chief Marshal Wilson reported that during the year there had been eighty-nine arrests, sentence suspended on twelve, twenty-seven were sent to jail, one to the asylum and twenty-nine were fined.

A bill for $448 from E. and J. H. Pope, for work done on the Prideville hose house, was received and after being certified as correct it was ordered paid.

Mr. Woolston reported the work done on the streets during the past year. The report showed that there had been laid 330 feet of crosswalk and 4 750 feet of sidewalk. In all there had been expended on the streets $3,697.09. The report gave in detail the work done and it showed that there had been a wise expenditure of money. As this report will be printed in pamphlet form it is not given in full at this time.

Mr. Valiant stated that he could report progress in the matter of compiling the borough laws and ordinances, and that the next Council would have them in their hands. On a motion offered by Mr. Valiant 300 copies of the borough reports and accounts, together with a list of the delinquent taxes, were ordered published in pamphlet form.

It was also stated by Mr. Valiant that a list of the back taxes had been compiled and that it was found that there was about $10,000 due to the credit of the borough. This, he said, with the balance left to the credit of the borough, placed the borough in a good financial condition.

The report of Overseer of the Poor David R. Weaver showed that $1,902.38 had been expended in his department during the past year.

This finished up the business for the evening and the Council adjourned. The next meeting will be held the first Friday evening in March, which will be the last meeting of the Council as it now stands.

DUNELLEN AND NEW MARKET.

Miss Luther Bescoln is recovering from her recent illness.

Miss Grace Esty, of Bayonne, is visiting Mis. Charles Bloomer.

Miss Kate Trust has gone to Newark for a week's visit with her sister.

Little Edith Hamilton, of Front street, is a sufferer from the mumps.

Miss Annie Trimmer, of North avenue, is spending a few days with her cousin at Somerville.

Little Lizzie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Reusch is confined to the house with the mumps.

The work of placing the seven or eight new smoke stacks on the round house, was completed today.

The painter's brush was applied to the Emerydale station yesterday. It is being painted a light color.

The mumps seem to be having a run here among children, but there are no serious cases reported yet.

Mrs. W. H. Coles who has been seriously ill for some time past, is now able to sit up for a short time each day.

Watson Emory's little daughter, who has been ill with pneumonia and mumps for some time past, is able to go about the house again.

Contractor Rarick and his beautiful trotting stepper are seen on the streets every pleasant afternoon speeding along. The popular conductor is an expert driver.

Mrs. J. W. Johnson entertained a select few of her friends at her home on Front street, Thursday evening. Dainty refreshments were served and the evening was most pleasantly passed.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

TEMPERANCE ESSENTIAL HERE.

The extent to which the temperance agitation has prevailed in railroad service is shown by the comments of railroad managers on a pending bill in the Minnesota Legislature. The bill, if enacted, would render a railroad company liable to a fine if it did not discharge an employee in the train department who was known to have been intoxicated. The only objection offered to the bill by the railroad officers was that it was superfluous. The Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad has a rule which is much more stringent than the proposed law. It reads: "The use of intoxicating drinks has proved a most fruitful source of trouble to railways as well as to individuals. The company will exercise the most rigid scrutiny in reference to the habits of employes in this respect, and any employe who has been dismissed on this account will not be re-employed. Drinking when on duty or frequenting saloons will not be tolerated, and preference will be given to those who do not drink at all."

A TROLLEY SUGGESTION.

There is a great need and demand for a trolley extension to Hillside cemetery. Why is not the city railway officers looking to this extension? It might touch the cycle track, which would afford much patronage and profit; thence to the Plainfield Driving Park and then to South Plainfield. This would certainly be a most profitable enterprise.

EFFECTIVE WARFARE ON CIGARETTES

A war on the cigarette through the public schools of St. Louis is likely to be more effective than the legislation projected or accomplished in several of the states, particularly as the school officials and the parents have joined hands in the crusade. The evil effects resulting from the use of tobacco in this form, particularly by the young, are taught in the schools. Smoking on the school premises is strictly prohibited, and the children are watched on their way to and from school. More potent, however, is the enlist*ment of the vigilance of* parents and older brothers and sisters, friends and acquaintances, so that cigarette smoking will become a burden to the public school pupil.

AN INTERESTING ISSUE.

There is said to be a strong disposition on the part those who favor the consolidation of city and borough to have the approaching borough election conducted on that issue. There is but little doubt that the present administration—so far as the sentiment of incumbent officials goes—is opposed to consolidation, and since they are the dominant power in Republican ranks and will undoubtedly control the nominations, it is hoped by many that the Democrats will select candidates who are committed to the Greater Plainfield and thus clearly define the issue.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION

The decision of Judge VanSyckle in the Supreme Court concerning the right a commuter has to carry parcels of any kind as personal baggage is of paramount interest at the present time, while such a struggle is going on between railroad and express corporations and private individuals to establish and maintain what each consider their rights. The decision of Judge Van Syckle, holding that a commuter cannot carry any kind of a personal package that he feels inclined to, came as a bit of a surprise to most people.

BOROUGH MAYOR.

The Borough Republican primary will be held on Friday evening of this week in the basement of the school house for the purpose of placing in nomination a ticket to be voted for at the coming election. The Daily Press has been well informed that Councilman John Valiant will be the nominee for Mayor, and that he will accept the nomination and office if elected.

PETITION TO CONGRESS.

Senator Sewell of New Jersey has presented a petition signed by William Lunger and fifty-two other residents of Plainfield, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

A POLITICAL JOKE.

The name of John Koan, of Union county, is mentioned for Postmaster General. Well, the office is one that requires the services of a thorough business man, and Mr. Koan is just that kind of a man.—New Brunswick Home News.

That is the best political joke we have heard in many a day.

AGAINST CONCENTRATION OF TRADE.

Agitation is widespread in the west over the subject of department stores. Following the action of the Minnesota Legislature in ordering an investigation of the matter, a bill for a graduated tax or license on the branches of business in such stores was introduced in the Missouri Legislature. Similar action has been asked of the Illinois Legislature in a series of resolutions adopted by the Chicago Aldermen, which, after reciting what the Aldermen regard as the "evils" of this concentration of trade, ask that power be conferred upon cities to prohibit such stores or to establish a graduated sale of licenses to be paid by merchants vending more than one line of merchandise. Without awaiting legislative action, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin retail hardware men may try to see what can be done with a boycott. Organizations of these dealers have adopted resolutions requesting manufacturers and jobbers of hardware to confine their sales to the "legitimate" channels of trade.

DEATH OF JUDGE BEASLEY.

By the death of Chief Justice Mercer Beasley New Jersey loses one of its truly great men—great not because of his office, but by reason of his char*acter and ability.* Thirty-three years ago Gov. Joel Parker appointed him Chief Justice, and he was reappointed by Governors Randolph, McClellan and Abbett. Though a Democrat, the Chief Justice never made partisanship paramount to the interests of justice, and he was honored as an upright Judge.—New York Tribune.

THE NEW COUNCILMAN.

It is a queer condition of things in a political way when the Councilmanic honor of the Fourth ward has to go almost begging. Just how capable an official Alfred H. Leivers will make as a successor of Isaac Randolph it is impossible to say, judging from any work of the past in a public way, but since he is a first-class workman at his trade and of the best type of an American mechanic, it is probable that he will attend to the duties of the office in at least an honorable and conscientious manner.

THE BOROUGH LEFT OUT.

There has been surprise expressed over the conditions which the Common Council imposed in the granting of a franchise to the Plainfield Sanitary Company to build a garbage crematory, especially with reference to the restriction that the company can not dispose of garbage from any other municipality than the city of Plainfield. This excludes the borough from whatever benefits the proposed system will afford to those who want to use it.

LESS MONEY FROM LICENSES

The sum which will be paid to the city this year for liquor licenses will be $2,100 less than last year, and possibly $2,800 if the application of Patrick O'Keffe, for the Rising Sun Brewing Company's place on Park avenue should be refused. But it is a safe venture that just as many people will drink old John Barleycorn.

A Practical Gift to the Hospital.

W. L. Saunders has just presented to Muhlenberg Hospital a reference library for the use of the medical staff and the Training School for Nurses. The gift comprises about thirty five valuable and mostly large volumes, all of recent date and by distinguished authorities on medical and surgical subjects. The doctors are very much delighted with this useful and convenient addition to the hospital equipment.

From everywhere come words of praise for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Allow me to congratulate you on the merits of your Remedy. It cured me of chronic bronchitis when the doctor could do nothing for me." —Chas. F. Hemel, Toledo, O For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

Received a Death Benefit.

The family of the late John Pearson, Jr., have received from Somerset Council, J. O. U. A. M., a check for $250 as the death benefit for the loss of their son. The departed had been a member of the lodge just twenty-nine days.

CONCERT BY REAL TALENT.

GIVEN FOR BENEFIT OF A SCHOOL

All of the Selections Given in a Manner to Win Appreciation.

The many other attractions and the unpromising weather combined to keep many from the concert at the North Plainfield Public School, but it was a very enjoyable affair, however, and the audience, which nearly filled the room, realized the fact. The concert was given by professional talent, who kindly contributed their services. The concert was for the benefit of the *piano fund, and a good sum was real*ized.

The opening selection on the programme was a reading by Maxwell Bingham. It was entitled "Lights Out." It was really funny and he gave it in a way that added much to the effect. "A Modern Martyr" was the title of his encore. His other se*lection, "McGrath's Trial," was of a* different order. He gave it with a dramatic skill of a high order and the silence that was kept during his selections was a tribute to his excellence. Hermann Hoveman, the baritone, had a voice of great range and power that he used very effectively in the songs he selected. He was accompanied by Richard Menzel. Mr. Menzel gave two compositions of Chopin, which were rendered in an artistic manner. W. Paulding Denike, the violoncellist, rendered his part of the programme with credit and was well received by the audience. Master Seth Bingham, brother of the reader, sang several songs. His sweet contralto voice greatly pleased his hearers.

The participants in the concert were introduced by a few words from S. St John McCutchen, of the Board of Education.

Thousands suffer from Catarrh or cold in head and have never tried the popular remedy. There is no longer any excuse, as a 10 cent trial size of Ely's Cream Balm can be had of your druggist or we mail it for 10 cents. Full size 50 cents. ELY BROS., 66 Warren St., N. Y. City. A friend advised me to try Ely's Cream Balm and after using it six weeks I believe my self cured of catarrh. It is a most valuable remedy.—Joseph Stewart, 624 Grand Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church will give a sociable on Friday evening. The sociable was to have been held last evening, but was postponed on account of the Biggs lecture at the Irving School.

SERMON TO JR. O U. A. M.

DELIVERED SUNDAY NIGHT BY REV. J. W. RICHARDSON.

Says That the Organization Owes Allegiance Only to God and the Country—Its Influence is Felt at Washington

The members of the J. O. U. A. M. of this city and vicinity attended divine service at the Park Avenue Baptist church last Sunday evening, at which time the pastor, Rev. J. W. Richardson, delivered a patriotic discourse. He said that he was glad to see an organization before him that owed allegiance to God only and His beautiful country. He considered that it had been raised providentially by God for a great work. Of course, the members must expect to be criticised, but, he said, you are on God's side and the side of humanity, and it is the duty of every member to stand true. During the past twenty-six years the order has increased at the rate of 1,000 a year, and the present membership is between 26,000 and 28,000. At Washington there are twenty-eight Congressmen and eight Senators who are members of the organization. The grand work of your organization has just commenced.

We sneer at Germany and England with her kings and queens, but we have railroad, cattle and sugar kings, and we feel the iron heel of trusts and monopolies. We talk of liberty and patriotism when in fact we wear the political collar and vote as the machine direct. Has the time come when trade-unions is greater than the Constitution of the United States? the speaker said; if it is we are certainly not American.

BIBLE IN THE CRUCIBLE.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., Refers to Recent Attacks on its Infallibility.

"The Bible in the Crucible" is the subject of a series of sermons, the first of which Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., preached in the Trinity Reformed church, Sunday evening. He took his text from Hebrews first chapter, first and second verses. He referred to the recent criticisms of the Bible, especially those of Dr. Abbott, and said that the believers in the book need have no fear, for the Bible had been placed in the crucible of higher investigation and criticism and it had always come out unharmed, as it would this time. He spoke of the difference between revelation and inspiration and said that it was in this that Dr. Abbott was careless.

Revelation he defined as any species of knowledge of which God was the source or the author. There are two definitions of revelation, he said, the natural or unwritten revelation which is not infallible as it is affected by sin, and the more restrictive meaning, the written revelation, the Bible, which is of greater certainty and free from erroneous elements. Inspiration, he said, was the preservation of the truth from error. There is no such thing as progressive inspiration. Some say that the older writers in the Bible were partially inspired. That lays the book open to the entering wedge of error. All the writers in the Bible have not both revelation and inspiration.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

Lecture by Rev. Father Kelly.

Rev. Edward Kelly, of Hoboken, will lecture in St. Mary's church, Sunday evening, March 14th, on "Christ, the Beloved." The lecture will be interspersed with stereopticon views. There will also be some fine singing. What will tend to make the lecture more interesting is the fact that Father Kelly is a Plainfielder by birth and one of the most eloquent speakers in the diocese of Newark.

PATRIOTIC DECORATIONS.

LAST OF SUBSCRIPTION DANCES.

Two Hundred Guests Participated in the Evening Pleasures.

The last subscription dance of the season held at the Casino last Monday was attended with all the patriotic features one could desire. The favorite assembly hall was prettily decorated with the national colors, while over the balcony there was a pleasing arrangement of the red, white and blue surrounding a picture of the immortal George Washington. At the other end of the hall there was a profusion of the above colors.

There were fully two hundred guests present including a large number of out of town people and there were many new faces which was a slight change from the usual assemblage.

The patronesses who received were Mrs. James T. Scott, Mrs. William Journeay Boome, Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy, Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mrs. John T. Baker, Mrs. John B. Dumont and Mrs. O. T. Waring.

The following compose the committee who have so successfully arranged and conducted the dances for this season: H. W. Beebe, O. G. Waring, Howard Huntington, H. V. Borden and Clifton Wharton, Jr.

GROOM FROM DIXEY LAND

A MARYLANDER TAKES A PLAIN-FIELD BELLE FOR A WIFE

The Wedding Solemnized in Grace P. E. Church Monday Afternoon—Informal Reception at the Bride's Home

It was a charming wedding that was witnessed at Grace P. E. church Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock, when Miss Ametia Rogers Dryden, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Meredith Dryden, of West Seventh street, and William Poppleis Hall, son of Captain Hall, of Baltimore, were united in marriage by Rev. C. M. Dunham, of Meuchen, assisted by Rev. E. M. Rodman, rector of the church.

The edifice was thronged with Plainfield's society people, also a large number from Baltimore, who were relatives and friends of the bride and groom. The decorations were chiefly arranged about the chancel, and they consisted of beautiful palms and roses in profusion.

Previous to the arrival of the bridal party, Mrs. Freeman, organist, rendered the following selections: "Boude des Archers," Nuyens; "Nuptial Grand March," D'Haenens; "Scherzo," Damm; "Sortie," Wely; "Festal March," Clark; "Sortie," Leybach; "Overtoire," Leybach.

While the Lohengrin wedding march was being played, the bride entered the church accompanied by her father, who gave her away. They were met at the altar by the groom and the best man, Edwin L. Hall, brother of the groom, and the officiating clergymen. The bride was charming in a light brown cloth travelling gown trimmed with braid, and she was unattended with the customary bridesmaid.

After the ceremony, which was in accordance with the Episcopal church, the bridal party retired from the church while the Mendelssohn wedding march was being rendered. As the bride and groom were passing down the aisle they bowed graciously to their admiring friends.

An informal reception followed at the home of the bride, which was attended by only the relatives and near friends of the two families. After congratulations and a superb wedding supper, the bride and groom left for an extended tour. On their return they will reside at St. Michaels, Talbot county, Maryland, where the groom has a country seat.

They were the recipients of costly and useful presents, and among them was a branch of an orange tree bearing two large oranges. Each orange was beautiful inerlbed with the initials of the contracting parties.

The ushers were Alfred C. Hall, Frank M. Hall, brothers of groom, Robert W. Dryden and Meredith Dryden, brothers of the bride.

The gift of the groom to the bride was a diamond tira, and he presented the ushers with diamond scarf pins.

This X Means Ten Cents.

A Sunday-school sociable will be held in the parlors of the Congregational church, Friday evening. It will be an X rays (raise) affair, the re quired X to be deposited in the basket at entering. It will be 10 cents, not $10, in this case. The programme will be something of a novel order and some wonderful X ray pictures will be shown.

An Old Veteran Passes Away.

After a lingering illness from dropsy and a complication of diseases Thomas Clark, aged 60 years, died at his home No. 156 East Second street, Monday. He was well known in this vicinity where he has lived for many years. He was a veteran of the late war and served his time. A wife and three daughters survive him.

A few months ago, Mr. Byron Every, of Woodstock, Mich., was badly afflicted with rheumatism. His right leg was swollen to the full length, causing him great suffering. He was advised to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The first bottle of it helped him consider ably and the second bottle effected a cure. The 25 and 50 cent sizes are for sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

David Ryno, of East Second street, is confined at home with the grip and muscular rheumatism.

THE PARK'S BAL POUDRE

COLONIAL DRESSES AND POWDERED HAIR PREDOMINATED.

One of the Most Delightful Events Ever Given in That Cosy Little House—Names of Guests and Those Who Wore Costume.

If George Washington had entered the ball room of the Park clubhouse Monday he would have been reminded of the good times that held sway while he was host and master at Mount Vernon, for the costumes of the Bal Poudre were decidedly colonial while the air of sociability was in every way in keeping with the hospitality that was characteristic of the colonial masters and dames.

The spirit of the ball had been carried out quite generally, especially among the ladies, and the old custom of powdering the hair was followed by nearly all of the dancers. Some of the ladies wore the old fashioned gowns of a century ago and their hair was arranged after the manner of Martha Washington's, in great puffs at the back of the head. The gentlemen of the club did not, with a few exceptions, dress after the fashion of their ancestors of a century ago. Their hair was powdered, however, and a great change it made in many familiar faces.

While the rain came down in torrents outside, there was a far different scene within. Some maid of the eighteenth century wandered about on the arm of some very modern young man. The inspiring strains of waltz and two step were almost continual and the gay couples glided about the waxed floor with ease and grace. The dancing began at about nine o'clock and continued until Washington's Birthday, 1897, was a thing of the past.

The patronesses for this delightful affair were Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mrs. J. H. Howell, Mrs. George T. Rogers and Mrs. George Hallock.

It was arranged by the regular entertainment committee of the club which is composed of S. St. John McCutchen, Walter McGee, Laurens H. VanBuren, F. O. Ball, A. L. C. Marsh and William N. Runyon.

Among the ladies present dressed in Colonial style were the Misses Laura Long, Marion Henderson, Helen Hasbrouck, Ethel Holmes, Alice Barlow, Ethel Long, Elizabeth C. Hull, Alice Thompson, Adeliade Elsburg, Edith Clapp and Annie Murphy. Edmund Rushmore, Henry C. Wells and Alfred E. Holmes were also gotten up like the gallants of a hundred years ago.

Among the others present during the evening were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Howell, Mrs. F. H. Ball, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. George O. Stevens, Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Thiers, Mr. and Mrs. George Hallock, the Misses Dryden, Marie Dryden, Ethel C. Green, Edith Gilbert, Sarah Douglass, Sadie Howell, Bessie Taylor, Sarah Long, Adeleide Ball, Mabel VanDeventer, Halla VanDeventer, Eleanor T. VanDeventer, Anna L. Smith, Agnes D. Smith, Delphine L. C. Bowers, Helen Warman, Fannie Western; Miss Hall, of Brooklyn, Miss Alice Foster, of Baltimore, Miss Nannie Buck, of Baltimore, Miss Edythe Louyse Dayne, of Glen Ridge, Miss Rhoda Dayne, of Glen Ridge, the Messrs. Fred G. Smith, Volney P. Green, Henry W. Brower, Percy Sandford, Bert Ball, F. O. Ball, Frank E. Richards, Clarence B. Peck, Meredith Dryden, Alfred Stearn, of New York, Thomas McDonald, of Long Island, Frank Hallock, Chas. Faber, Arthur Murphy, William N. Runyon, Fred P. Taylor, Carl Stedman Brown, Elston M. French, Allan B. Laing, W. J. R. Thiers, F. F. Douglass, George C. Worth, Percy C. Long, Clarence L. Murphy, Charles Dupee, A. Willis West, William W. McCutchen, Blanchard Randolph, Everett J. Peck, Allan Wilson, Howard Terrill.

Surprised Their Co-Worker.

Mrs. Cornelius Schenck was tendered a pleasant surprise Monday, when the primary teachers of the Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church made an unexpected visitation in honor of her birthday, which was the day before. The event was arranged by Miss Wikoff and Miss Berkaw and was complete in every way. Those who attended were: Mrs. J. M. Tier, Mrs. G. Reynolds, Mrs. Milton Barkalew, Miss Grace Smith, Miss Mary Berkaw, Miss Olive Wikoff, Miss Eva Lance, Miss Fenner, Miss J. Kissam, Miss Minnie Berg and Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Anthony.

Mr. Ward L. Smith, of Fredericks-town, Mo., was troubled with chronic diarrhœa for over thirty years. He had become fully satisfied that it was only a question of a short time until he would have to give up. He had been treated by some of the best physicians in Europe and America but got no permanent relief. One day he picked up a newspaper and chanced to read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He got a bottle of it, the first dose helped him and its continued use cured him. For sale, by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

KILLED BY A MISSTEP.

FATAL FALL OF MICHAEL M'CARTY AT THE ACKERMAN HOUSE

Found at 8 o'Clock Monday a. m. by Carpenters Who Were Repairing the House.—Death Was Purely Accidental.

Bathed in his own blood and with the base of his skull crushed in, Michael McCarthy, the faithful gardener of Mrs. J. H. Ackerman, was found by the horrified carpenters as they re turned to work Monday a.m. He had evidently met with a misstep while descending the cellar stairs and had fallen on the hard cement floor, for there he lay at the foot of the stairs. He was dead when they found him although his body was still warm.

The residence owned by Mrs. J. H. Ackerman is on the north-east corner of Central avenue and West Seventh street. Some extensive alterations are being made in the house and John Bodine, the carpenter, and his assistants have been busy there for several days. The house was not occupied except by Michael McCarty, the gardener, who slept on the second story to look after the house at night.

He usually rises about five or six o'clock in the morning and goes down cellar to look at the furnace. That is what he supposed he did this morning. In descending the cellar steps he fell. Whether he made a misstep or was taken with a fainting spell will never be known. He fell and struck the base of his skull against the hard cement floor. The bones of the skull were crushed by the force of the fall, and he was instantly killed. He lay as he fell with his head on the floor in front of the furnace and his feet lying on the lower steps.

Bodine and his assistants began work this morning at the usual time. It happened that one of them found it necessary to go down the cellar stairs. There he found the corpse of the old gardner. The others were called and one of the men was sent down to notify Chief Grant.

It was first thought that he had been murdered in attempting to oppose some burglar and that he had been killed by a blow on the skull but careful investigation showed that he had fallen and that his skull had been crushed by the contact with the floor. The body was not yet cold when it was discovered by the carpenters, which was about 8 o'clock.

Chief Grant went to the house at once and City Physician Simpson was called. Word was sent to the county physician of the accident and until his arrival the body was left as it was found.

MacCarty was an old employe in the service of the Ackerman family. He lived at 645 South Second street. He left a wife and two children. The son was employed in the office of Ernest B. Ackerman as a stenographer. MacCarty was fifty years old.

INDIVIDUAL PAYMENT.

Sons of Veterans Can Become Members of Death Benefit by Paying Dues.

A meeting of the Sons of Veterans was held last Saturday evening, at which time the question of remaining in the Death Benefit Association was discussed by the members and decided. It was agreed that all who so desire can become members of the above association by paying the assessment when due. Heretofore the camp has paid the assessment when it was due and some of the members have failed to settle. This method was a means of drawing very heavily on the treasury, and it was found necessary to make a change. With the change there are only ten members about whom there is any doubt as to whether they will remain in the association. According to the new plan, if a member does not pay his assessment within thirty days his name is dropped from the roll of the association and no benefits are due him.

Mrs. E. W. Conklin's Lectures.

Among the interesting lectures given at the present time is a course of eight lectures by Mrs. Edwin W. Conklin, of 823 First place, on "A Review of the Political History of the United States from the Revolution to the Civil War." These are given at Mrs. Conklin's residence on Thursdays at three o'clock. Mrs Conklin is a charming lecturer, weaving her facts in such a skillful manner as to compel the interested attention of her listeners. This is the second course she has given this winter.

A GOOD LETTER.

From the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Fernandina, Fla., Feb. 28, 1896.

Mr. J. George Suhrer, Druggist, City.

Dear George:—Please send a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I would not feel easy if I knew there was none of this valuable Remedy in the house. I have given it a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever foumd. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children. Yours respectfully, Geo. E. Wolff. Sold by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, Park & North avenues.

MUSIC AND MICE.

How It Attracts Them and Other Animals Has Been Much Noticed.

One night half a dozen persons were gathered in the parlor of an Adirondack home, listening to a skilled player, who, as a woodsman said, "could make a planner talk," when it was observed that the mice were acting in an unusual manner. The ordinary conduct of mice when they hear piano music is to climb up and nibble the plaster, but on this night they squeaked and squealed and rattled the plaster as they had never done before. The rush of the rodents died away after the music stopped, but it was hours before the last squeak was heard.

One of the human listeners was a boy who had some little skill as a harmonica player, and he went frequently to the woods, where, with the aid of the instrument, he succeeded in calling chipmunks, red squirrels, and, on one occasion, a woodchuck, besides wood mice—including the deer mouse —and the smaller birds. The mice chiefly ran about the player, with now and then a squeak, but sometimes a low strain with slight modulations would cause a drive of them insane, and then, without hesitation, they would run over the player, as if he had been a stump. The squirrels were less demonstrative.—New York Sun.

A NEW FRENCH CLOCK

The Decimal System to Denote the Hours, Instead of the Old Roman Letters.

The Geographical Bureau of the French Army has adopted and urges for general use a clock in which the decimal system is employed. The decimal is a passion with the French. One of the new watch or clock on the face of which the old friends eleven and twelve o'clock are no longer to be seen, the numerals from 1 to 10 being employed. The day, from midnight to the midnight following, is to be divided into 100 equal parts known as "cces." The sub-divisions, according to the decimal plan, are "decices," or tenths, "centices," or hundredths, "millices," or thousandths. One of the main divisions, the "ces," is equal to 14 minutes and 24 seconds, or a quarter of an hour.

It is urged that under this system the labor of calculation will be diminished by two-thirds, and the chances of mathematical error from 4 to 1. It will be a long time, however, before the general public will agree that 25 ces, or its decimal equivalent, sounds as well as 6 a. m.

Cardinal Newman.

Cardinal Newman, according to his life-long friend, Mr. Froude, bore a remarkable resemblance to Julius Caesar. Not only in features, in the very peculiar lines about the mouth, and in the poise of the head, was the likeness striking, but in mental characteristics as well. Like Julius Caesar, Newman in the English priest had an original force of character, clearness of intellect, independence of judgment, contempt of conventionalities, and imperious self-reliance, united with a sweetness, tenderness, generosity, and affectionateness that seldom coexist, and in their conjunction make the personality of their possessor most fascinating.—Harper's Bazar.

Secreting Manuscripts.

It is reported of our ancestors that they had a way of secreting valuable manuscripts, and concerning that vast collection of state papers of Thurloe, the secretary of Cromwell—a collection of seventy volumes at least, in the original—it is said that it was ordered that it came to light in a very strange way, accidentally falling out of the false ceiling of some chambers in Lincoln's Inn.

Mention is also made of other certain treasures in that line being in the secret drawer of a chest that had passed through many hands before the secret came out.—Harper's Bazar.

J. Gould's Luck.

That very hard-headed financier, Mr. Jay Gould, it is said believed if not in a "luck penny," at least in a luck pen-wiper. This pen-wiper was a primitive construction of blue velvet, made by his daughter when she was three years old. It had upon his desk by day, and was carefully locked up at night. The legend runs that just before the great strike on the Missouri Pacific road the pen-wiper disappeared mysteriously, and just after the settlement it reappeared mysteriously, its owner, however, having parted with a million dollars in the interval.—Harper's Bazar.

Japanese Postmen.

In Japan the postman wears a suit of blue cloth, a wide butter-bowl hat, and walks or rather trots along in comfortable straw shoes. Sometimes a little two-wheeled cart bears his budget, or perchance, being light, the postbag is carried on his back. From station to station the postman hurries along, often running mile after mile, to deliver his precious bag into the keeping of the next man on the route. In this way the mail is carried in the greater part of the Japanese Empire.—Harper's Bazar.

A Curious Prayer.

At an Armenian meeting in the East End of London the other night, Mr. Benn relieved its seriousness by the relation of an incident at once grotesque and pathetic, says The Rits. At a Salvation Army meeting recently, he said, a fervent Salvationist prayed, with all the intensity of his faith, that God would "break the Sultan's heart," with a view, of course, to the conversion of the barbarous Abdul. The prayer was interrupted by an additional petition from one of the devout company, and it ran thus: "Oh, God! break his neck."

USURY OF GOVERNMENT CLERKS.

The High Rates Demanded from the Borrower Who Gives No Security.

While the order issued by the Secretary of the Treasury forbidding under pain of dismissal the loan of money to each other by the employes of the Department will in some degree break up a villainous business, it is a pity some authority does not exist to exterminate the evil branch. It is doubtful whether there is a community under such a burden of usury as the inhabitants at the seat of government.

This community seems practically divided into two elements, lenders and borrowers, the former only as a drop in the bucket to the latter, and, by reason thereof, frequently reaping such profits and premiums as would have made Shylock gnash his teeth in impotent rage.

To those who are fortunate enough to possess tangible and solid collateral the rates of interest average no more than anywhere else, as the legitimate and respectable institutions are always ready to accommodate. But oh! for those who have no security but their word.

The "friends" who accommodate them are generally men who carry their banks around in their pockets. Their capital is put out among innumerable borrowers and in small amounts—$5, $10 or $20. Fifty dollars is a big loan, and $100 a princely one. On these small amounts a rate of interest is exacted, running up to 20 per cent for a week, and in cases even much higher. The lenders justify themselves with the plea that they have to take desperate chances and can only rely upon the honor of the unfortunate borrower. This is true to some extent, but with all their losses these winners make gains which are absolutely fabulous. The victim who gets in their meshes has no escape but death. He may twist and squirm as he will, but he cannot break loose.

The foundation cause for this condition of affairs is, of course, the yielding to the prevalent temptation in Washington, which seems so hard to resist here, to live beyond one's means. It seems to afflict the humbler classes as much, if not more than the others.—Washington Correspondence of The Baltimore Sun.

THE ONLY WOMAN DIVER.

Mrs. Sorcho Goes Down into the Depths Exploring Sunken Treasure.

After mastering about all the occupations which man is heir to, the new woman has begun investigating the bottom of the sea.

This daring task has been accomplished by Mrs. Frances Namon Sorcho, wife of Captain Louis Sorcho, the well-known diver, and is now the captain of the United States Life Saving Service. She is the only woman in the world who has successfully striven to become a deep-sea diver.

There is no task that falls to the lot of the diver who goes down to the ocean's bottom in search of everything, from treasure to a dead body, that Mrs. Sorcho has not achieved. She is considered an expert, and is capable of doing any work that is done by the divers that travel around beneath the water of New York Harbor. A pretty woman, without a sign of masculinity about her, this lady has as much courage as any one needs in the work in which she is engaged, and that is saying a good deal.

Paints With His Feet.

Lessing's oft-repeated question: "Would Raphael have been a great painter if born without arms?" is positively answered by Herr Adam Siepen, one of the well-known artists of the renowned Dusseldorf school, whose portraits, landscapes and genre pictures, paintings and drawings attracted so much attention at this year's art exhibition in the old Rhenish town.

Some German critics who had come from all parts of the Empire to view the great things and small that one expects to find at the annual picture display in Dusseldorf became so interested in the Siepen exhibit of miniatures on ivory and copper that they determined to make the artist's personal acquaintance in order to learn more of his work and wonderful method. They were surprised to find that the painter was armless, and did his exquisite work by holding his brushes with his feet.

Curiosities of Nomenclature.

Perhaps the strangest specimen of local nomenclature in the United States is furnished by South Carolina, which has a post-office named Catarrh. But the following are not bad in their way: Grubgulch, Pullitight, Yum Yum, Shoulderblade, Ink, Mud, and Getup. There are a Romulus and Remus, a Romeo and Juliet, one Truly and Devoted Friend, but no combination of both. Georgia has its Payup, and Rhode Island is Quonochontaug; and Kentucky has its Rabbit Hash, Tearsville, Tarheel, Pope, Maddog, Taffy, Jamboree, and Nazareth. Here are a few more unique names: Gunpowder, Huff, Cash, Difficulty, Jug, Judy, Jingo, Bigbug and Biglick.—Tid-Bits.

Insect Vision.

An interesting subject is the study of the near and far sighted insects. Johanna Müller long ago pointed out that the flight of insects depends upon their power of vision. This will account for the difference in the flights of the common house fly and the wasp. The one confines itself to short flights; as his food is always to be found within a small area, he flies in short curves and circles. But the wasp is remarkably sharp-sighted, and the arrangement of the lenses shows that his line of vision is decidedly forward.

ALL THE DETECTING HE WANTED.

An Amateur Pinkerton Has His Ambition Satisfied in One Night.

After the discussion of an important arrest, stories that the subject suggested naturally followed, and this one was told by a leading business man, who would not dare to have his name accompany it:

"Like the great majority of boys, I was infatuated with detective yarns, and by reading them the mine possessed of the idea that I had the special qualifications of a great thief taker. The practical men in this line of business did not encourage my desire to enter their ranks, but persistency is one of my characteristics, and I was given a chance as a volunteer without pay.

"Just at the time I began operations there were a number of footpads operating in the city, and I secretly determined to win my spurs at once by hunting up these knights of the pavement. I conceived the brilliant idea of making myself up as a decoy, putting on a fine suit of clothes, plug hat, plated chain, and paste studs. Then I betook myself to the more retired portions of the city, and wandered about in search of game.

"As a decoy I was a bowling success. I had just passed a dark alley when I was swiped to the earth with a sandbag, a revolver muzzle was inserted into my right ear, and I had a very misty comprehension of what was going on while being stripped of my cheap ornaments, arms and pocketbook.

"I recovered from the effects of the assault in about ten minutes, but was very shaky on my pins. This must have created the impression that I was a swell on a toot, for I was held up three times in as many blocks, and soundly thrashed each time for not having more money to reward the ruffians for their trouble.

"You can be sure that the case was never reported, and all I ever said to the department was that they would have to get along without me because I had stumbled upon a much better thing. I still think I had a great scheme if the footpads had only stood in with it.—Detroit Free Press.

Orders Had to be Obeyed.

Hugh McD., a son of the Emerald Isle, who had volunteered for the United States Sixth Regiment of South Carolina Infantry, was stationed on the beach of Sullivan's Island, with strict orders to walk between two fixed points on the sandy patch without the countersign and that to be communicated only in a whisper. Two hours afterwards the corporal, with the relief, discovered by the moonlight Hugh up to his waist in water, the tide having turned since he was posted. "Who goes there?" "Relief." "Halt, relief! Advance, corporal, and give the countersign?" "I am not going in there to be drowned. Come out here and let me relieve you." "Divil a bit of it; the lieftenant told me not to resave him here, to live beyond one's means. It seems to afflict the humbler classes as much, if not more than the others.—Washington Correspondence of The Baltimore Sun.

There is no task that falls to the lot of the diver who goes down to the ocean's bottom in search of everything, from treasure to a dead body, that Mrs. Sorcho has not achieved. She is considered an expert, and is capable of doing any work that is done by the divers that travel around beneath the water of New York Harbor. A pretty woman, without a sign of masculinity about her, this lady has as much courage as any one needs in the work in which she is engaged, and that is saying a good deal.

Paints With His Feet.

Lessing's oft-repeated question: "Would Raphael have been a great painter if born without arms?" is positively answered by Herr Adam Siepen, one of the well-known artists of the renowned Dusseldorf school, whose portraits, landscapes and genre pictures, paintings and drawings attracted so much attention at this year's art exhibition in the old Rhenish town.

Some German critics who had come from all parts of the Empire to view the great things and small that one expects to find at the annual picture display in Dusseldorf became so interested in the Siepen exhibit of miniatures on ivory and copper that they determined to make the artist's personal acquaintance in order to learn more of his work and wonderful method. They were surprised to find that the painter was armless, and did his exquisite work by holding his brushes with his feet.

Curiosities of Nomenclature.

Perhaps the strangest specimen of local nomenclature in the United States is furnished by South Carolina, which has a post-office named Catarrh. But the following are not bad in their way: Grubgulch, Pullitight, Yum Yum, Shoulderblade, Ink, Mud, and Getup. There are a Romulus and Remus, a Romeo and Juliet, one Truly and Devoted Friend, but no combination of both. Georgia has its Payup, and Rhode Island is Quonochontaug; and Kentucky has its Rabbit Hash, Tearsville, Tarheel, Pope, Maddog, Taffy, Jamboree, and Nazareth. Here are a few more unique names: Gunpowder, Huff, Cash, Difficulty, Jug, Judy, Jingo, Bigbug and Biglick.—Tid-Bits.

Insect Vision.

An interesting subject is the study of the near and far sighted insects. Johanna Müller long ago pointed out that the flight of insects depends upon their power of vision. This will account for the difference in the flights of the common house fly and the wasp. The one confines itself to short flights; as his food is always to be found within a small area, he flies in short curves and circles. But the wasp is remarkably sharp-sighted, and the arrangement of the lenses shows that his line of vision is decidedly forward.

HE DIDN'T TOUCH THEM.

A Little Lying to a Gullible Thief Saved the Valuables.

I once had an experience that proved to me that there is honor among thieves, said a "commercial." It happened several years ago in a little town. I retired to bed in the hotel at my usual time, and placed my watch and pocket-book under the pillow. After having been asleep for some time, I was awakened by hearing a strange noise in the room. You can imagine I was considerably startled at beholding a man with a handkerchief tied over his face standing by my bedside. In his hand was a dark lantern, which almost blinded my eyes. He did not give me much time to think, but in a gruff voice demanded my watch and money. I don't know what ever put the idea in my head, but, endeavoring to appear as calm as possible, I said:

"If I sell you exactly where they are, will you promise not to molest me, and leave me to finish my sleep?"

"Well, you are a cool one, I must say," he replied; "but you just tell me where your valuables are, and I will promise not to harm you, and leave you in peace."

"I will take you at your word," said I; "my watch is at the jeweler's being repaired, and every cent I have is locked up in the safe downstairs."

He stared at me a minute or two, as though trying to tell by my face if I had spoken the truth, then, muttering something which I did not catch, he turned on his heel and walked out of the room without a word.

A BICYCLE FOR WINTER USE.

Run by a Gasoline Motor, Frame Heated and a Wind Shield.

A clever inventor has made it possible for the bicycle girl to ride her wheel twelve months in the year and to bid defiance to ice and snow, not to mention a gale or two. What is more, the fortunate young woman will not even have to furnish motive power for wending her way. Her machine is a little gasoline motor just forward of the rear wheel which impels the machine at any desired rate of speed. The young woman may imagine herself a lightning express and travel at an astonishing rate, or move along as slowly as she pleases. Her wheel bicycle will protect her from the cold blasts, too, for she will sit behind a shield. But even this is not all.

As much of the framework of the bicycle as is possible will be hollow, and these hollows will be steadily filled with constantly changing hot air, which is heated and forced to circulate through the pipes by means of the same heat that drives the motor. Thus, though out of doors, in the cold, and facing a brisk bicycle gale, who rides never need be cold or frost-bitten.

Sharks and Men on Good Terms.

"I saw an article about the unusual number and voracity of the sharks along the Florida coast," remarked a gentleman yesterday, "that interested me exceedingly. It brought an incident to my recollection that I had almost forgotten. It happened when I was making a trip on a sailing ship many years ago along the coast of India. Well, we had occasion to drop anchor off an island near Ceylon, and I sent a boat to the shore for a supply of fresh water, accompanied the boat and was really scared out of my wits to witness the incredible number of man-eating sharks that played about the yawl. When we had secured a barrel or two of water we put off, accompanied by two natives, who wished to see the ship.

The water was clear, and we could see dozens of huge sharks playing about the ship, and it was among the lot that the natives plunged when they had leave. They were not without warning, and I ran to the side of the vessel, expecting to see the hazardous fellows torn to pieces. For an instant there was no commotion among the sharks, and then, apparently scenting human blood afresh, a score of the gigantic man-eaters darted through the water in the direction of the natives, who were swimming quietly for the shore. The water was cut into shreds by the fins of the sharks as they fairly flew toward the swimmers. In another minute the two men were surrounded by the fish, and I closed my eyes to avoid seeing their horrible end. When I took down my hands the natives were swimming along in the same old way, and the sharks were coming back to the ship as quickly as they had gone. Well, sir, don't you know that the fish were so well acquainted with the islanders that they never touched them. They had been reared in the same water and were old friends."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

To Tell How Long You'll Live.

Starting from the base of the big toe there is a distinct line. That is the life-line. In one foot it will curve along until it terminates under the instep far toward the lower base of the little toe. This means long life.

If broken in the hollow of the foot, it denotes a sickness at middle age, and if it terminates in the hollow of the foot it means a short life. This line is the most interesting one on the foot. The experiments that have been conducted lately have proved this to be as almost unfailing reading of longevity.—Answers.

Rather Tinny.

"It must have been dreadfully hard to wear these old coats of armor."

"Yes; they have the appearance of hardware."

Gabway—I've seen your face before haven't I?

Gaghy—Most likely; I've had it before.—Roxbury Gazette.

POLLY ON A BIKE.

A Trained Parrot that Rides the Bicycle Mounted on Beak and Claws.

Now the winged steed has captured the winged creation. In Paris at one of the theatres the latest in the way of bicycle trick riding is done by parrots. A parrot is put upon a tiny wheel of the exact pattern of those ridden by human beings. He grasps the handle bar in his beak and with his claws gets a good grip on the pedals.

The wings are clipped so that he must depend solely on his leg power for locomotion. He rides about a little table furnished with a raised rim, to keep him from pedaling himself from a header over the edge. The parrot rides around apparently much at his ease, now and then giving vent to a hoarse cry of joy.

After several spins around the table, the bird is dismounted and placed upon another wheel, this one having hollow tires to fit a wire. A wire is then swung across the whole length of the room. The bicycle and parrot are put on it, and at a signal Polly works his legs and at full speed a la Blondin travels the long and perilous passage. To keep the equilibrium a second parrot is put on a trapeze underneath the frame and seems to enjoy the free ride immensely.—New York Journal.

MEN WITH ONE IDEA.

Strange Fancies that Have Become the Ruling Passion.

The man with one idea, and that idea the passion, the end-all and the be-all of life, is a numerous individual, and there is infinite variety to his eccentricity.

A clever French doctor, who had made a fortune in his profession, spent every penny of it in purchasing expensive chemicals in the attempt to construct a human body and to endow it with life. He died firmly believing that, given another opportunity, he would have realized his great ambition.

There is a man in England who once found his double in the crowd on the Strand. The next instant he lost him, and since then, day in and day out, he has raced up and down that street hoping to catch his physical counterpart again. That is his business in life.

There is a man who believes he can solidify the salt in the sea, the man who has a scheme to bridge the Atlantic, and the man who dreams of harnessing the tides. This is a very practical age, but it is the age of visionaries. Perhaps, after all, it's the visionaries who keep the world from going backward.

The Coachman's Fault.

An omnibus was going along a crowded thoroughfare with an immense railway van travelling by its side, but just a little in its rear. As they passed a certain street, out shot a dogcart at full speed, driven by a young gentleman with his coachman sitting beside him with folded arms. The driver of the omnibus pulled up short, and the dog-cart dashed across only to meet the full force of the van.

The youthful personage on the top of it, with his coachman, was, of course, thrown out, but otherwise not seriously damaged.

Then came the inevitable policeman, and the question whose fault it was.

The omnibus driver, who had seen it all, was appealed to by all parties.

"Was it my fault?" inquired the young gentleman.

"Your fault? Well, certainly not," growled the philosopher.

"Then whose fault was it?" continued the youth, greatly pleased, and naturally expecting the vanman to be denounced.

"Well, it was your coachman's."

"How how could that be? He was doing nothing; how could that be his fault?"

"Why, just because he was doin' nothin' and lettin' a baby like you drive!"

The Medium Was Correct.

Mr. Greville was persuaded, when he was over sixty-five years of age, to attend a spiritualistic seance. Foster, the presiding medium, was in great form, and the revelations were astounding. Greville sat silent, and his aged, wizened face was emotionless as a mask. Suddenly the medium grew excited, and said to the old gentleman:—

"A female form is bending over you. Oh, the extraordinary likeness!"

Greville sighed.

"She lifts her hands to bless you."

Greville sighed again.

"It is your mother!"

"Ah, poor thing," said Greville; "I am glad."

"She smiles! She says all is well with her!"

Greville sighed again, and said, "I'm delighted!"

"She says she will see you soon. You are old, and you must see her before long."

Then Greville quietly observed, "That's very true! I'm going to take tea with her this evening."

Tableau!

Shoe on the Other Foot.

It is said that while Rudyard Kipling was in England he became very partial to Miss Dorothy Drew, Mr. Gladstone's grand-daughter. He met her at a country house, and, being very fond of children, took her about the grounds and told her stories. After a time, Mrs. Drew, fearing that Mr. Kipling must have had enough of the child's society, called her, and said, "Now, Dorothy, I hope you have been a good child and have not been wearying Mr. Kipling." "Oh, not a bit, mother," replied the little girl; "but you've no idea how Mr. Kipling has been wearying me!"

HER OLD SLAVE AIDED HER.

One Reason Why the Color Line Was Not Drawn on One Patron.

Two members from Mississippi were swapping stories during the intervals between refreshments when in an accidental way the name of ex-Senator Blanche K. Bruce was mentioned.

"That reminds me," said one, "of a story told me a long time ago by a barkeeper at the Ebbitt. I was in there one day when Bruce came in, went to one of the side rooms, and having been served, walked out without saying anything to any one.

"'You don't draw the color line here, John,' I remarked to the barkeeper.

"'Not on that man, sir, I don't,' was the reply. 'I have had a pretty good opinion of him since a little thing that happened soon after he first came here.

"Bruce was in his seat at the Capitol one day when a card was brought to him. He read it and at once went out. On the waiting-room he found him with his wife. His carriage, drawn by a handsome pair of bays was waiting at the door. He called the carriage, assisted the mother and daughter to enter it with as much deference as he could possibly have shown them in the old plantation days, closed the door and told the coachman to drive to the Treasury. Then he called a public carriage and followed. The three entered the Treasury together, and before Bruce came out he had placed in the hands of the woman he had once called "Missus" an appointment to a good clerkship in the Treasury Department.'

"That," added the Mississippi member, "was the reason why the barkeeper didn't draw the color line at Blanche K. Bruce, and seems to me the reason was a mighty good one, too."—Washington Post.

RUBBER TEETH NOW.

An Invention of a New York Dentist Which May Prove of Great Value.

An entirely new thing in teeth has been invented which places artificial masticators within the reach of the masses. The inventor and manufacturer is a well-known New York dentist.

The invention is a departure from anything heretofore introduced in modern dentistry. It consists of a complete artificial set of teeth made entirely of rubber, the base, or plate, and the teeth being formed integrally. In their manufacture an ingredient or method is employed which not only insures a correct formation of the artificial masticators, whereby they are made to closely resemble nature's product, but also enables the process of what is called "setting the teeth up." A hollowed flexible metallic matrix, which both internally and externally reproduces the formation of the natural teeth, is made, which, when filled with the rubber and vulcanized, produces a perfectly formed set of teeth.

One of the greatest advantages of the rubber teeth, aside from their cheapness, is their extreme lightness. They weigh less than half as much as another form of denture.—New York Journal.

Electrical Rat-Killing.

At Kansas City electrical supply shop has an electrical method of catching rats in the electrician's cellar. A large square of plate iron is placed on the floor and above it another plate, not so large, and separated from the other, at a distance of an inch or so, by porcelain insulators. To each plate is attached a wire connected with a dynamo having a 1,000 volt alternating current. On the upper iron plate is scattered a seductive luncheon of bacon rinds, old cheese and lollies.

When a rat steps on the lower plate the current has no effect on him; but the instant he puts his paws on the upper plate to reach for the cheese the full force of electricity reaches every part of his sinewy body, and, expecting to scream, shoots up into the air in somersaults. The other rats, observing this, think he is jumping for joy and hasten to the feast. One after the other they are shot into the air and fall to the floor stunned, when they are seized, crushed and killed. Thus it is that science lends itself to even so humble an occupation as rat-killing.—New York World.

A Natural Apparatus.

"In Florida they have marsh hens that build their nests in the grass or in 'logs,'" said A. P. Cornell, of Jacksonville, at the National. "I was hunting along the upper St. John's River when I saw what at first appeared to be a log. Then I noticed that one end was split and went to investigate it. I soon saw that the object was a dead alligator, with its mouth wide open, and as I approached a marsh hen flew from between its jaws, showing a fuss that indicated its nest was near. On reaching the alligator I found its nest in its mouth, with four eggs in it. The carcass remains appeared to be whole, except a portion of the tail, which had rotted away. I went to turn the body over, and found that was a regular apartment-house. From the tail emerged three good-sized moccasin snakes, and from a hole in the side that I had not seen a grown frog emerged, while from a hole that occupied the mouth strenuously objected to my interfering with her home.—Washington Star.

Hen—Jones is all right, I suppose, but he and I do not like each other a bit.

Sue—Well, that is much to the credit of both of you.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE OPAL.

And the Silly Superstition Regarding It that Some People Have.

The absurd superstition held by so many that the opal brings ill-luck to its owner, as if there were a compelling power or genius residing in stones, would not seem to be shared by those who rate the two opals belonging to the French crown jewels at fifteen thousand dollars, or the famous one sent from Hungary to the World's Fair exhibition at twenty thousand dollars, or by those who protect the delicate and friable edges of very brilliant specimens by a thin lamina of quartz. The Hungarian merchants who take the pains to export the opal to the East by means of Greek and Turkish agents from whence they return to European markets as Oriental gems, are hardly intimated by the existence of this superstition; nor could Humboldt greatly have regarded it when he brought to the polite world of Christendom the splendid stone known as the Mexican fire-opal, too precious to be owned, with its red and flame-colored splendors, by many with less than imperial purses.—Harper's Bazar.

His Honor Had Been There, Too.

There was a certain Georgia Judge, not Judge Fish, however, yet one who believed in upholding the dignity of the bench, and, as well, was tenacious of his own personal honor.

A divorce suit, in which a gray-bearded dame of the late war was plaintiff, came up before him while he was on the circuit out in a back county. The rude court room was filled with spectators, and the old man seemed unwilling to go on the stand in his own defense.

"I am not going to grant divorces without good reasons," announced the Court, and the plaintiff went to the chair that served as a witness box.

"Sew," said he attorney, "tell us just what your wife did to make you leave her."

The witness looked appealingly at the Judge.

"Answer the question," was the order.

"Well, she called me names."

"That is not ground enough for a divorce," said the Court sternly.

"And she neglected me."

"Is that all?"

"And she said that I was a coward and a sneak because I went to the war and came back. She also said that all the brave and worthy men died in battle, and only the traitors and cowards came home, and—"

"That will do sir; the decree prayed for in your petition is granted," broke in the Judge. "I want you to understand, sir, that this Court went to that war and spent four years there—and the Court came back, too."—Montezuma Record.

The Clock of the Dead Kings.

Perhaps the most peculiar clock in the world is that in a tower in the court-yard of the Palace of Versailles. It has but a single hand, and is known as "L'Horloge de la Mort du Roi" to the French people, and to all other Europeans by the words which signify Clock of the Dead Kings. It has no works, but consists merely of a face with a single hand, the face being an imitation of the sun. Upon the death of a king in any part of Europe the hand is set at the moment of his decease, and remains in that position until another king passes away. This peculiar custom is said to have originated in the time of Louis XIII. The "Clock of the Dead Kings" is also the only relic of royalty in Versailles that escaped the furious mobs of the time of the French Revolution.

He Had Confidence in His Son.

When Mr. Rudyard Kipling was twelve, he went on a sea-voyage with his father. The elder Kipling became seasick, it is related, and went below, leaving the youngster to himself. Presently there was a great commotion overhead, and one of the ship's officers rushed down and banged at Mr. Kipling's door. "Mr. Kipling," he called out, "your boy has crawled out on the bowsprit, and refuses to come down!" "Yes," said Mr. Kipling, glad to know that nothing was the matter; "but he won't let go."

Odd Name for a Town.

A post-office town in Pennsylvania was strangely named. It is called "Alich"; and this is the way it came by that title. There are in that part of Huntingdon County five prosperous farmers, respectively named Anderson, Isenberg, Taylor Crum, and Henderson. Each of them wished the town to be named after himself, but they could not come to an agreement; and finally, as a compromise, the first letter from each name was taken and placed together, and thereby originated the old name "Aitch."

The Horrid Brother.

Clare's little brother heard the barber say something about her beau's beard being a la mode. Running in to her as she was seated with the family at the dining table, he exclaimed, "Clare, it won't be fun for you to kiss Mr. Mosser any more, 'cause he's had his beard all mowed."—Boston Courier.

Her Aimless Why.

"I hardly think," said the lawyer, "that you can get a separation from your wife on account of her making a practice of throwing things at you."

"But," said the man with the bandaged look and the black eye, "every time she throws at the dog she hits me!"

A lady having remarked in company that she thought there should be a tax on "the single state." "Yes, madam," rejoined an obstinate bachelor, "as on all other luxuries."

HERMANN'S WONDERFUL HANDS.

The Great Magician Had Remarkable Control of the Palm Muscles.

Herrmann, the great magician, had the most remarkable hands of any man of his generation. He had devoted many years to the development of every single muscle in the palm of each hand, with the result that he could control the tiniest of them as thoroughly as the ordinary man controls his biceps.

His hands were covered with a network of muscles so perfectly developed that he was able to make any particular spot take separate action and do surprising things on its own account. For instance, he could make the muscle of the ball of his thumb move by itself as easily as the ordinary man could move his whole thumb. It was to these wonderful hands as much as anything else that he owed the skill which enabled him to deceive the quickest eye.

The development of these muscles was the result of nearly forty years of incessant practice, during which the care of those hands was the chief object of Herrmann's life. No work or sport which could in any way harden or distort them was done.

The hands were naturally suited for the profession, but the work of perfecting them was one of infinite toil. The exercises caused an ache which spread from the finger tips to the shoulders.—New York Journal.

HUNTING WITH A MIRROR

Effect of Reflected Light Upon Birds and Rabbits in the Woods.

A taxidermist at Northwood, N. Y., has been making experiments as to the effects of light reflected in a bird's eyes. A glass seven or eight inches in diameter has been found most serviceable. The antics of blue jays are remarkable when the light strikes them as they sit in the shadow of an evergreen tree. They jump to another branch and try to look into the light, but they have to run away, as the light dazzles them. Then they fly around the branch but in no practice can he able to keep the light always on them, and the birds not infrequently come within reach of a man's hand.

A ruffled grouse gives a startled look when the light strikes it. Then it jumps, and away it goes. Hawks, too, are similarly startled or annoyed so that they fly off. Woodpeckers don't seem to mind it at all.

Rabbits blink and stare at a glass for a while, then go around a stump, and sit up again, as if waiting for the light to play tag with them.—New York Sun.

Washington Old-Time Card Customs.

"There is hardly any observance now of what was a time-honored custom in matter of formal calls," said an old employe of the Senate. "On the first day of every session every Senator sent his personal card to every other Senator as well as to the Representatives of his own State, to the members of the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, and the heads of the army and navy. So also Representatives sent their cards to every other Representative, and to the Senators from their States, and this way they indicated that they were ready to receive callers. The custom, as far as general observance is concerned, died out about ten or fifteen years ago, and probably would have died out sooner had it not been for the persistent efforts of the late Major Ben Perley Poore, long connected with the Senate, who did all he could to have it kept up. After he passed away the custom died out, though probably a half dozen of the older Senators and representatives remembered and observed it on Monday last."—Washington Star.

Origin of the Phrase "To Eat Crow."

The following is given as the origin of the saying "to eat crow": During the Civil War, or shortly after its close, a United States soldier shot a tame crow, the owner of which came upon him before he had time to reload his piece, and politely inquired the motive that prompted the act. This satisfied the owner of the bird, who walked away, but before he had gone a great distance he was overhauled by the soldier, who had loaded up again, and compelled him to return and eat the entire carcass of the crow. The owner the next day complained at the post. The commander sent for the soldier complained of and asked him: "Do you know this gentleman?" The soldier drawled out: "Ya-as; we dined together yesterday." In every day conversation the "to eat crow" is understood to mean that an individual takes back all he previously said in regard to a certain matter.

Punishment in Belgium.

There is no death penalty in Belgium, but few criminals would choose the punishment substituted for it, if they had a choice. The condemned man is placed in a dungeon so constructed that from the moment he enters it he will never hear the sound of human voices nor see a human being. His food is passed in through a sliding panel in the door of his cell. Not one prisoner has ever been known to survive this punishment more than three years. The authorities have striven in vain to prolong their lives by varying their food as much as possible, but those who are moderately or lightly nourished gradually waste away, while those who are fed generously go mad and die raving maniacs.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE JOKE ON THE JOKER.

How Herrmann Was Taken in by the Presentation of a Ring.

At the Gilsey House, New York, Herrmann was always a welcome visitor and never failed to astonish and amuse the employes and guests whenever opportunity offered.

Herrmann was invited to perform for the benefit of an uptown club at the Standard Theatre. His performance made the hit of the evening. After the entertainment the most prominent of the clubmen invited the magician to a little supper at the Gilsey House and at the same time informed him that he would be presented with a ring.

Herrmann felt sure he would be the owner of another diamond before he went home that night. Toward the end of the supper one of the members made a little speech, thanking the guest of the evening for his valuable services, etc., at the benefit and hoped he would accept the ring which would be presented as soon as the speech was finished. The applause which followed this speech was the signal for Herrmann's own colored boy to enter the room carrying a big brass gong. Herrmann at first thought it was a real joke taken in by that joke than he ever had been since.

CURIOUS WAYS OF OWLS.

Some See by Day as Well as Night and Others Hunt Field Mice.

There are two good reasons why the every-day hunter seldom sees an owl while he ramps. One reason is that some owls cannot see by day, and therefore select hiding places which render their discovery next to impossible as a person passes casually through the woods. The other reason is that there are owls that see by day as well as by night. These double-sighted birds discover the intruder long before he can possibly see them, and they lose no time in seeking places of greater safety. There are owls whose eyesight does not depend on darkness to be of use. The screech owl and the long-eared owl are among the members of the family that are blinded, or partially blinded by the light of day. Others, among them the boot owl, the snow owl, the hawk owl, and the short-eared owl, are sharp sighted, both by day and by night. The short-eared owl is a great field-mouse hunter in wheat or rye stubble. He is among the first of the family of winter owls that come down from the north to forage in this latitude.—New York Sun.

A SOVEREIGN'S COSTUME.

Hardly Capable of Being Packed in a Telescope or Steamer Trunk.

The German Emperor has twelve valets charged with keeping the imperial wardrobe, valued at millions. Every uniform has precious decorations.

The uniforms of all the regiments of the German army, with their helmets, caps, shakos, rifles, swords and sabres, are shut up in immense cupboards. The uniforms of the Imperial German navy are arranged in the same way. Next to these come the uniforms of the Saxons, Bavarians, Hessians and others. Separated in other large cupboards are the Austrian, Russian, Swedish, English and Italian uniforms, all ready to accompany the Kaiser in his journeys or to be used on the occasion of princely visits. Finally must be mentioned his hunting and shooting costumes, his court dresses, his yachting and lawn tennis uniforms and his private dresses. When the Emperor travels, his uniforms and costumes fill two or three carriages.

His Majesty is very fond of jewelry and curios. He wears half a dozen rings, a large watch and chain, and a bracelet on his right arm.—Globe.

His Gentle Voice.

Our neighbor went by the name of "Whispering Dick," which was given to him in ridicule. People said he talked as if he were brought up in a cave. One morning he walked into a public house, and called out in his thundering voice:

"Good-morning, landlord! How are you?"

"Very well. How are you?"

"Oh, I am about frozen; I can hardly talk."

Just then a nervous traveller who was present ran up to the landlord, exclaiming:

"Please have my horse brought as soon as possible!"

"Why, what is the matter?" asked the landlord.

"Nothing. I only want to get away before that man thaws!"—Answers.

A Woman Trapper.

There is a young woman living in New York who is popular wherever she goes, but more especially in the Adirondacks, where she spends her summers and autumns. She is a good shot with a rifle, and has killed a number of deer, but hunting is not her favorite amusement, for she prefers to trap her game.

There are not many women who know how to set a trap, but this one can give almost any man points on the subject. She owns a black fur cape, trimmed with reddish fur. It is very swell, and as the fur is fine and rich it makes a very handsome garment. The cape is of otter skin, the trimming of fox. The fur was all captured in traps set by the wearer, and, what is more, the animals were killed and the skins stretched and then tanned with her own hands.—New York Sun.

THE PLAINTIFF'S POWERFUL PLEA.

The Client Won His Own Case When the Lawyer Failed.

"I went into a country district in Maryland a few days ago to try a case," said a Washington attorney.

"I appeared for the plaintiff, and it must be confessed that the evidence failed to establish his claim. I presented the matter before the Justice of the Peace in the best light I knew how, but had very little hope of securing the verdict. My client, when I finished, whispered to me that he would ask if I were through, and, considering the case lost, I consented. It was the most unique speech I ever heard and it won the case. He said:

"'Squire, I brought this suit, and the evidence, except my own, is against me. I don't accuse any one of lying, Squire, but the witnesses are the most mistaken lot of fellows I ever saw. You know me, Squire. Two years ago you sold me a horse for sound that was as blind as a bat. I made the trade and stuck to it, and this is the first time I have mentioned it. When you used to buy grain, you stood on the scales when the empty wagon was weighed, but I never said a word. Now, do you think I am the kind of a man to kick up a rumpus and sue a fellow unless he has done me wrong?

"It took just five minutes for the Justice to decide for the plaintiff."—Washington Star.

BEQUEST OF A BIRTHDAY.

A Generous Gift from a Large-Hearted and Sympathetic Friend.

The following charming story is told of the late Robert Louis Stevenson. He was visiting a friend, afterwards consul to Samoa, in Northern Vermont. This gentleman had a little daughter about eleven years old, who very speedily became a great friend of the novelist's. In pouring forth her joys and sorrows in existence, she confided to Mr. Stevenson the woeful fact that she was born on the 29th of February, and therefore had enjoyed only three birthdays in her eleven years. The poet sympathized not only in comforting words, but also in action. He meditated for a few moments, then went to her writing desk and drew up the following document—"I, Robert Louis Stevenson, in a sound state of mind and body, having arrived at that age when I no longer have any use for birthdays, do give and bequeath my birthday, in the 13th of November, to Miss Adelaide Ide, to be hers from this year of grace forward.—(Signed) Robert Louis Stevenson." The little girl's delight at this rare and most welcome gift has shown itself regularly once a year for several years past, and now the anniversary will be doubly treasured.

COSTLY CHARCOAL THREAD.

It is the Most Expensive Product in the World.

As a matter of curiosity United States Consul Morris at Ghent reports to the State Department that the most expensive product in the world is the charcoal thread employed for incandescent lamps. It is for the most part manufactured at Paris and comes from the hands of an artist who devotes months to rendering it perfect in order to better protect the secret of manufacture. It is by the gramme that this product is sold at wholesale, in reducing its price to the basis of pounds, it is easily found that the filaments for lamps of twenty candles are worth $8,000 per pound, and that for lamps of thirty candles they are worth $12,000 per pound. The former have a diameter of twenty-thousandths of one millimeter, and the latter four and one-half thousandths of a millimetre. The filaments of lamps of three candles are so light that it would require nearly 1,500,000 of them to weigh a pound. As the length of each of them is ten centimetres, their total length would be 187 miles.—New York Journal.

Servants in Knickerbockers.

The women servants in the house of a titled English woman show go about their duties in knickerbockers. Lady Harberton, the noble pioneer who has accomplished this transformation, is at the head of the Rational Dress League of England. She has long been famous in that country for her divided skirts and her advanced opinions on many subjects.

Lady Harberton has favored the world with her reasons for introducing this reform into her household. In the first place, she says that bifurcated garments are good for all women, but particularly so for domestic servants. The nature of their work makes skirts a peculiar form of slavery for them.

A Wonderful Lock.

Long ago a skillful craftsman brought out a singularly ingenius contrivance—a lock formed of rings. Upon each ring certain letters were inscribed. This strange piece of mechanism could be turned until the letters represented the name Jesus, and only when this had been attained could the lock be opened.

No wonder that a well-accredited man of God to whom this wonderful lock was shown exclaimed, "Oh, that I could put such a lock as this upon my heart!"—Harper's Bazar.

Love Accomplishes Much.

Admirers of Gray's "Elegy on a Country Church-yard" will read with pleasure of the mother's love and energy in procuring toys and means for the boy's collegiate training. Assuring herself that her son possessed talents, her heart was so bent upon the development of his gifts that "she set up a shop," and so successfully managed its affairs that he was sent to Cambridge.—Harper's Bazar.

MR. CHUNG'S QUEER BUSINESS.

He Polishes the Bones of Dead Celestials and Sends Them Home to China.

Mr. Chung is a contractor in the employ of the Chinese Six Companies of San Francisco. He entered into a contract eleven years ago to travel all over the United States and exhume the bones of Chinamen. All Chinamen who die in this country have a contract with the Six Companies that, in case of death, their bones shall be returned to the Flowery Kingdom, and Mr. Chung is the man who personally sees that the contract is carried out. He is intrusted with the task of keeping track of the dead Chinamen, taking their bones out of the grave, and shipping them to China—the only places, according to their religion, where they can find absolute rest. As he is under $20,000 bonds to do the work well, it is needless to say that he is careful. He brings two assailants from San Francisco, who do the rough work. He had with him, when he came here, the names of four Celestials, three of whom had been buried and one in 1802. All of these will be exhumed and shipped. Dr. Gray, the health officer, having supplied a certificate that none died of contagious diseases.

Chung's contract says that he must not get the bones mixed; that each individual must be cleaned, put in a white muslin bag, and then be boxed securely for shipment across the Pacific. He is not allowed to cut, saw, or break a bone, nor can he boil the bones to get the flesh off, on penalty of forfeiture of his bond. He says that three years serve to do away with the flesh, but they are generally allowed to remain in the grave longer than that, in order to make sure of a clean job when he goes at it. Each set of bones is numbered, a record kept of them. All are shipped to San Francisco, and when four tons have been collected they are put on a steamer and shipped. The Six Companies have a special contract with the steamship companies, and the cost of a ride across the great deep in this particular condition is only $2.50, and the company boasts that there has never been a kick on high rates!

Mr. Chung's assistants aroused the four peaceful sleepers from their long rest, packed them away according to contract, and sent them on their way—if not rejoicing, at least according to contract.—Ellensburg Register.

IT LOOKED WARLIKE.

The Spanish Minister Was Alarmed at a Senate Junket.

Some years ago, when the question of immigration and yellow fever and cholera were being looked into, a subcommittee of the Senate was appointed, consisting of Senators Proctor, Chandler and Call, to visit Havana. It was just before the Christmas holidays, and the Cuban port in the winter season is not without its attractions. The proposed trip, however, rather disturbed the Spanish Minister. He knew the belligerent propensities of Chandler and Call, and he had a vision of a declaration of war in a despatch from Madrid, anxious to learn whether the investigation was proposed with peaceable intent.

Secretary Foster listened to the excited Minister with great suavity. "There is no occasion for alarm," he said, reassuringly. "You know that the holiday recess is approaching and these Senators are simply arranging for a pleasure trip. I am sure there is nothing else in it."

A great light of intelligence broke over the Spanish Minister's face.

"Oh," he exclaimed, "a peek-seek, a peek-seek!" And he went away much relieved.—Washington Post.

Not Safe to Think Aloud.

Baron Park, one of the most famous among a past generation of judges, was exceedingly deaf, and, like many deaf people, had contracted a habit of thinking aloud. When engaged one day in trying a man charged with stealing some firewood, he took unconscious prosecutor's identification of the stolen faggots. "How can he know that the faggots are his," soliloquized the learned judge, "when one faggot is as like another faggot as one egg is like another egg?" Roused from his reverie by a smile which was probably unhoped for even by the questioner, for it led to the immediate intervention of the judge. Turning to the jury, Baron Park remarked, "Gentlemen, you will acquit the prisoner." The thought flashed through my mind not a minute before the words were spoken by the learned counsel. It is a direct interposition of Providence.

The Fish Wouldn't Rise.

The following story is told of a celebrated novelist and a well-known critic. The critic had written a bitter attack on the novelist's work; but the latter, being a good-natured man, instead of overwhelming him with vituperation in any periodical he could and sufficiently accommodating to publish it, requested a mutual friend to bring the critic to his house to dinner some evening. When he received the invitation he was the critic's reply—"I certainly shall not go. He simply wants to heap coals of fire on my head; and do you suppose I am fool enough to hold the scuttle for him?"

Our Beautiful Language.

"Yes, with a great language. I heard one man say of another that the only way to make him dry up was to soak him.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A FREAK OF NATURE.

A Wonderful Growth of Hair Known as the Pilus Palonica.

The pilus palonica is as rare a freak as any that Mother Nature has ever perpetrated.

It is the most remarkable growth and arrangement of human hair that ever was seen, and gets its name from the fact that it has been found almost exclusively among the natives of Poland.

A specimen at Dresden is the most famous. It is over twelve feet long, and about six inches thick a foot from the head. It does not taper much, either, for the hair as it has grown has in an inexplicable fashion matted and interwoven itself so that it makes a solid and inseparable mass.

No pilus palonica is ever cut from the head of the owner, for the people of those northern countries are slaves to superstition. They consider the pilus a mark of divine favor, and everybody in Poland believes that it is in some way intimately associated with the vital spark. They think that if the pilus were cut off the life would pass out at the several ends of the strands. So, even though the whole family be half starving, they would as soon think of eating up their grandfather as of cutting off the pilus and selling it for money to buy bread with.—New York Journal.

WATER RICH IN COPPER.

The Outflow from the Anaconda Mine Worth a Fortune Every Year.

One of the most interesting sights in the great mining town of Butte is the process by which copper is caught from the emerald-colored water that flows from the Anaconda and St. Lawrence mines. It is estimated that this water, which for four or five years went to waste, is now bringing the Anaconda Company $5,000 a month, at a cost of about $1,000 a month.

It is only within the present year that the company undertook to handle this water. Heretofore it was worked under lease. An old German named Mueller was the first man to save copper from the water.

At the present time several acres of ground are covered with wooden vats. These are filled with all the old scrap iron they can hold.

It is said for every pound of iron put into a vat a pound of copper is produced. When the water attacks the iron the copper absorbs the iron completely within three weeks.—Anaconda Record.

Unable to Please Anyone.

A dealer was induced to dispense with his sign, "Fresh Fish for Sale Here."

"Why do you say 'fresh?'" asked a friend. "Nobody believes you would sell stale fish."

"But the word 'here' is superfluous," said the other. "You wouldn't have the sign if you were not the dealer."

"Why do you say 'for sale?'" queried another. "Nobody believes you are giving it away."

The sign was altered to read simply "Fish," when a little boy passing by said: "Take down that fool sign. Faith nobody thinks ye are sellin' oysters."—New York Sun.

A Tremendous Risk.

A Scotch journal tells of two impecunious Scotchmen who, having only a "saxpence" between them, ordered one "nip o' whiskey." They were hesitating who should have the first drink, when an acquaintance joined them. Pretending that they had just drunk, one of them handed the newcomer the whiskey, requesting him to join them in a drink. He drank, and, after a few minutes of painful and silent suspense, said: "Now, boys, you'll have one with me?" "Wasna that weel managed, Jock?" said one to his pal afterward. "Ay, it was," said the other, solemnly, "but it was a dreadfu' risk!"

His Replies Equal to the Questions.

The driver of a prison-van, known for his ready wit, was one day conveying his victims to durance vile, when a would-be wag on the footpath hailed him with: "Got any room inside yer carriage, Rubb?"

"Plenty room for a sma ane," returned the driver. "We kept it for you."

Bowsie disconcerted, the wag made another shot: "What's fare, Rubb?" he asked.

And Rub wiped him out with: "Bread and water; same as ye had before!"

The One Point of Recognition.

A certain farmer who lives in Northern New York, and who is by no means noted for his resemblance to Apollo, has a son of seven who has more wit than pedigree. One day a stranger came to the farm, and, seeing the lad, asked, "Sonny, where's your father?" In the pig-pen," was the reply. "In the pig-pen?" he said, as the man moved in the direction indicated, the infant terrible shouted, "I say! You'll know him 'cause he's got his hat on!"

Rider Haggard.

Mr. Rider Haggard belongs to an excellent Norfolk family of Danish extraction, and is a tall, slight, handsome man, with full blue eyes, fair complexion and brown hair. From eighteen to twenty-three he lived in South Africa, and probably knows more of the country and its languages than any other living Englishman. He was a heedless barrister before he flowered into a successful novelist.—Harper's Bazar.

"De man dat sin't got nuffin' ter do," said Uncle Eben, "cepin' ter kill time, generally sends me' help dan de boss ob a factory."

LONG LIST OF VICTORIES.

PARK CLUB BIG FOUR DEFEATED NEWARK WHIST PLAYERS.

The Park's, Profiting by Experience, Were on to the Tricks of the Visitors and Beat Them in Every Round Played.

The Park Club challenge whist trophy still remains at the clubhouse of the Park Club. It was the turn of the North End Club from Newark to meet defeat last Tuesday from the hands of the "big four" of the Park Club. The team from the North End Club was next on the list of challengers and they came to this city to battle for the trophy. The game was postponed from Monday to last Tuesday on account of the holiday and the ball at the club.

The Newark team played trump showing leads and they were successful in their first match. Tuesday the Park's were ready for them and easily defeated them by an overwhelming score.

The visiting four consisted of Messrs. Smith, Frasee, Eagles and Reynolds. The regular team Messrs. Rogers Townsend, Howell and McCutchen, represented the home club.

In the first round the Park's were victorious by a score of 7 to 5. They won the second round 13 to 5, and the third round 7 to 3, making a total of 27 to 13. The Park's played their regular game and their opponents followed their own system of leads. When they made weak openings they played them down.

The Park Club players will meet the the team from the Orange Whist Club on next Monday evening for another contest for the cup.

AN AMPHIBIOUS CAPTURE.

Frank L. C. Martin Returns From Florida With an Alligator.

Accompanied by an alligator, four feet long, and a small army of chameleons, Frank L. C. Martin returned to Plainfield Tuesday. He has been on a trip to Old Point Comfort and Florida and has spent a very enjoyable week. He started in company with C. E. Pearsall and E. J. Whitehead, of Westfield, and only expected to go as far South as Richmond and then spend a few days at Old Point Comfort. The trip was such a delightful one that he changed his mind and went on with them to St Augustine and Jacksonville.

He went swimming, picked strawberries, and enjoyed all kinds of fishing. While trolling on Lake Melrose he captured the alligator. His line became entangled in the amphibion's hind leg, as it was swimming across the lake, and Martin pulled the alligator in. It was captured alive and now reposes in a healthy condition at Mr. Martin's home on Park avenue.

Mr. Martin will now resume his duties with the company of which he is president, and install his alligator as an assistant in persuading his customers to buy wheels.

On to the Inauguration.

One of the greatest events of the year of 1897 will be the inauguration of President William McKinley at Washington, March 4th. The crowd there will be the greatest for many years and those who are able to go with the certainty of having a comfortable place to spend the night are lucky indeed. That is only one of the advantages offered by Honeyman's private excursion to Washington at that time. The party will go on March 3d and may return March 4th, 5th or 6th. They will leave on the Blue Line train leaving Plainfield at 2:17 o'clock in the afternoon. The party will put up at one of the best equipped hotels in the city. The terms will be $17.

Volunteers Washington Supper.

The American Volunteers held a Martha Washington supper in the basement of Reform hall last Tuesday. Before the supper, a meeting was held in the hall and Rev. W. C O'Donnell made a few remarks. Captain Patty Watkins was expected to be present but she was detained at the bedside of Captain Endicott, who was in a very critical condition in New York. After the meeting everybody was invited to the basement where a supper was provided for all. The supper was arranged by Mrs. Christofferson, Mrs. William Sharkey, Mrs. Pangborn, Mrs. VanNest and Mrs. VanHorn.

that the Council reserves the right to revoke the franchise in case of any failure on the part of the company, also that the business must be confined to this city. Mr. Barrows moved that the above be adopted and it was so ordered.

Mr. Frost took exceptions on the motion and stated that the city does not need such an establishment. On general principles he said that the city should own its crematory. He had not heard a single person say that there was any need for a crematory and he thought it was bringing things into politics which should not be.

Mr. Barrows said that the council was not giving a franchise to this company, and no one was compelled to let the company collect their garbage. He thought that if the city could have its garbage collected in a cleanly manner it would be preferable to the present method. As for politics entering into the matter he thought that it was an unfair reflection to cast on the councilmen.

Mr. Serrell wanted to give Mr. Smith, a member of the company, an opportunity to say a few words on the subject, but this was declared out of order. However, Mr. Serrell thought the system is a good one and favored it. He presented letters showing that it had worked successfully in other places, and immediately afterward Mr. Frost said that he had official records from the same places showing that it had been a failure and that he would oppose the motion. A vote was finally taken and Messrs. Frost, Runyon, Stebbins and Newman voted against it, while Messrs. Barrows, Baker, Tolles, Serrell, Westphal and Leivers supported the motion and it was adopted.

Mr. Westphal for the Alms committee stated that the committee had considered the plan of using the city property at the corner of West Front street and Rock avenue for an alms house and he offered a resolution that the Council appropriate $2,500 for the purpose of making the place a suitable one for the city poor. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Barrows then introduced the question of licenses. He said personally he agreed with everyone of the petitioners against granting them, but that he was there to represent the city and not himself. He thought that the requests placed the members in a very awkward position and that if the people of the city desired to make the place a prohibition one they should attend to that matter at the primaries.

Mr. Frost said that he agreed with Mr. Barrows that the proper time to act was at the primaries and not at this time when all the responsibility was thrown on the members. He said that he knew the character of the rum traffic and that as heretofore he would vote against the licenses on principle.

Mr. Barrows stated that he had investigated the places kept by J. J. Goff and that he had found it to be one of the best kept of all the saloons and hotels in the town and that the request from the Mt. Olive church was not warranted.

The following licenses were then granted: J. J. Goff, John Rafferty, Alex. Findlay, Henry Haurand, Jacob Blimm, J. E. Beerbower, Charles Smith, Frank Linke and Fred Casper. The application of Patrick O'Keefe was laid over for one week and those of J. J. Sullivan and William Willis were refused.

Mr. Westphal said that he did not want to be known as a crier for the liquor traffic but he thought that if any licenses were to be granted all should be. He advanced the argument that all were entitled to a license as much as one. Of his own personal knowledge he knew that those who were denied licenses kept just as orderly places as anyone in town, and so far as he knew there was no charges against them. In the case of Sullivan the business was the only support of a widow lady. He could see no reason why the Council should discriminate and he would vote for all.

Mr. Barrows in replying stated that he had nothing against those who were refused a license but three saloons on one block in a resident portion of the town he thought was too much. The policy of the city should be to confine the saloons and to have them kept as orderly and neat as possible.

Those who voted for all licenses were Messrs. Runyon, Newman, Tolles, Westphal. Messrs. Barrows, Baker, Stebbins, Leivers voted for all except Sullivan and Willis, while Mr. Frost voted against all except one hotel and Mr. Serrell voted against every license.

Mr. Frost reported that it had come to his knowledge that several inexperienced plumbers had been making connections with the sewer for a number of people in town. In some cases this had been done with serious results. He said that he would offer an amendment to the ordinance relating to that work so that it would only give practical plumbers the right. A little later Mr. Barrows offered a resolution that all permits be granted by the street commissioner and that the same be only given to boss plumbers. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Serrell called up the matter of the re-rental of the city court room. He thought that the city should renew the lease pending the erection of the new municipal building.

Mr. Barrows stated that he had consulted Judge DeMeza in the matter and had been informed that the room was not needed as the council rooms could be used when necessary and thus the city would save $144 a year.

A motion to renew the lease was lost and the meeting then adjourned.

Reading by Mr. Underhill.

A reading, or rather a rendering, of Sheridan's "The Rivals" will be given in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church on Thursday evening by Charles F. Underhill, of Brooklyn. The entertainment is given in connection with University Extension Course and admission will be by the regular course tickets only. It begins at 8 o'clock. The entertainment will take place on the same evening as the Peary lecture in Music Hall. The management tried to change the date but, owing to Mr. Underhill's numerous engagements, they were unable to make the change. Those who have heard Mr. Underhill before will be glad of a second opportunity of hearing him.

Primary Teachers Union.

The attendance at the Primary Teachers' Union meeting Tuesday afternoon was exceedingly large. The devotional exercises were conducted by Miss Beeching, and the lesson, "The Disciples Dispersed," was taught by Miss Shinn. A very helpful discussion followed the teaching of the lesson It was announced at the close that next Monday afternoon a business meeting would be held and on the following Monday Dr. Barnes will deliver an illustrated lecture.

A Distinguished Honor.

Jesse Lawson, formerly of this city, but now of the Pension Department, Washington, has been placed on the reception committee which will tender Vice-President Garret A. Hobart a reception on the evening of March 3d. Mr. Lawson is the only colored man who is on the committee and the honor thus conferred on him is a well-deserved one. Mr. Lawson was educated in the public schools of this city.

Support of a Native Missionary.

The Sunday-school class at the First Baptist church taught by Miss Linda Butler, has formed themselves into a King's Daughters' Circle, and Miss Butler has been chosen president. The new circle has for its object the support of a native girl in Burmah, and all other efforts will be directed towards the East Third Street Mission.

A DEVOTED MOTHER DEAD.

Death of Mrs. Abby Chase After a Life of Exemplary Conduct.

A devoted mother and a loving friend was lost when Mrs. Abby Chase passed away at her home on Jackson avenue, Saturday afternoon. She was in her sixty-fifth year. Mrs. Chase was ill for some time and it was known that the end was not far off but it came unexpectedly Saturday afternoon as she had seemed much stronger in the morning. She had been suffering with an acute attack of bronchitis but the cause of her death was heart trouble.

Mrs. Chase lived in North Plainfield about ten years, coming there from Clayton, N. J., where she resided for eighteen years. Her husband owned a pharmacy there and was the postmaster of that place. He died in Clayton, where Mrs. Chase's remains were taken this morning for interment. She was a member of the Congregational church and attended regularly when her health permitted. She left two daughters, Effie and Mary.

The funeral was held from her late home, last Monday. The simple service was conducted by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, who made a few remarks about the departed one. A duet, "Rock of Ages," was sung by Mrs. J. E. Morse add Miss M. G. Morse.

The report that Harper, the stationer, intended removing his stationery business to the Clinton building on Park avenue, Mr. Harper says, is untrue.

A PLUCKY WOMAN SHOT

GRAPPLED WITH A BURGLAR AND SERIOUSLY INJURED.

Exciting Episode at Cranford Yesterday Morning—Five Houses Were Entered—Mrs. W. C. West Not Daunted by Fear.

Cranford was visited at an early hour yesterday a. m. by a daring burglar who gained an entrance into five private residences, and only ceased his depredations after being grappled with by a brave little woman whom he shot three down a flight of stairs and shot twice, once in the cheek and once in the arm, having but a moment before tried to kill both she and her husband with two pistol shots after being discovered by them ransacking the house.

It was about 3 o'clock in the morning when Mr. and Mrs. H. C. West, who reside in a large house on the corner of Cranford and Elizabeth avenues in Cranford, were awakened out of a sound sleep by some noise in the hallway leading to their room on the second floor. Mrs. West was the first to realize that something was wrong and she exclaimed "Who's there." Just at that moment a match was struck in the hallway and Mrs. West could discern the silhouette of a man in the flickering light as she rose in bed. But no sooner had she spoken than the light was snuffed and two pistol shots followed one right after another. They were aimed in the direction of Mr. and Mrs. West, but they missed their mark in the darkness and became imbedded in the wall above the head of the bed.

Mrs. West is a nervy little woman of thirty-five years, of medium height and weight, and she jumped out of bed and ran to the hall where the intruder was still standing. He was a powerful-looking fellow and still held the smoking revolver in his hand. Nothing daunted by fear Mrs. West grappled with the man and a scuffle ensued in which the burglar attempted to kill her by shooting. The bullet took effect in the cheek and tore away a good deal of flesh. The man was too strong for the little woman to cope with and he threw her down a flight of stairs to the second landing and in the fall she tore away part of the railing. Then a shot again and this time the bullet took effect in the arm of the woman. The desperado then made his escape.

While all this was going on, West had been fumbling in the bureau draw for a revolver, but he was unable to find it before the assailant escaped.

Finally he came to her assistance and sent for Dr. W. C. Allen. The latter dressed the wounds and said that they were not dangerous unless blood poison set in. Mrs. West will be disfigured for life, however, as her cheek was badly lacerated. The wound in the arm will soon heal. Though greatly exhausted and weak from the loss of blood and the excitement Mrs. West bore up under her injuries in a wonderful manner. Who the burglar was there is not the slightest clue and he made good his escape.

In the morning it was found that probably this same man had entered four other houses previous to his escapade at West's. They were B. Grow's of Milne street; Walter N. Irving, of Milne street, where a gold watch and a small sum of money was missing. H. Boyce, Huyler street; J. M. Crane, Milne street. He was detected in the home of Grow, but escaped before there was any trouble.

West is a rice broker in New York, but he did not go to work next morning.

A RECORD RUN.

Vice-President's Special Train Made Very Fast Time.

The run made by the special train on the Jersey Central railroad, Tuesday, which carried Vice-President Garret A. Hobart and party to Washington, will be a record one for some time to come. Engineer Alpaugh did not tarry on the trip and arrived in Washington at 3:23 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon. The time of the trip was 4 hours and 8 minutes, twenty-five minutes faster than the record for the run from Jersey City to Washington.

The engine was the same one that drew the Blue Line that was in the Elkhiman wreck last month. It was manned by two Engineer Clapp, who was recently discharged from Muhlenberg Hospital, where he was confined for a number of weeks as a result of injuries received in the accident, run the engine, but he had not sufficiently recovered his strength so as to be able to go.

Call at Demarest & Son's and learn how to prepare and serve shredded whole wheat biscuit and shredded cereal coffee. Exhibit all this week.

The Fourth Quarterly Conference of the First M. E. church will be held this evening in Vincent chapel. Presiding Elder George W. Smith will lead.

AT LAST DEFEAT CAME.

WHIST TROPHY LEAVES PLAINFIELD FOR ORANGE.

The Park Club Seemed to Have a Night Off For the Orange Players Won by Six Points—One of the Big Four Absent.

The whist players of Orange did not want to take any advantage of the Park Club four, they thought that they could win without that, and sure enough they did. The game was postponed from Monday night and was played Tuesday in Newark, Senator Reed taking Mr. McCutchens place on the Plainfield team. Perhaps it was the different surroundings, perhaps the hitherto victorious Parks had an off night, but at any rate, the Orange team was victorious and the coveted trophy, which was offered by the Park Club, has gone over to Orange for a time.

The defeat came in the nature of a surprise, for the Plainfield admirers of the game were very certain that the Parks were invincible. This is the second time that the Orange players have defeated the Parks, that team and the North End Club, of Newark, being the only ones in New Jersey who have successfully encountered the Parks.

The Orange team was composed of Messrs. Rodman, Wallis, Herring and Foster. The representatives of the Park Club were Messrs. Rogers, Howell, Townsend and Reed. The Orange players were victorious by six points. The Park's played their ordinary game while the Orange men played an unusual brilliant one. Mr. Rodman of the Orange team is a son of Rev. E. M. Rodman, of this city.

FOR THE RIGHT OF WAY

TRACTION COMPANY NOW WANT TO GET INTO NEW BRUNSWICK.

The Efforts Will be Vigorously Opposed by the Brunswick Company—Hearings Before Board Were Held Yesterday.

Not satisfied with fighting the Brunswick Traction Company for the right of way over the line bridge between Somerset and Middlesex counties at Bound Brook, the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company has decided to make an attempt to run its line into the heart of New Brunswick, making a terminal there.

An account of the contest between the companies for the right of way over the bridge and in several townships has already appeared in this paper. The plan to get into New Brunswick has been perfected quietly. The plan of the company, according to Mr. McAfee, is to ask permission to build a trolley in the streets which are not used by the Brunswick Traction Company, but where the public deems a trolley is not needed. If the company carries out its original idea, however, to gain an entrance down Easton avenue, the most direct route from Bound Brook, the line will interfere with the Brunswick Traction Company's tracks, which already occupy a part of Easton avenue. According to the franchise of the Brunswick company, it has the right to construct lines through all the principal streets, so that the rival company, unless it can in some way get the better of the local one, will have only side streets for its lines.

Yesterday there was a consultation between Peter F. Day and E. W. Hicks, counsel for Piscataway township, and the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, as to what is to be done in reference to the road, against which a caveat has filed. The Brunswick Traction Company was also heard by the Piscataway Township Committee at New Market upon their petition for right of way from New Brunswick to Bound Brook.

WEAK FROM LACK OF FOOD.

A Man Found Unconscious in New Market Yesterday Morning.

A man who refused to give his name was found in an unconscious condition near the Washington avenue bridge in New Market yesterday. He was suffering from a lack of nourishment. He was taken to the home of Mrs. Wm. Spencer, where he was properly cared for and finally revived sufficiently to say that he had not ate anything for three days. He was looking for work as a machinist and had walked from Connecticut. He left for Morristown, Pa.

Fourfold Gospel.

Rev. F. W. Farr, of New York, will address the Plainfield Branch of the Christian Alliance on Thursday evening at 7:45 at the W. C. T. U. rooms Watchung avenue. Subject, The Fourfold Gospel, Christ our Savior Sanctifier, Healer and coming Kings. Prof. Farr will by request explain what the Christian Alliance is, its aim and work.

THE FIREMEN NOMINATE

WARREN ENGINE COMPANY HOLD AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

After the Business Was Transacted, a Pleasant Surprise Came When J. H. Cooley Presented Table and Chairs.

The monthly business meeting of Warren Engine Company was held last Tuesday at which time the officers for the ensuing term were nominated as follows: Foreman, W. B. Bennett, B. F. Conover, H. G. Adams; first assistant, W. B. Bennett, H. G Adams; second assistant, W. B. Bennett; secretary, J. J. Stahl; treasurer, E. E. Pepe; financial secretary, W. T. Newman; engineer, W. T. Newman; first assistant, A. Brokaw; second assistant, J. Sheppard; stoker, J. H. Cooley; representative to Firemen's Relief Association, L. B. Woolston.

The nominations were laid over for one month and the officers will be elected at the first meeting in May.

After the business of the evening a pleasant surprise was enjoyed when J. H. Cooley, on behalf of the company, presented the members of West End Hose Company with a handsome table and a set of chairs for their new house. The gift was accepted by Foreman Troom of the latter company with a few well chosen remarks.

The rest of the evening was devoted to sociability and entertainment. Alonzo Brokaw gave the boys an enjoyable time with his phonograph and there was vocal music by Oscar Vaughn, J. Newman, Harry Spencer and Herbert Schutt. Refreshments in abundance were served by the committee in charge.

During the business meeting a resolution was adopted that it is the wish of the company that Chief Fairchild be appointed by the new council. The resolution will be sent to the new council when they take their seats.

GAVE ALL A PLEASANT TIME.

Varied Programme Rendered at First Church of Christ.

The entertainment and social given last Tuesday in the First Church of Christ under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, was very successful, and the attendance was much larger than was expected. Mrs. Brown had charge of the excellent programme, which was as follows:

Organ solo, Miss Benner; poem, Mrs. Bryden; song, Miss Bella Demott; poem, Mrs. Staats; recitation, Miss Mabel Wilson; poem, Mrs. Shultise; reading, Miss VanMiddlesworth; poem, Miss Maggie Moore; duet, Mrs. Dodge, Mrs. Brown; poem, Mrs. Bush; dialogue, Misses Belle and Alice Demott; poem, Mrs. Wilson; recitation, Henry Staats; poem, Mrs. Dodge; duet, the Misses Benner; poem, Mrs. Smith; song, Miss Ethel Reynolds; poem, Mrs. Hand.

After the rendition of the above the pastor, Rev. W. O. Thomas, made a few remarks, in which he complimented those in charge for their efforts in giving all a pleasant evening, and extended to all a warm welcome to the services at the church.

PLANNING FOR ENTERTAINMENT.

Sons of Veterans to Do their Duty to the Brigade Members.

A largely attended meeting of John Hand Camp, Sons of Veterans, was held last Tuesday when several important matters were decided. The vacancy caused in the Camp council by the resignation of Charles Willis was filled by the election of Charles Stephens. A committee consisting of Frank Clarkson, L. E. Eaton and W. C. Dobbins was appointed to confer with the joint committee from the G. A. R. and Woman's Relief Corps for the purpose of planning for the entertainment and reception of the Second N. J. Brigade, who will come to this city April 9th.

An invitation was received from the W. C. T. U. to attend the entertainment in the rooms of the latter this evening and the same was accepted unanimously.

Death of Mrs. Ross.

After an illness lasting about two weeks, Mrs. Hannah Ross, wife of James Ross, of No. 229 East Third street, died last Tuesday from the effects of an attack of grip. During her illness she suffered a great deal but she was not considered seriously ill. She leaves a husband, a daughter and a son, the latter driver of No. 2 hose wagon at fire headquarters. The funeral will be held Friday afternoon from the house at 2:30.

A Parlor Entertainment.

A pleasant parlor entertainment was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Voehl, on Somerset street, last Tuesday. A few friends were present and listened with interest to Prof. Sherwood who gave several readings and he also performed a number of tricks, which were not only startling but new. The programme closed with a phonograph entertainment.

FOLLIES OF SOME MEN.

H. L. HASTINGS TALKS OF THE LACK OF MEN TO GRASP GOOD THINGS.

The Strong-Mindedness of Sinners Generally Results in Their Own Destruction—Women the Backbone of the Church.

H. L. Hastings, the anti-infidel lecturer, of Boston, addressed a large audience at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, last Tuesday, on the subject, "Weak-minded Saints and Strong-minded Sinners." The speaker was introduced by George D. Morrison, who referred to the lecturer as one having a National and International reputation.

Mr. Hastings spoke very much to the point and at times his remarks caused laughter. A portion of his remarks were as follows:

"It is generally held that the Bible is well enough for the children and women, but not for men in business who read the North American Review. It is conceded that the church has two women to one man and this shows that strong-minded men do not find in Christianity what they want and approve of. They feel as though Christianity was not up to the standard and that they are far beyond it. Men are so strong that you often see them able to carry a pint of liquor and your would not know that they had a drop. They strike far shorter hours, while the women work sixteen hours over their ironing or the wash-tub. Strong-minded men will fill the bottom of a chair for hours while their wives will labor from early morning till late at night. They find it very easy to spend their wages in short time, but on Sunday they will place two cents on the collection plate.

"On the other hand you will find that the leaders of human thought, the people who are most to the front every high station in life, are men who believe in God thoroughly. Why is it that religion is left for the women? There are about fifty secret societies in a town generally and it takes the men to run them, while the women go to church. You don't usually find the largest part of an audience in church composed of men, but I addressed an audience at one time where the men were largely in the majority. They were punctual and they remained in all the close of my talk. This happened in the State House in Massachusetts. There is no trouble to find men if you go where they are. Last year there were about sixty thousand prisoners confined in the United States and of this number fifty-five thousand were strong minded men while five thousand are weak minded women. It was shown that some of them were the best bookkeepers, peamen and mechanics in the country, but they were too smart for their business.

"Infidels will tell you to blow your brains out as a panacea for all ills, and for several years past the number of suicides have increased at a wonderful rate. During the past three years more people have gone out of the world in this way than there are in the standing army. As a rule there are four strong-minded men to one weak-minded woman who commits suicide. The former blow their brains out while the latter brave the storm."

Mr. Hastings brought his remarks to a close by drawing a few practical conclusions to substantiate his words and he pointed all to Christ who can and will save men and women from their sins.

FELL OFF A TRAIN.

A Newark Man Stole a Ride on the Cars and Came to Grief.

Jacob Harrobot, a Hungarian, living at Newark, met with an accident last Tuesday about 8 p. m. while stealing a ride on a coal train. The accident occurred at the Greenbrook tank, where the man fell off the cars and sustained a fracture of the skull. He was picked up by some persons who were near by and brought to the Muhlenberg Hospital about 9 o'clock where he was treated properly and is now doing nicely. The man's injuries are serious and it is not known whether he will recover or not, but the chances are that he will.

Elston M. French to Take Charge.

An interest in the insurance agency recently conducted by the late M. M. Dunham has been sold by his executors to Elston M. French. The estate still retains an interest in the business, and Miss Dunham will remain in charge of the office. This agency is the oldest in the city and represents some of the oldest companies. The firm name will be Dunham & Company and will occupy the same offices as heretofore.

Miss Grace Yerkes, of West Seventh street, is at Greenville, N. C., where she was called by the serious illness of her nephew, Charles Flanders. Miss Yerkes expects to be absent several weeks.

GAVE ORATORIO MUSIC.

DELIGHTFUL MUSIC RENDERED BY THURSDAY EVENING CLUB.

The Programme Made Up From Selections of "Elijah" and "Creation"—Club Met at Home of Dr. Carroll.

"An Evening of Oratorio Music" was held by the Thursday Evening Music Club last Tuesday at the home of Dr. H. K. Carroll, of Westervelt avenue.

The programme was a delightful one and greatly enjoyed by all present. As might be guessed from the name, all the selections were taken from well-known oratorios, principally "Elijah" and "The Creation." A paper on "The Evolution of the Oratorio" was read by Miss Carrie Dewey. Piano solos were given by Miss Whitney and Miss Lavinia French. A duet was given by Miss Whitney and Miss French. There were vocal solos by Miss Alice Carroll, Mrs. Asa Collier, Miss Julia J. Ketcham, Miss Grace Carroll and Elmer E. Runyon. A beautiful trio from "Elijah" was given by Mrs. Frank T. Clawson, Mrs. Asa Collier and Miss Julia J. Ketcham. Another trio from the same oratorio was sung by Mrs. Asa Collier, Miss Jessie Stewart and Robert M. Clark. Two choruses, one from "Elijah" and another from "St. Paul," were sung by a chorus composed of those already mentioned and Mrs. F. S. Cutter, Mrs. I. Winthrop Travell, the Misses Anna Boice, Carrie Dewey, Mary W. Ketcham, Anna W. Watson, and Messrs. Charles H. Angleman, A. H. Cornish and Franklin P. Noble.

The club will meet at the home of Miss Anna Boice, of Park avenue, on March 23d.

STORY OF THE PIRATES.

DR RIGGS TALKS OF A THING NOT TOLERATED BY CIVILIZATION.

The Old Time Sea Fights Described in a Vivid Manner by a Man Who Can Adapt His Words to Any Audience.

"The Story of the Pirates of the Mediterranean" was a sufficiently startling subject to attract a large number to the second of the University Extension lectures held in the chapel of Irving school, for the benefit of the residents of the west side of town. The chapel was well filled last Tuesday to listen to the speaker who never fails to charm a Plainfield audience, Dr. James F. Riggs. Dr. Riggs understands perfectly how to adapt himself to his audience, and his lecture was clear and simple enough to be understood by the youngest of the small boys who had come in to hear the "pirate story," and yet of the most intense interest to the most cultured member of the audience.

Dr. Riggs said he had not come to defend piracy. He might praise the pirates for their courage, and their fortitude under misfortune, but piracy was an awful crime, and one that would not be tolerated in a high state of civilization.

The Mediterranean Sea is itself unique. The lecturer described it as a scene of extraordinary beauty, with its indescribably blue water, so clear that one can see the bottom in a depth of more than a hundred feet; the great, wealthy, world-renowned cities upon its banks; the picturesque northern shore, indented with many fine harbors, and bordered by a multitude of islands; the arid, desert appearance of the southern shore; and the busy scene of activity presented by the sea itself, where one is scarcely ever out of sight of a vessel. This very activity was the cause of the outbreak of piracy, which began as far back as Homer's time, and, with the exception of one brief interval, lasted until about 1830.

Where a high civilization obtains, a man who is known to steal is looked upon at once as an outlaw. But in primitive communities, among semi-barbarous peoples, a man who excels in some sorts of stealing is regarded as the poor man's friend, and really virtuous. The Barbary corsair would say, "What right has that Genoese merchant to be rolling in ducats, when I need clothing and food. Some of that wealth ought to belong to us poor mortals." And he would start out to relieve the merchant of some of his wealth.

Dr. Riggs described very vividly the sea fights between the various sailing vessels of the olden time, and the swift galleys of the corsairs, the paying of tribute to the pirates by European nations, and even by America, the efforts to put down the treaty-breaking robbers, and their final extinguishment by the French, closing by saying that the final act of the atrocious story was now over, and the Mediterranean as safe as our own Hudson.

Miss Boice, of East Front street, is entertaining friends from Trenton.

PIVOTAL POINT GAINED.

THE CROSS-STATE TROLLEY LINE WIN IN BOUND BROOK.

Granted the Right of Way Over a Much-Wanted Territory—Council Vote Was a Tie and the Mayor Settled It.

Bound Brook is having the exciting experience of a war between two trolley companies for the privilege of extending their lines through the streets of that borough. For the past few months the representatives of both companies have been hard at work pushing their respective interests in trying to win the town's people over on their side. Until Tuesday the fight was an even one. The ordinances giving the two companies permission to lay their tracks in Bound Brook had both been passed on their first readings, and at the meeting of the Council held last Tuesday the ordinance favoring the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company was passed on its second reading, despite the vigorous opposition of the representatives and friends of the New Brunswick Traction Company.

The two companies which are striving for the mastery are the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company and the New Brunswick Traction Company. The former are planning to extend their line westward from Bound Brook through Somerville and Raritan and on to Trenton. Eastward the lines of the company will connect with those in Plainfield and thence on to Elizabeth with branches to New Brunswick and Rahway. Some day in the future this company hopes to complete its route from New York to Philadelphia but at present the portion between Trenton and Elizabeth is the chief point of interest. The New Brunswick Company is planning to extend its lines to Somerville and Raritan on one side and Plainfield, Metuchen, Rahway and New Brunswick on the other.

No matter which side wins, it is the central point of interest and the pivotol point of the route which both companies are trying to secure.

A meeting of the Bound Brook Council was to be held last evening in the council chamber but the crowd was so great that the Council adjourned to the Bound Brook hall. The hall was filled to overflowing with the followers of the two parties and interested citizens. Both companies were represented by their attorneys.

The committee, to which it had been referred, reported favorably on the ordinance giving the franchise to the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company and the ordinance came up for a vote on the second reading. The promoters of the other company had been assured that they had a majority in the Council. Three of the Councilmen voted in favor of the ordinance and three against it. The deciding vote was left to Mayor Coddington.

There was a breathless silence that preceded the remarks of the Mayor. Then he announced that he would vote in favor of the ordinance and a cheer rose from the audience that filled the hall.

The ordinance has been amended so that the town has been assured of a railroad. Ex-Judge W. A. Coddington, of Plainfield, the corporation counsel, has looked over the ordinance and put it in its present shape, making a number of valuable suggestions of great interest to the borough.

MONEY TO WIDEN ROAD.

Washingtonville Ready to Help the Trolley to Their Homes.

A meeting of the property owners of Washingtonville was held Tuesday in the school house for the purpose of deciding about the collection of the money for the proposed widening of the road for the trolley.

Robert Clark was chairman of the meeting and F. A. Blume secretary. The chairman appointed Wm. Demler and Theo. Leersen as collectors, and Mr. Clark was made trustee to hold the money as it is collected and pay it out as directed by the township committee as the work of widening proceeds.

In all $825 has been subscribed by the property owners and this money is only intended to assist in the work. The collectors will call on the subscribers in a few days.

Missionary Lectures.

Rev. W. S. Bannerman, a returned missionary from Africa, will deliver the first of the missionary extension course lectures at the Park Avenue Baptist church, Tuesday evening, March 16th. These lectures will be held under the auspices of the local union of the Christian Endeavor.

Mrs. McNaire to be Buried in Brooklyn.

The body of Mrs. McNaire has been taken charge of by Terrill & Cole, the undertakers, and it was removed to Brooklyn this morning, where the funeral services will be held at the home of a relative. The interment will be in Greenwood cemetery.

BELIEF REWARDED.

"There are exceptions to all rules, of course," said Low, the talkative member of the club, at the other side of the room, "but I assert once more and for the last time—no, I really must go, thank you—that nine-tenths of our girls would no more think of marrying a man without money than they would of staying in New York all summer;" and amid a chorus of questions and decisive remarks, Low marched out the door, as firm as ever in his opinions.

The others looked at each other and then Ames remarked slowly:

"I fear me much that Low is getting pessimistic. He never used to be so."

"Perhaps he has gone through the mill, who knows?" said Redmond.

"He has," replied Graham, "and was ground out exceeding fine. His betrothed threw him over when he failed."

"Lucky man," murmured the romantic boy; and the others smiled indulgently.

"And of course he thinks his experience the rule," said Topleys. "But why shouldn't it be the exception?"

"It might be but for the fact that Low never did an exceptional thing," returned Stratford, decisively, "and you fellows don't understand what he means, any way. He did not say it was the fault of the girls; he did not say that they do not know how to love a man as they used to when true love was the thing, the absolutely correct thing; all he asserted—and I quite agree with him—was that our girls have not the moral courage to face poverty with a man with the man they love, and I don't blame them. We've become so used to the so-called luxuries of life that you cannot place a finger on one of them that hasn't really become a necessity, and no man wants to drag a girl from the comforts that riches provide down to a struggling fifth-floor back existence for the mere satisfaction of seeing her three times a day in place of once."

"It love," gasped the romantic boy, "do you count it out completely?"

"My dear boy," returned Stratford, turning upon him, "you are young, exceedingly young, and you must not try to monopolize the conversation with such serious topics. Love is all very well in its place, but it should never interfere with business, and marriage is a business nowadays quite as much as cornering wheat."

"And about as uncertain as to profits and losses," added Ames.

"Exactly, though when we've cornered a wife she usually stays."

"Except in Chicago," ventured Redmond—but no one heard him.

"To blame the girls for this state of affairs is nonsense and unjust," Stratford went on; "it is due to our progressive ideas, and nothing more, not to the girls, who simply do as they must. Though I deplore the fact that we are a mercenary nation, I can't see that we can lay the blame upon the shoulders of our girls and women, with any justice. They but do our biddings, and if we—that is, the fathers of the girls, understand, say 'Go, thou, and pick thyself a rich husband or die,' and I've often founded before creditors!" pray, tell me, what choice have they? None. And so long as this has been going on in one form or another, that you do not find our girls marrying poor men."

There was a pause after this outbreak on Stratford's part, and then Holland, the only man who had not as yet spoken, said:

"And yet, Stratford, Low acknowledged exceptions to this rule. You do not, do you?"

"Oh, yes!" replied Stratford, "one in ten thousand. But I do not know ten thousand girls, my dear fellow, and I never expect to meet that exception, though I should like to do so! She must truly be a remarkable girl."

"I hope you will some day," said Holland, quietly; "I think it would do you good, and perhaps make you appreciate your sisters more."

The others cast an angry look at the speaker, but Holland met it calmly and said nothing.

"I speak from experience, or that of Low and several others, whom I happen to know have suffered as he has," said Stratford slowly, "and I dare say that there is not an engaged man in this club who would go to his fiancee and tell her he has suddenly failed, and keep the deception up for a week. If he did, he would find himself free again, that's all."

The small number of engaged men in the room smiled thoughtfully and said nothing. Those who were not, nodded decidedly, but Holland was still undismayed.

"Though I am not an engaged man, and therefore cannot prove or disprove your assertion," he said, "I feel sure that you are radically wrong. Though the tendency of the time is to look at our emotions and great passions, and to be iconoclastic to the last, in everything, I can't but believe that there are girls whom you and I know, who would willingly give up all their needful luxuries, their social standing and their past life in society, to go, hand in hand, with poverty even, each with the man she loves—to share his fate and be the partner of his joys and sorrows, just as they did when your mother and mine were young. I am not looking at life—nor the girls of our set—through rose-tinted pince-nes, but humanity is humanity all the world over, and through ages past and ages to come; and love, after all, is 'the greatest thing in the world.'"

"Good heavens, whom have we here?" exclaimed Stratford, staring at the speaker through his eyeglasses. "A believer in love! A believer in the most worn-out creed the world has ever known, and one that no sane man ever listens twice to. Yet the world is full of people like you, Holland, and it is just such—"

"Fools that make you wise men stand out in pleasing contrast? Perhaps; and yet it is also just these fools who make life worth the living, and this otherwise dreary old world a more cheerful habitation?" and Holland rose from the magazine before Stratford could finish lighting his cigar and return to the attack.

*** *** ***

It was hardly fair for Holland to declare himself an unengaged man, for, though it was literally so, he had no idea of remaining in that condition—that wretchedly, destitute condition, as the Romantic Boy would have said—any longer than fate and Katherine would have kept him there.

With his mind still on the conversation he had had with the pessimistic member of the club, he made his way home, and while dressing for dinner he looked long and earnestly into the mirror and inquired of the reflection there whether he dared try that fate that evening.

The answer must have been in the affirmative, for when he got home, somewhat later than usual, there was a very happy light in his eyes, and the faintest possible odor of violets in the palms of his hands.

That night he was the most light-hearted man in the whole city. A week later he had lost every cent he possessed.

It has never been satisfactorily demonstrated just why one's fortune takes upon itself wings at the most inopportune moment, though Stratford insists that any time is inopportune for such a performance—and flies away, but almost invariably it is when some splendid scheme is about to be put on foot, or as was the case with Holland, when one is in the seventh heaven of earthly bliss, that one's income suddenly leaves without notice, and utterly refuses to return.

This is what had happened the poor fellow who had believed in love, and for a while after the blow dim ideas of flight, of suicide, and other equally absurd things flitted through his benumbed brain, but in the end his good old blood and his own true grit came to his rescue, and he faced ruin, utter and complete ruin, with a calm and steady nerve.

It was not for himself he had cared—not of himself had he thought, but of her; of her love, and what this downfall of his business would mean to her; and the picture of her questioning eyes and white face, as he knew it would be when he told her, made him bury his own in his hands and groan aloud. Then, shutting out this vision, he went about the work of clearing the wreck away as if it were a weekly occurrence for him to fail.

But all the time, as he worked over balance sheet after balance sheet and account after account, there were the haunting eyes before him, and the sweet face he had loved so long; and ever in his ears the cynical utterances of Low and Mr. Stratford.

Were they right? he found himself asking time and again—would she throw him over? No! A thousand times no! cried his heart. Then could he ask her to share that mere pittance he had managed to scrape together from that wrecked business—could he ask her to leave that comfortable home and the family who adored her to live with him in that fifth-floor back Stratford had mentioned? Could he ask he to do that? Could he?

His sacrifice would mean nothing—he cared nothing for society itself—but what of hers? Think of her taking care of her two or three little rooms, and wearing her life out trying to make his diminished income meet the grocer's bills; think of her getting his meals for him—actually cooking over one of those heathenish little gas stoves! Could he let the possibility of this stare him in the face and still go on, and ask her to wear out her life for him thus? No; she should never begin to do so.

And so, realizing that it must come, he steeled himself and resolutely turned his steps toward her home the night after the downfall—to her house, where he should see with the last of his hopes and ambition—to see the funeral of his own love.

"I cannot ask you to wait for me, Katharine," he concluded, speaking very slowly lest the despair he felt should show itself in his voice. "The future is very uncertain, and it would be unfair. You—are—I—oh, darling, I cannot say it!" and with a groan he turned away with those steady eyes and stared blindly into fire.

For a moment she did not speak, and his heart beat slower and slower, for he knew the end was there. Then she came forward a step, and held out one white bare arm to him.

"Look, dear," she said gently, "Mechanically he took the pretty arm in his hand and looked at it. A long red mark, like a fresh scar, disfigured the tender flesh across the wrist.

"What is this—what does it mean?" he asked wonderingly.

"It means that I heard of your trouble last night, and this,—this is a burn."

"A burn, yes," repeated Holland dazedly, "but—"

"Why, can't you see, you dear, stupid boy," she said, half way between laughter and tears now, "I've been learning to cook!"

And then—well, then the man who believed gathered her into his arms and held her there quite as tightly as if he had fifty thousand a year.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

For the first time since the civil war guns mounted on the defences of old Fort Washington, which was supposed to guard the national capital against sea attack, sounded to-day as three shots from modern steel eight-inch guns swept six miles up the Potomac River toward the city and dropped into the water just a little short of the sleepy old town of Alexandria. Fort Washington, twelve miles below Washington, some time after the war was abandoned as a fort, and since then has been in charge of an orderly sergeant; but in the past five years the authorities have been expending thousands of dollars converting it into a modern fortress, and within a very short time there will be such a formidable array of guns and mortar batteries there that no fleet entering the river could ever get above it. The new emplacements, where eight and ten inch guns are to be placed, is on a high bluff where the river makes a turn. Opposite, and not over a mile distant, will be Fort Sheridan, which will be supplemental to the main defences. Here the channel is not over 300 yards wide, and already there is a torpedo system ready to effectually prevent the passage of any ships. Every gun when in action will probably be 200 feet above the line which commands not only a sweep of twelve miles down the river, but the entire channel up to the city, eight miles away. On the opposite shore will be Fort Sheridan, mounting probably four 12-inch guns and two or three rapid fire guns. Washington's battery, when completed, will comprise five 8-inch guns, several of the old 15-inch smooth-bore mortars, which are now in place, and capable, it is believed, of sinking any but heavily armored ships, besides the submarine mines to be worked from batteries well protected under the fort.

The Sayres bill, providing for the taking of the twelfth census, does away with the former separate office of Superintendent of the Census by providing that the Commissioner of Labor shall have charge of the work. It makes the salary of the Commissioner of Labor $6,000 and gives him the power to appoint an Assistant Commissioner who will get $4,000 a year. There are to be five expert statisticians at $2,000 per year each, and many other places that the Commissioner will be at liberty to fill without consulting the wishes of the President of the Senate.

The etiquette between the outgoing and incoming Presidents is exact and rigid. Mr. McKinley will go to the White House and drive to the Capitol, simply a private citizen, followed by the side of President Cleveland. On the way to the Capitol the President lifts his hat to the cheering crowds occasionally, although the new man does most of the bowing. But coming back he keeps his hat on, and the two exchanged places with the simple citizen who drove down sitting on his left, and returns sitting on his right and President of the United States. On the return to the White House a luncheon is given by the outgoing to the incoming President, at which the first-named is host and the guests are the members of the two cabinets and their families. When this is over, the outgoing President takes his leave, the incoming President escorting him to the door of the mansion. But this is not the last time he enters it. On every occasion that an ex-President visits Washington his first obligation is to call at the White House. He is immediately received, no matter how much engaged the President may be. The head usher acts as his escort, and he is paid more personal attention than any guest who ever enters the house.

Not a great while ago notices were put up in the House wing of the Capitol prohibiting smoking in the corridors, the committee rooms, the hall and the elevators. Employees of the House were specially prohibited from smoking. The doorkeepers and the Capitol police were instructed to rigidly enforce the order. The members and officials were not to set the slightest attention to the regulations, and some of the police say that inasmuch as the order is not signed by any one they do not believe they could rightly arrest a man or boy should he insist on smoking. "I happened to be standing near the door," said a sergeant-at-arms, "and suddenly I saw a large body turn into that same corridor and come my way. I thought there was a chance to call a man down for violating the order, and was looking along to see an unusually big cigar in his mouth, and you would have thought it was a tugboat from the clouds puffed out. I was about to yell 'Smoking is not allowed in this building,' when to my great astonishment I discovered it was Speaker Reed himself. I felt like telling him he was breaking the rules, but on the second thought concluded he was too big and mighty for me to joke with, so I did not even pretend that I saw him."

"The heating and boiler plant of the State, War and Navy Departments building," said Commander Baird, U. S. N., superintendent of the building, "though not generally known, is the largest in the world. Indeed, there are very few heating plants in existence that even approach it in extent or power. To run it requires 5,000 tons of coal every year. By the arrangements in connection with the coal vaults, the coal goes direct to the furnaces, where it is consumed with one handling and at very little expense. In my opinion the heating plant is also far superior to any other."

UTILIZING COBWEBS.

The Manner in Which It is Obtained for Surveying Instruments.

Cobwebs have been applied to various uses. The delicate cross hairs in the telescopes of surveying instruments are fine webs taken from spiders of species that are specially selected for their production of an excellent quality of thread material. The spider, when caught, is made to spin his thread by tossing him from hand to hand, in case he is indisposed to furnish the article. The end is attached to a piece of wire which is doubled into two parallel lengths, the distance apart exceeding a little the diameter of the instrument. As the spider hangs and descends from this, the web is wound upon it by turning the wire around. The coils are then gummed to the wire and kept for use as required. About a century ago, Rod of Languedoc succeeded in making a pair of gloves and a pair of stockings from the thread of the spider. They were very strong, and of a beautiful gray color. Other attempts of the same kind have been made; but Reaumur has stated that the web of the spider was not equal to that of the silkworm, either in strength or lustre. The cocoons of the latter weigh from three to four grains, so that 2,304 worms produce a pound of silk; but the bags of the spider, when cleaned, do not weigh above the third part of a grain.

A GLOBE-TROTTING DOG.

Donnie II. Has Placed 40,000 Miles to His Credit in the Last Few Years.

"Donnie II., the property of Capt. A. H. MacMahon, is winner of first in novice, and third in limit and open classes at Northampton, Mass. In his short spell of life he has traveled some 40,000 miles, of which some 20,000 have been by sea, some 8,000 on horseback, and some 12,000 by rail. It does not often fall to the lot of any dog to have made three journeys to and from India, to have traversed the length and breadth of that great continent, and visited Afghanistan, Beloochistan, and Persia, and as he has accompanied his master on his wanderings in countries where roads do not exist and wheeled conveyances are unknown, he has been obliged to acquire the art of riding horseback, which is a feat that will endear him to every sporting Briton, man or woman. He is equally at home in the saddle, whether his steed walks, trots, canters, or gallops. With his hind quarters against his master's waistcoat, he is quite independent of steadying hand, and has a firm seat even over jumps, and 8,000 miles on horseback is a fact that speaks for itself as to his balance.—New York Sun.

NEW YORK LETTER

Brooklyn has the distinction of embracing in its territory the most unique burial plot on earth. The plot is located on a beautiful slope to the right of the main entrance to Evergreen Cemetery. This plot is the property of the United States, and has been set apart as the last resting place for the sailors who die in the port of New York, friendless and far from home. The plot occupies the most desirable location in the cemetery, and now contains the remains of nearly two thousand sailors. The plot consists of three acres on the highest ground, and has been in use for upward of forty years. On the plateau is a marble monument, rising in base, pedestal, shaft and capital to the height of 60 feet. The pedestal has four panels, one bearing the inscription: "For Sailors of All Nations," while the others bear nautical emblems and the names of the first Board of Trustees. Surmounting the capital is a marble globe, on which is engraved the map of the world. Parts of the plot are allotted to Asia, South America, Oceanica and Africa, while under the head of Europe separate lots have been set aside for the benefit of the various maritime nations of that continent, France and England being allotted the largest lots. All the American sailors are interred in the plot allotted to the United States. Canadian, Mexican and Central American sailors have separate lots. Each subdivision of the plot has a large stone, with the name of the country to which it is assigned in raised letters on its surface.

Miss Lillian Russell recently added classes at Northampton to her experiences, and gave the prisoners spending Sunday in the Tombs a chance to do likewise. In accordance with the wish of the Rev. William Lindsay, who conducts the Protestant Episcopal service in the Centre and Leonard Street Jail (when there are enough inmates left in the latter place to hear it) Miss Russell rendered a semi-religious vocal solo for the occupants of the Tombs cells. She has sung before hundreds of larger and more fashionable houses, but few of them had looked forward with keener expectation to her coming or found more delight in the exercise of her talent. The fact that Miss Russell was to sing in the Tombs had been sufficiently advertised beforehand. Deputy Warden De Caprariis said that he had been pestered for three days by people who wanted free passes to the Tombs for the occasion. There was, in fact a respectable scattering of visitors about the railing in the corridor, and in the corridors when Miss Russell climbed the stairs that lead to it with her accompanist, Paul Steindorff. She wore a jaunty hat, a black jacket richly faced with sable fur and a black skirt of broadcloth. The prisoners trained their eyes to catch a glimpse of her through the bars of their cell doors and the backs of accommodating guests that stood between them and Miss Russell, but made no special demonstration at her appearance. She walked to the little organ that is used in the regular afternoon service, and after the clergyman had introduced her to the audience, who might be supposed not to know yet that she had come, Mr. Steindorff played the instrument, Miss Russell sang James Thompson's "A Song of Thanksgiving," the words of which were written by Francis Alston. As she finished, the hollow sound of applause echoed from the cells and down the corridor, the clanging of the hardened hands mingling with what seemed to be the sound of a tin basin. The applause grew into an encore, and Miss Russell was willing to respond, but Mr. Lindsay did not understand. She gave no encore, therefore, but later repeated the same selection before the boys' prison, whom she smilingly declared to be the best gallery she ever sang to, the sang also for the female prisoners.

Miss Russell expressed herself pleased with her little adventure, and said that she would come down later on a week day, without announcing it beforehand, and sing some ballads to the prisoners.

There are 1,600 persons in various grades of service on the pay roll of the New York Custom House, with salaries aggregating more than $2,250,000 in a year. The number of clerks and inspectors exceeds 400 of each.

The average number of voters to a house in New York city is three. There are 110,000 houses and 330,000 voters.

The Populist vote in New York city cast at the recent election for Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals was 1,367 votes.

The Rev. Lyman Abbott and other Congregational ministers are surprised and indignant because of a new State law which, it is just discovered, is destructive of the Congregational form of church government. Each Congregational Church is not only absolutely independent of each other as regards doctrine and policy, but each member is the equal of every other member, and the pastor has no absolute authority. The new law, it is discovered, not only makes the pastor an autocrat, but puts the individual churches in larger measure under control of the association or denomination to which they belong. This, of course, is entirely contrary to Congregational and Baptist usage, and the churches will try to have the law amended so as to exempt them from its operation.

A NEW HORSE.

A Great Oddity in Horseback at Buffalo, New York.

A horse belonging to a family in Rochester has a coat of tight, curling hair and no mane or tail worth mentioning in a horse sale advertisement, unless the buyer was to be a showman of oddities. The mare is well built and sound in every particular, kind, docile and easy to handle by a woman or child, stands fifteen hands high and weighs about ten hundred and behaves like any other being of her race. But her bay-colored coat is like all the world like a buffalo robe, is the curly kinkiness of its hair, and where the hair has become worn away on the head by the bridle or halter and on the shoulder, where burrs have been pulled out, it becomes very much the appearance like an old moth-eaten buffalo robe that has just been pulled out of some neglected, dusty old barn use in the first sleighride of the season. The mare can boast no mane or forelock and her stump of a tail is only sparsely covered with short hairs. Then some time ago she was clipped by a former owner and traveled in a rainy day 235 on the ice, driven by a boy. In trotting she curls her tail up like a dog dog, so would hardly be an addition to any stable of stylish colts or fresh horses.—The Rochester Union.

Saved by a Sausage.

It is possible to overestimate the courage of a robber, as may be seen by this story of Judge Seymour D. Thompson's, given in the St. Louis Republic:

McNab was the hero of a hair-breadth escape. It was in Canada, where McNab was a fellow-collegian with my father, Reverend Seymour Thompson. The two became separated on the night of McNab's adventure. The Scotchman, unarmed, was going through a forest. He had a package of Bibles on one side of his saddle, and on the other a string of frozen sausages, to be thawed and cooked for his breakfast. A highwayman stopped McNab's reflections and his progress at the same time.

The Scotchman was frightened—he never denied that. He had a little money in his boot, and he leaned over to get it and satisfy the demand of the robber. His hand struck the string of frozen sausages. He bethought himself of these. Perhaps they would be accepted instead of money. He broke one of them in two and was about to offer half of it to the highwayman, when suddenly he found himself short the latter the cluster of a horse's posterior retreating boot's. Badly frightened as he was, McNab laughed. The robber had mistaken the cracking of the sausages for the cocking of a pistol, and had fled.

Ian Maclaren Named the Class.

John Watson (Ian Maclaren) was asked to give a name to a reading circle of a hundred young women at Knox College, Illinois. He chose the name of Jacobites of the White Rose, and gave the following explanation of the name which he chose for his first book:

"The white rose was the symbol of the Jacobites. It was the theme of their song. There grows a bonnie brier bush in our kail yard, and white are the blossoms out in our kail yard," that suggested the title to me. In Scotland the kail yard of any peasant can grow the white brier rose. There is a reference in this to the purity of womanhood, its gentleness, purity, goodness and truth, all of which are beautifully represented by the white rose, can English if desired and cared for."

Superfluous Hair Removed by X Rays.

At a recent meeting of a medical society in Germany a physician reported various experiments made by him with the X rays. He had heard of another man who had become bald in consequence of exposing his head to the influence. Not long afterward the doctor had a patient, a child, who was bothered by excessive growth of hair on its back. Thereupon he employed the X rays for depilatory purposes and secured gratifying results. Photographs were exhibited to the society showing the condition of the patient "before and after taking" this novel treatment.—New York Tribune.

Helping Somewhere.

A writer tells how a little child once preached a wonderful sermon to him. "Is your father at home?" he asked of a small child on our village doctor's doorstep.

"No," he said; "he's away."

"Where do you think I could find him?"

"Well," he replied, with a considerating air, "you've got to look for some place where people are sick or hurt or something like that. I don't know where he is, but he's helping somewhere."

Something of a Puzzler.

Little Margery has just begun to go to the kindergarten, and is filled with a deep sense of the importance of her studies there and the solemn value of the attainments that have been put within her reach. THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

GRAND OPERA GROWING IN FAVOR IN THIS COUNTRY.

Americans Are Taking Kindly to Classical Music Which at One Time Met With Indifference—Nordica Says the Salaries of Singers Are Higher Here Than Abroad.

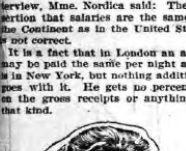
M. Castelmary's latest appearance in a new part was in the recent production of "Siegfried," when he sang for the first time on any stage the role of Fafner, the dragon. He sang then in German for the first time in his life, and was greatly elated at his victory over the difficult text of the part. Following the lead of his friends, the de Reszkes, he had recently become an ardent admirer of the works of Wagner, and he enjoyed his performances of the growling dragon with the spirits of a boy. In the "character" parts of grand opera he was eminently successful, and his Dancetico in "Carmen" ranked as one of the brightest buffo performances on the stage.

M. CASTELMARY.
(Who died on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House.)

Castelmary was born in France and was well educated. It was reported that he came of a noble family, and had the right to the title of Count, which he declined to use. In early years he took the operatic stage, and became passionately attached to his profession. He first became known in America in 1879, when he appeared in French opera in New Orleans. His next engagement was in Booth's Theatre. In 1886 he took a company to Santiago, Chile, where he lost 100,000f. at the Theatre Nacionale. His greatest success was in the character of Mephistopheles, in "Faust." He sang and acted the part with great success all over the country. He made it a rollicking, humorous part, and to such a performance, it may be remarked, he was especially adapted.

Speaking of grand opera abroad and in the United States, in a recent interview, Mme. Nordica said: The assertion that salaries are the same on the Continent as in the United States is not correct.

It is a fact that in London an artist may be paid the same per night as he is in New York, but nothing additional goes with it. He gets no percentage on the gross receipts or anything of that kind.



MME. NORDICA

In Paris he may receive as many francs per night as he gets dollars in New York, but the difference is readily perceivable.

At the same time the demands upon the artist are greater in New York and all over the United States than on the Continent. In Europe three or four operas will be selected for the season and these only will be given. In New York a nightly change of bill is demanded, with a matinee.

It is true that the season is longer on this side of the water than on the other, and herein lies the value to the artist who comes here from Europe. He has the opportunity of making more money than on the Continent, although at the same time it is true that his expenses are much greater here. In this way it may be said the great salaries paid here are in a measure equalized by the smaller salaries paid in Europe.

I may, perhaps, be permitted to give you an instance. If I am singing in London, a shilling will pay my cab fare from my hotel to the opera house. In New York, say I am stopping at the Savoy, I pay $5 for a carriage to and from the Metropolitan Opera House. Everything else is in proportion.

You cannot wonder, then, why operatic salaries are higher in the United States than in Europe. There are long distances to travel, frequent rehearsals because of the more extensive repertoire, and more work to be done in every way. One is also expected to be proficient in three languages. There is a greater number of performances, and the participants are continuously at work.

The Macready Institute in London, was started in a small way some twenty years ago by Courthorpe Todd, who opened a clubroom for poor actresses, in the hope of saving some of them from the privations and dangers to which they are often exposed. His plans prospered, and the place was enlarged, till the house now called the Macready Institute was built.

ROSE FANCHON.

AN AWKWARD PREDICAMENT.

His Curiosity More Than Satisfied After Testing the Yoke.

Some years ago an inquisitive medical student, while examining the guillotine in a big waxwork exhibition took it into his head that the sort of yoke which fits down on the shoulders of the criminal to hold him in place would not be sufficient to confine a person who struggled.

His curiosity on that point led him to watch till the place was empty, when he actually put himself in, letting down the yoke. He soon found, however, that he was quite unable to lift it, and it at once flashed into his mind that the sharp axe suspended over his neck might not be very firmly fixed, or it would fall—as it should —with a touch.

He was afraid to struggle, lest the shaking should bring it down, and at once deposit his head in the basket of sawdust below him, into which his eyes were of necessity steadily looking.

Having stayed some time in this plight, he was overjoyed to hear the approach of a visitor, whom he implored to release him. It was in vain.

"I'm thinking," said the gentleman—a Scottish visitor to the metropolis—to his wife, "that he must be hired to show how the things act, and I think we'd better not interfere."

So the luckless student was left till one of the attendants came in and made fast the axe before releasing him from his predicament. The axe was afterward removed and laid by the side of the structure, to prevent future accidents.

Frightened a Grizzly.

While I believe that a grizzly bear will in a majority of cases wait for a fight with a man and take pains to get in the way of one, there are times when it will seem to think better of it, and back out. A remarkable instance of this I heard of once, where a famous guide courageously advanced with three grizzlies, an old she bear and two half grown cubs, and by a series of ridiculous monkey-shines and acrobatic manoeuvres on the ground within a rod or two of the bears, filled them with such astonishment and surprise that they one by one hastily retreated into the woods. The guide's gun had snapped in both barrels, he having drawn on the old bear before the young ones appeared.

He afterward said that it was in a fit of desperation that he tried this turning on a handspring and jumping up and down flopping his hands and resorting to other unhunterlike measures. He had been told once that a hunter had frightened a mountain lion away by similar absurd movements, and he thought he had a perfect conception in the case of the bears, although he did not encourage any one to go hunting grizzlies armed with nothing more than a capacity to turn somersaults.

Tapioca Is a Deadly Poison.

Tapioca is procured from a curious South American plant, which either poisons us or nourishes us, according to the way we use it.

The tapioca plant is a shrub which gowns to the height of six or eight feet. The root, as well as the rest of the plant, contains a milky juice, which is so poisonous that it will cause death in a few minutes; but as this poisonous acid may be destroyed by heat, the juice, thickened by boiling forms an excellent sauce called cassareep.

The root after it has been grated or pounded into pulp, is placed under a heavy pressure. The poisonous juice is thus squeezed out. It is then heated and stirred on metal plates, when it forms the well-known tapioca, which is sold in all our shops and served up in hotels, restaurants, and on our family tables as tapioca pudding.

Thus tapioca, in its natural state one of the most deadly poisons in the vegetable world, becomes, when it is heated and pressed, a harmless food that everyone has tasted.—From Answers.

A Long-Delayed Shave.

The celebrated French poet, Saint-Foix, who, in spite of his large income, was always in debt, sat one day in a barber's shop waiting to be shaved. He was lathered when the door opened and a gendarme entered who happened to be one of the poet's largest creditors. No sooner did this man see Saint-Foix than he angrily demanded his money.

The poet composedly begged him not to make a scene. "Won't you wait for the money until I am shaved?".

"Certainly," said the other, pleased at the persuasion.

Saint-Foix then made the barber a witness of the agreement, and immediately took a towel, wiped the lather from his face, and left the shop.

He wore a beard to the end of his days.—Tid-Bits.

A Ready Tongue.

As a quick-witted young author was walking with a friend, a man came up behind him and gave him a resounding slap on the shoulder. The writer turned a surprised face towards the new comer, who said: "Look here, you must remember me, now don't you?" "I can't say I remember your face," returned the young author, gravely, "but your manner is certainly familiar."—From Answers.

PAYN AS MARSHAL.

HOW GRANT APPOINTED HIM U. S. MARSHAL IN 1876.

Selected by President Grant as a Man to be Depended Upon in Perilous Times—How for Many Days He Watched Every Movement of Samuel J. Tilden.

This is a story about Lou F. Payn, the new Superintendent of Insurance for New York State. The events occurred just twenty years ago, but never been printed until they appeared recently in the New York Sun.

Reference was made to the obituary notices of Mr. Reid, who died recently, to his connection with the determination of the Republican National Committee of 1876 to claim the election of Hayes at sunrise the morning after election day. Mr. Payn's part in that historic time began when President Grant, in the closing days of his administration, nominated him as United States Marshal for the Southern District of New York. But let Payn tell the story in Mr. Payn's own words:

"I received a note from President Grant asking me to call on him at the White House. I obeyed the summons, and ascertained, for the first time, that the contemplated sending my name to the Senate as United States Marshal. He eyed me closely as he began the conversation, and I soon learned that it was proposed to make me United States Marshal. President Grant began:

"'Mr. Payn, do you understand the duties of a United States Marshal?' I told him that I did. 'Do you know, Mr. Payn, that these are troublous times and that there is danger of an outbreak all over the country?' I told the President I was fully aware of the situation. Then he went on to say that the Democrats were in a highly inflammable frame of mind, believing that Mr. Tilden had been cheated out of the election for President, and that there was a likelihood of trouble. He asked me if I would obey the oath of office which I would have to take if I was made United States Marshal. I told him that I certainly would.

"Not once during the conversation did President Grant give me any definite idea of just when the outbreak was likely to come, but he intimated very strongly that if there was one it would be in New York city. President Grant all through the conversation seemed to want to test me as a officer in case there should be war. Finally, apparently, for he said: 'Mr. Payn, I will send your name to the Senate this afternoon.'

"I took possession of my office, and several days later Senator Conkling called on me. 'Payn,' said he, 'I want to congratulate you on your appointment as United States Marshal. I want to talk to you about the duties of the place. First, let me ask you if you know where Samuel J. Tilden is at the moment.' I told Senator Conkling that I did not. 'Do you know where Mr. Tilden lives?' Senator Conkling next asked, and I told him that Mr. Tilden lived somewhere in Gramercy Park. 'Marshal Payn,' replied Senator Conkling, 'you should know where he is this instant; you should know where he is every instant in the day. You should know when he leaves his bed in the morning and when he gets into it at night. You evidently are not aware of why you were made United States Marshal.'

"It didn't take me long after that to understand the real meaning of Senator Conkling's visit and the conversation he addressed to me. Within twenty minutes I had twenty assistant deputy marshals in Gramercy Park. They knew every step Mr. Tilden took. I had determined that, on the first and slightest indication, either on his part or that of his friends, to move on Washington, I would land him inside of Fort Lafayette so quick that it would make his head swim. Nobody at the time knew that these deputy marshals were in Gramercy Park, or that I was watching Mr. Tilden."

Not Safe to be Too Positive.

A cantankerous old farmer who hardly ever agreed with anything his wife said to him, came home one wet day, and placing his back to the fire, stood up to dry.

After some little time his wife turned to him and said:

"John, you'll better watch yourself, or you'll burn your flannels."

To which John replied:

"I think I'll need to burn my trousers first."

"Indeed, John, you'll need to do nae thing of the kind—they're burned already."

A MUMMIFIED WIFE.

A DUCHESS CARRIED AROUND IN A CASKET FIFTEEN YEARS.

Queen Victoria's Mother-in-Law Now at First Interred, but Her Remains Were Dragged Over Europe Encased in a Box Shaped Like a Grand Piano.

Queen Victoria's mother-in-law is the only princess of the blood in modern times whose corpse may be said to have constituted a piece of drawing room furniture for fifteen years after her death. Preserved in the form of a mummy, her dead body was dragged about over Europe. The casket in which the embalmed remains were contained was fashioned like a grand piano. It was always kept locked, although it occupied the most prominent place in the drawing-room of the sorrowing widower. The remains of the unfortunate lady were not finally laid to rest in the dead vault at Gotha, beside which the castle stands in which her husband resided had been broken into at night by men disguised as burglars, who, after chloroforming the owner, his wife and the members of his household, burst open the piano case and carried off its contents, the corpse of the once exquisitely beautiful reigning Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.

In order to understand how the mother-in-law of Queen Victoria came to be subjected to treatment of this kind, it is necessary to explain that the Duchess, who had brought the Duchy of Gotha, to which she was the sole heiress, as dowry to her husband, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, was shamefully used by the latter. The Duke, a notorious drunkard and profligate, and renowned for the brutality of his manners, practically deserted her about three years after the birth of her son Albert (afterwards Prince Consort of Great Britain), and established in her place in the palace a British favorite named Schimbowska, with whom he lived.

Indeed, she was Duchess in all but name. The Imperial Bundestag or Federation of Sovereign Princes of the German Empire, felt impelled to interfere. But it was of no avail, and finally the Duchess, finding it impossible that the young Duchess fiel, being assisted in her escape by a young officer, Baron von Hanstein. The Duke at once brought suit for divorce against the Duchess, naming the young officer as co-respondent. At the same time he dismissed the young baron from the army and exiled him.

Realizing how much the Baron had sacrificed for her the Duchess married him a year or two after recovering her freedom, and obtained for him the title of Count Frankenberg. She had, assisted by the Bundestag, recovered possession of the revenue of the Duchy of Gotha, she was able to live in affluence, and spent the remainder of her life at St. Wendel on the Rhine and in Switzerland.

When she died at Paris she left to her husband, Count Poelzig, a large income. Being jealous and passionately devoted to the Count, she dreaded his marrying again. So she made her request to him conditional on his never parting from her corpse, not even for a night. She stipulated further that if he spent twenty-four hours away from her embalmed remains he would forfeit his inheritance. So the unfortunate Count was obliged to carry the mummy of the Duchess around with him for nearly fifteen years, even after his marriage to another woman, to whom he would never reveal the secret of the piano containing the corpse, and who consequently regarded the uncanny instrument as a sort of Bluebeard chamber.

Three days after the burglary of his mansion at Paris, the Count received a communication stating that the remains of his wife had been laid to rest in the family vault at Gotha, and that if he made no attempt to recover them or to discover the identity of the burglars the annuity which he had been drawing all these years on account of his wife's will would be continued for the remainder of his life.

Delighted to be rid of the mummified Duchess on such terms, the Count cheerfully acquiesced. He survived the step—as the Prince Consort of Great Britain, a number of years.

It is generally believed that the seizure of the corpse at Paris was at the instance of the Prince Consort and the Queen (the Prince's elder brother being now heir to the throne) to ascertain whether his mother's body was above or under the ground). It is probable the only occasion upon which Queen Victoria has ever been suspected of being concerned in either body snatching or burglary.—New York World.

Paderewski's Lack of Conceit.

When Paderewski was dining at a hotel in Richmond, Va., a fine nickel plated banjo was sent in by a local banjo player, with the request that the great pianist would write a short musical sentiment on the sheepskin head. Paderewski complied with the request, and this is the sentiment which he attached his signature: have not the pleasure of being a performer on that beautiful instrument, am only a piano-player."

Entirely Willing.

A story is told of the late Archdeacon Denison, which illustrates the old cleric's sense of humor and constant adherence to the principles which he had ever held. Some perplexed parishioner came to his vicarage study one day and blurted out, "Why, I hear, Mr. Archdeacon, as how you refuses to bury Dissenters?" "Yes," replied the archdeacon, "you have been wrongly informed, my man. I should like to bury them all!"

BEATING FATHER TIME.

The Mormon Bishop Was Frightened at the Rate of Speed.

Speed was once demonstrated on Western road in a fashion to curl the hair of at least one old Mormon Bishop. The churchman considered the phenomenon, and got off his mind as quickly as he could. He had bewhacked across the plains in the early days, and, strange to say, had never ridden on a railroad train until the time when he entered upon his first from Green River to Salt Francisco. The speed was, therefore, a revelation to him. He had never before seen anything so swift, and he was scared. About twelve miles from Ogden he asked the conductor for the time of day, and was told that it was 7:35. He impressed this time forcibly on his mind.

Now, for a wonder, the western connection at Ogden was quickly made, and after the lapse of but a few minutes the S. P. passenger bound travelers were on their way Californiawards. Ogden had been left behind only a few miles, and the train was whooping along at a behind-time rate of speed when the old Bishop, frightened at the rushing, asked the conductor what was the time of day.

"If you have travelled westward you know that at Ogden the time changes and San Francisco time, one hour earlier, is adopted. The conductor had San Francisco time and he said:

"It is 7:10—ten minutes after seven."

The old Bishop, previously haunted by a dread of impending destruction because of the horrible rate of speed at which he was being whirled through space, rose with a wild cry and made for the door.

"Lemme off!" he cried. "It was 35 minutes after 7 an hour ago, and we're goin' so fast we are goin' faster than time can count itself. Lemme off!"

Had he really been going as fast as he believed, he would surely have been beaten to bits as he jumped from the train. As it was, he was only rolled something like a half mile, and was carried back to Ogden on a handcar.—Chicago Record.

People Do Read the Papers.

Some persons wonder why engaged people generally prefer to keep their engagements as quiet as possible until the day of the wedding. Perhaps they prefer to the results of a newspaper announcement.

The other day an engagement was mentioned in one of the afternoon papers. It was in the last edition of the paper, but early the next morning set a swarm of agents of the leading firms of the future bride's parents, soliciting the contract for supplying an awning when the event came off. On the same morning and in the first mail no less than half a dozen printers and engravers sent in their cards and quoted prices for which they would be willing to prepare the wedding cards, according to the latest dictates of fashion. During the remainder of the week milliners, caterers, dressmakers, livery men, florists, dealers in hardware men, and dry goods merchants made known their desire to supply the future bride and groom with all the outfit that they might need or imagine they needed. The young folks are now waiting for the first ministers who are willing to tie the knot at bargain prices.—Buffalo Courier.

He Wanted His Discharge.

In a regiment in India a private wanted to get home, and saw no other way than shamming deafness. He reported himself sick, and was sent to the hospital. The doctors tried all sorts of ways to find out, but he was too sharp for them. One day the doctor determined to try him by firing a pistol off just behind him, but he got a bear of the experiment and, of course, was prepared for it.

As he and his chum were sitting on their cots opposite each other smoking, the doctor stole into the room unawares as he thought, and fired the pistol close to his ear. He, however, took no notice of the report, but on seeing the smoke he turned to his chum and said:

"Put your pipe out, you fool, the doctor will be round directly."

His ruse worked.—Tid-Bits.

His Beautiful Devotion.

A beautiful anecdote is told of Wendell Phillips, the famous American orator, illustrating his lover-like devotion to his wife. After the close of a lecture engagement in a neighboring town, his friends entreated him not to return to Boston.

"The last train has left," they said, "and you will be obliged to take a carriage into the city. It is a sleety November night, cold and raw; and you will have twelve miles of rough riding before you get home."

To which he replied: "But at the other end of them I shall find Ann Phillips."—Tid-Bits.

It Ought to Work Both Ways.

A minister once submitted an account of tithes to a blacksmith whose explanation was: "I don't go to your church;" was met by the rejoinder: "No, but the door of my church is always open!"

Next day the blacksmith submitted an account of shoeing to the minister: "You my horses to the hod at your smithy?" exclaimed the minister, with some heat.

"No," was the quiet reply, "but the door of my smithy is always open."—Boston Budget.

OPPRESSED CRETE.

SOME POINTS ABOUT THE NOW CELEBRATED ISLAND.

Her People, Cities and Something About Her Long Struggle for Freedom from the Turkish Yoke—Her Beauty is Her Curse.

A Greek mail steamer plies weekly between Piraeus, the seaport of Athens, and the island of Crete, and travellers who miss it, and who do not care to wait a week longer, usually take passage on one of the many small Greek freighters. These freighters touch first at the island of Syra, the ancient Hermopolis and the residence of the Governor of Cyclades Islands. After a day in port there they proceed to Crete, touching at the islands of Naxos, Paros, and Siphnos, the whole trip lasting three and one-half days.

The harbor of Canea, the destination of the vessels, is protected by a well-preserved fortress, one side of which extends down to the edge of the water. The eastern side of the fort is about 1,500 feet long, the southern side 2,400, and the western side 1,800. These walls are protected by four ramparts, two of which face the valley and the other two the sea, and the whole is surrounded by a deep and wide ditch.

COSTA VELOUDAKES.

The city of Canea, being the seat of the Governor-General, has clean streets, fine houses, and some public buildings of considerable pretensions, such as the Governor's headquarters and the Court House, both of which are of modern construction. The military hospital, two armories and the health office also are fine structures. The population of the city is estimated at 14,610, of whom 4,700 are Greeks and 9,500 Turks, 100 Israelites, and 200 Roman Catholics. Nearly every European Government is represented by either a Consul or a consular agent. Most of these representatives live in the small towns of Halepa, about half an hour's walk from Canea.

The Turkish quarters of Canea are around the Spanish square. It was under the plane tree shown in the picture that the members of the Turkish Committee usually met to discuss matters with the Turkish authorities during the last revolution. It was impossible for a Christian to pass through the square without being attacked by the Mussulmans. It was here also that the Mohammedan families gather in the evening for recreation; they sit on wooden benches and listen to the music of the Arab musicians of Canea.

Like Cuba, Crete has always found her curse in the beauties with which nature has endowed her. Since the island was left by the Venetians to the Turks in 1715 no fewer than nine revolutions have taken place among its people. Each time the revolt was precipitated by Turkish tyranny. The most remarkable feature of all these revolutions is that in no instance have the Cretans been forced to the wall to lay down their arms. Their disarming has been due always to the intervention of some "friendly power" which wished to give an opportunity to the Turkish Government to introduce reforms.

At present there is no man more trusted by the Cretans than the Grand Old Man of Crete, old Costa Veloudakes, the permanent President of the Revolutionary Assembly, and a scion of one of the oldest families of the island. He has just celebrated his ninety-fifth birthday. He has taken part in every revolution on the island during his time. In the eight-year revolution of 1821 he was at the head of a strong Cretan force, having distinguished himself by liberating sixty-eight Cretan women held in bondage in a Turkish fortress. He is a man of few words, but whenever he speaks his utterances carry great weight. His courage is proverbial. In the battle of the Arkadi in 1866 he was fighting beside his two sons when a bullet killed one of them. Without flinching he gave orders to carry the dead from the battle-field; he continued fighting until the enemy were repulsed. In 1897 he was proclaimed Commander-in-Chief of all the revolutionary forces on the island, and was subsequently selected with two other Cretans to proceed to the German capital, during the drawing of the Berlin treaty, to lay before its members the views of the powers the claims of the Cretans.

TOO MUCH FOR GAS.

Messrs. Young, Whitehead and Spargo, as a Councilmanic committee from Dover, visited this city last Saturday to inspect the system and cost of making gas, as Dover has under consideration the establishment of a gas works of their own. These gentlemen have visited a number of towns about the size of Plainfield on this same mission and while here they stated that the charge or $2 per thousand feet of gas, made by the Plainfield company, was the highest of any place they had come in contact with. They say the price ranges from $1.25 to $1.75 in other towns. A prominent Plainfield merchant, speaking of the fact this morning, said that he believed that if the business men of this city made a concerted demand, but at the same time in a courteous manner, the gas company could be prevailed upon to lower the high rates they are now receiving.

DID NOT GET THEIR WHOLE SUM.

Speaking of the opposition on the part of some borough officials in the Republican primary to the appropriation of $550 for the Board of Health, Dr. W. E. Honeyman, secretary of the Board, says that with the exception of last year the Board never received as much as the people voted them, owing to the impossibility of fixing the tax rate at just the right per centage to bring out the sum appropriated; and rather than have it go a little over the stipulated sum named by ballot, it was always considerable short. Dr. Honeyman says that in this way the Board has not had within $800 as much as it was entitled to in recent years, and he thinks that it came with ill grace for another official to have endeavored to appropriate them still less than they asked for.

GROWTH OF BICYCLE BUSINESS

Somebody with a fondness for figures shows the large increase in the bicycle business in the following paragraph: Prior to 1885, there were but six bicycle factories in this country. In that year there were 11,000 machines turned out. Five years later there were seventeen factories with an output of 40,000 wheels. In 1894 the factories increased rapidly, and 125,000 machines were turned out. A year late the production was 600,000 and the number of factories more than 500, none of which turned out less than 1,000 wheels a year. The capital invested in these large factories is $900,000, and the estimate of the output for the present year is not less than 1,000,000 wheels, valued at $60,000,000.

RIGHT SORT OF FRICTION.

According to the proceedings in the Common Council Monday the members of that body do not propose to accept the particular advice of any one man who may assume to be a leader. It is an encouraging thing to know that there is likely to be some friction in the circle of city fathers, for the probabilities of good government are much better under these circumstances. People had begun to look upon Councilman Barrows as somewhat of a boss in the Council, but the action taken on several matters Monday seem to be a clean turndown for the Third ward official.

ELECTED A POSTMASTER

The Republicans of Stockton settled on a rather odd, but seemingly satisfactory, plan for their choice of a postmaster under the McKinley administration. Instead of the candidates pulling political wires to capture the appointment, they submitted the question of a choice to the members of their party, and at the meeting held for that purpose Saturday night William P. Mason received seventy-six and Gideon Moore thirty-six votes. The latter announced himself as satisfied, and said that he would add his name to the petition for the appointment of Mason.

THE NEW CHIEF JUSTICE.

William J. Magie, who was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to succeed the late Mercer Beasley, is a native of Elizabeth, where he was born Dec. 9th, 1832. His father was a well known Presbyterian minister. Mr Magie was graduated from Princeton College in 1855 and was admitted to the bar in 1856. He became the partner of his tutor, Francis B. Chetwood, and later associated himself with Joseph Cross, former Speaker of the House. From 1866 to 1871 he was Prosecutor of Union county, and in 1875 was elected to represent Union in the State Senate. He was appointed an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court in 1880 by Gov. McClellan, reappointed by Governor Green in 1887, and by Gov. Werts in 1894. His term expires in 1901. He is a Republican.

CHAPEL TO COST $7,000

ARRANGEMENTS FOR NEW EAST THIRD STREET MISSION HOME.

Trustees Elected Officers and Then Heard Encouraging Reports—Land to be Given if the Money for Chapel is Raised.

C. W. McCutchen, L. W. Serrell, R. K. Case, L. W. Randolph and Irving Brady, trustees of the East Third Street Mission, met at the home of Mr. Serrell last Monday and transacted considerable important business. Architect Charles Smith and George H. Batchelor, representing the Temple Builders of the First Baptist church, were also present.

The first business was the election of the officers which resulted as follows: President, C. W. McCutchen; treasurer, L. W. Serrell; secretary, Irving Brady. The latter reported that the new organization was fully incorporated according to the laws of the state.

L. W. Randolph and the secretary were appointed a committee to arrange for the sale of the property on Astor place, which has been donated by Miss Mary E. Holton. This house and lot will be sold and the proceeds will be devoted to the building of the new chapel.

The question of contributions was discussed and in addition to the above it was reported that Mr. McCutchen had donated the lots on East Third street, on which the chapel will be erected, valued at $2,150, on the condition that the entire balance of the cost be raised before the work was started. A contribution of $500 was reported from Mr. Serrell and other contributions amounting to $200 have also been received.

Messrs. Randolph, Serrell and Brady, from the trustees, and Messrs. Batchelor, G. F. Brown, I. H. Bigelow, J. Herbert Case, and J. H. McLoughlin, from the Temple Builders of the church, were appointed as a committee to secure subscriptions for the new building.

Architect Smith was authorized to prepare working plans for the chapel and to submit the same for approval at the next meeting of the trustees. The matter of furnishing the chapel was discussed and provided for.

It was stated that the total cost of the chapel should not exceed $7,000, and Messrs. Randolph and the secretary were instructed to rent the place of worship for a term not to exceed six months.

The trustees discussed a name for the chapel but nothing definite was decided upon. The meeting then adjourned.

ARRANGING FOR A BIG TIME.

Those Who Will See to the Entertainment of the Second Brigade.

The Second New Jersey Brigade committee met in the rooms of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., last Monday and organized by electing E. C. Morse, chairman, and William H. Williams, secretary. The following persons were appointed to look after the finances and collect all money: W. C. Smith, T. O. Doane, Mason W. Tyler and Dr. Frank O. Wells.

The Brigade is composed of the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Eleventh New Jersey Regiments, New Hampshire Regiment and the late Gen. Carr's old Regiment, the Second New York Volunteers, of Troy.

The Brigade will meet in this city, Friday, April 9th, and the next meeting of the committee will be held Wednesday, March 10th, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

IS IT A SUSTAINER?

How much manual labor do you think you do in a day? A post-man averages about 353 foottons. An ordinary laborer 350 tons. A very hard day's work would be 400 tons. In Weston's recent walk to Albany, 150 miles, in 60 hours, we calculate his work was no less than 1005 foottons, and his food consisted entirely of

LEGACY FOR A CHURCH.

MISS VANDENBERG BEQUEATHED $1,000 TO TRINITY CHURCH.

Also Left $1,000 Each for Domestic and Foreign Missions and Deeded a House to the Woman Who Cared for Her.

The last will of Miss Gertrude Vandenberg, of 225 East Fifth street, who died Monday, February 15th, was admitted to probate on Saturday by Surrogate Parrott, at Elizabeth. George L. Van Emburg was selected by Miss Vandenberg as executor of her estate, and qualified at the surrogate's office on the day mentioned above. In her bequests Miss Vandenberg gives $1,000 to Trinity Reformed church, of this city, of which deceased was one of the charter members, and $1,000 to Foreign and $1 000 to the Domestic Boards of Missions. The house and lot, No. 225 East Fifth street, was deeded about a year ago to Mrs. Dunlap, who so faithfully attended Miss Vandenberg during her illness. The remainder of her estate, consisting of real estate and money in the bank, etc., is roughly estimated to be worth $20,000, she divides among relatives, the nearest of kin being cousins.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle. The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

OBJECT TO SEWER TAX

BOARD OF EDUCATION COMPLAINS IT IS UNJUST TO THE SCHOOLS.

Say They Have Made No Preparation to Pay for it and it Will Have to Be Levied—Superintendent's Report.

The regular March meeting of the Board of Education was held in the Board room at the High School building, last Monday. All the members were present as was Superintendent of Schools H. M. Maxson.

Secretary Lounsbury then presented the bill for the sewer assessments on the school buildings and they did not suit the members at all. The assessments were as follows: Franklin and Stillman buildings, $150.18; Wadsworth property, $36.97; Bryant building, $150.34; Washington building, $77.85; Lincoln building, $116.42. Mr. Lounsbury called the attention of the Board to a little diagram he had drawn on the blackboard giving some idea of the comparative assessments of the Franklin and Stillman buildings and the Lincoln building. He then went on to compare them.

In the Franklin and Stillman buildings, there were, he stated, twenty-four rooms. The buildings were surrounded on three sides by sewers and the assessment was $150.18. At the new Lincoln building there were but eight rooms, continued Mr. Lounsbury, and it is necessary to construct a private sewer of 175 feet in length to reach the nearest sewer. The sewer was to be found on no side of the building, for the nearest point was at the corner. The assessment was, in this case, $116.52, while a lot across the street, which was bounded on one side by the sewer, was only assessed $10.48. Then Mr. Lounsbury went on to say that when the sewer was laid along the sides of the school, the property would be assessed again. The Board had made no preparation for any such expense and the amount would have to be raised from the taxpayers next year.

A general discussion on the subject followed in which all the members took part. The methods by which the assessments were made was discussed. Mr. Abbott said that the Commissioners could not be compelled to explain how they had arranged them. Mr. Lounsbury said that they couldn't give them, that such a thing was impossible, that there was no possible reason that could be given for the present arrangement of the assessments. He said that everything was assessed, city property, churches and even graveyards, although he couldn't see how a sewer would benefit a graveyard.

"If i was a graveyard," said Mr. Lounsbury, "I would refuse to pay and let them collect the amount on my value."

Mr. Lovell moved that the secretary be authorized to interview the Commissioners and see if the assessments could not be adjusted and if not, that he be authorized to pay them. It was remarked that the assessments came due before the next meeting and that some action must be taken before that time. The motion was carried.

The regular report of City Collector Bird was received and read. It showed that taxes to the amount of $712.47 had been collected and interest to the amount of $18.45 had been received making a total of $730.92, which had been deposited in the City National Bank.

An interesting report was read by Superintendent Maxson regarding his visit to the National convention of school superintendents. He told of the necessities of a school room and what were the conditions of the ideal school room. Most of these ideas, he said, had been embodied in the new Lincoln school. He spoke of the change in the necessary requirements to enter college.

After some very interesting remarks on the advantages to be gained by the selection of teachers only as regards merit and the payment of suitable salaries to secure the best talent, and the results of the consultations regarding the connection between the child's physical condition and his intelligence, Mr. Maxson said:

"Some superintendents have found on careful examination, that 20 per cent or 25 per cent of their children have defects in vision or hearing. I began last fall to examine our own pupils in these particulars, continuing the work from time to time as I have found opportunity. While I have found some defectives in each room, I do not find nearly as great a degree as is reported elsewhere.

"In view of the criticisms that have been past on the power of the Plainfield Board, it may interest you to know that, with the exception of Philadelphia, every Board in Education in Pennsylvania has far greater power than this Board has. They levy taxes without consulting any other power in their city or town and may levy as high as 13 mills on a dollar, while the limit of this Board is 5 mills. They may also levy an additional tax of 12 mills for building purposes. They may buy land or take it by condemnation, and may erect and alter buildings without reference to any other body or officer. They also have power to incur indebtedness not exceeding 2 per cent of the valuation of the city or about $140,000 for a city of the size of Plainfield. This power is given by the general law of the state and in every city except Plainfield, makes the School Board a separate, distinct power, absolutely independent of every other power in the city."

The adoption of the report of the building committee was probably the most important work done at the meeting. The report of the committee was made by the chairman, Mr. Lounsbury. It was reported that the new Lincoln School was rapidly nearing completion, and that it would be ready for occupancy on April 6th, the beginning of the spring term. The committee reported that bids had been received for the electric lighting fixtures and window shades. The contract for the fixtures had been granted to A. D. Phillips for $275 and the contract for the shades to Frank G. Wikoff for $112.50.

To accommodate the overflow classes in the Franklin district, it was reported that it was necessary to provide room for these classes. The committee had been offered the use of the old church edifice by the trustees of the Seventh-day Baptist church, but the cost of changing it was too great. W. H. Rogers had offered his building on West Fifth street, near Central avenue, formerly used as a bicycle store, for $10 a month. It can be fitted up at a small expense, and the committee suggested that it be rented for the period of one or two years with the privilege of renewal. It was the wish of the committee that it be ready for occupancy by April 6th. The committee also had under consideration several buildings with a view to accommodating the additional classes to be opened in the fall.

By motion, the report was accepted and its provisions adopted. Superintendent Maxson reported that he had received tuition fees to the amount of $332. The Board than went into executive session.

Bilious Colic.

Persons who are subject to attacks of bilious colic will be pleased to know that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Colera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and if taken as soon as the first indication of the disease appears, it will prevent the attack. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

Mrs. Volkman, of Fairview avenue, is kept at home by illness.

starving children

There are children without food. They cry for it, and are not answered. The pity of it! But often nature cries out in other ways that her children need nourishment. Is your child thin; actually poor in flesh? Does it get no benefit from its food? Then give something which produces flesh and makes rich blood.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites does more than this. It changes the unhealthy action to one of health, thus removing the cause. It acts on the nervous system, which controls all the processes of the body, toning it up into sound and vigorous activity. It is food for growing bone and brain. It makes the thin plump; the pale, ruddy; the weak, strong; it feeds and cures.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been indorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50c. and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby. All druggists.

FOR DUNELLEN RULERS.

REPUBLICANS NOMINATED CANDIDATES LAST MONDAY.

Dr. Brakely Chosen for Mayor Again—Samuel S. Luckey Opposed Him—There Was Some Contention for Councilmen.

The Dunellen Republican primary was held in the new Town Hall last Monday to place in nomination a ticket to be voted for at the forthcoming election on March 9th, and the attendance was the largest ever gathered together at any caucus before in the history of the place. Mayor Brakeley called the meeting to order and R. J. Swackhammer was unanimously elected chairman. H. L. Terry was the secretary, G. Elston Lowrie, assistant secretary, and the chair appointed Messrs. Lowrie and Huff as tellers. The secretary read the call, after which the nomination of a Mayor was immediately taken up and the following were nominated: Dr. Brakeley, the present incumbent, and Samuel S. Luckey. Of the 157 votes cast the doctor received 98 and his competitor 59, with blank. Dr. Brakeley was called upon for a speech, but the doctor modestly said that if elected he would serve his constituents faithfully as he had done in the past. The doctor said it had been insinuated that he received fees from the office, but to dispel any such erroneous illusion he was more than $10 out of pocket each year. The next order of business taken up was the nomination of an Assessor. Charles Coriell received 92 votes to Isaac W. Laing's 64, and the chair declared the nominee. For the officers of Collector and Freeholder, George w. Day and Firman Cline were nominated respectively, by acclamation.

There was some contention for the office of Councilmen, inasmuch as six new members are to be elected for terms ranging from one to three years, and ten nominations were made. Those declared nominated were: For one year, F. R. Wynkoop and Louis Snyder; for two years, F. K. Wilcox and John Monahan; for three years, A. S. Gaston and H. C. Gaskill. A. S. Gaston received 102 votes—the highest of any of the candidates.

Justice Luckey announced that he was about to send in his resignation and Thomas Todd was nominated by acclamation to fill his place. The balance of the ticket as made up consists of S. Luckey, H. V. Dunham and John Apgar, as Commissioners of Appeals; R. J. Swackhammer and John Larkin, Surveyors of Highways; Charles Wynkoop, constable and Charles W. Blain as pound-keeper. For Overseer of the Poor Wm. H. Cole was nominated by acclamation. The amounts decided upon to be voted for are: $1,500 for Borough purposes and $300 for the support of the poor.

The meeting adjourned at 11 o'clock.

CAR JUMPED THE TRACK.

Right Block Caused on the Central Track near Dunellen.

Engine No. 422 of the camel-back pattern, attached to a heavily-loaded freight train going west, early Monday evening was between Dunellen and the tanks, when one of the cars jumped the track. Fortunately the engineer was slowing up in order to take water and none of the other cars left the track. The derailed car was, however, twisted around in such a manner as to block the fourth or west bound coal and freight track. The engine on the train seemed to have been rendered useless by the accident and a wrecking crew from Elizabethport was despatched to the scene, arriving there about eleven o'clock. So far as known no one was injured and the road was open for traffic by one o'clock this morning.

A LITTLE BIG SIX NOW.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS AMONG THE REPUBLICAN COUNCILMEN.

On the License and Other Questions Councilman Barrows Unable to Carry His Point—Six Men Stood Together.

Last Monday another chapter of surprises was added to the already long list recorded by the City Council for 1897 and the prospects are that there will be many more chapters before the year is out.

Councilman Baker was the only member absent, and Mr. Barrows moved that the regular order of business be suspended so that Councilman Leivers could be appointed on the several committees left vacant by the resignation of Mr. Randolph. This was done by President Dumont and Mr. Barrows then moved that all licenses be referred to the proper committee of which Mr. Leivers is the chairman.

The regular order was then returned to and a petition was received from the residents of Westervelt avenue in which they asked that the above avenue, from the Mills property to Front street, be widened to conform to the width of the other half of the avenue. The matter was referred. Street Commissioner A. J. Gavett filed his bond for $2,000, which was signed by W. R. Codington and W. D. Murray, as bondsmen. The same was received and referred to the Corporation Council for approval.

W. M. Stillman petitioned the council to locate one two-way hydrant at the corner of Grant and Sherman avenues, and accompanying the petition was a personal letter from the above-named gentleman in which he stated that he and the other residents in that vicinity were willing to stand their share of the expense. The petition took the usual course. Another petition was received from E. L. Finch and others, asking for the location of a fire alarm box on Park or Arlington avenues beyond Ninth street. This matter was also referred to the proper committee.

Charles Trotter and Robert Wood having been expelled from the Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company, the Board of Engineers asked the council to confirm such action, and it was so ordered.

Inspector of Buildings T. O. Doane reported that thirteen permits had been granted during the month, and Street Commissioner Gavett reported that twenty sewer permits had been granted during the same length of time.

Mr. Serrell, from the committee on accounts and collection of taxes, stated that the committee would like to have the various committees furnish a detailed statement of the general expense for the year so that the tax levy could be arranged. The matter will be attended to at once.

Mr. Frost stated that last week the application of the Plainfield Sanitary Company had been passed upon and permission was granted to them to erect a plant in accordance with certain conditions. In the meantime the company desired to amend the conditions, which had been done, and the committee now reported favorably in the matter. He then offered a substitute set of conditions which were read. The only changes in the conditions are that sixty days is given the company to file their acceptance and the $1,000 bond.

The conditions were also amended so as to give the company the privilege of collecting garbage anywhere, either in the city or borough, and to fix the rate of charges.

Mr. Frost then said that last week he stated his objections, and since that time he had not changed his mind, and he would still oppose the matter.

Mr. Serrell asked the Council if the substitute had received the sanction of the company. Mr. Barrows replied that it wasn't necessary to know that as it was a majority report of the committee.

A vote was then taken with the following result: Nayes—Messrs. Newman, Frost, Stebbins, Serrell and Bunyon; Ayes — Messrs Dumont, Barrows, Tolles, Westphal and Leivers. Mr. Barrows asked for the privilege of changing his vote to the negative, and the request was granted.

Mr. Frost reported favorably on the petition for crosswalks on Hillside and Watchung avenues, and the same was granted. On a motion of Mr. Westphal two crosswalks were ordered laid at the corner of Liberty and West Fourth streets.

Mr. Tolles reported on a petition for a light on Cottage place and moved that the same be granted. President Dumont stated that it was customary to have the petition read, and on his suggestion the matter was laid over so that the petition could be found. In some way or other it had been lost and such action was deemed wise.

Mr. Leivers, from the license committee, reported on the various hack and peddlers' licenses and the same was granted.

Mr. Serrell stated that it would be necessary to have the delinquent taxpayers advertised and he made a motion to that effect, and that City Judge DeMeza be empowered to execute warrants for the collection of the same; also that E. H. Bird be made delinquent tax collector.

Mr. Frost called up the ordinance regulating the house connections to the sewers, and after a discussion as to who should be given permission to make connections the matter was referred back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. Serrell called up the ordinance referring to the collection of ashes and refuse, and on his motion it was adopted on its third reading.

Mr. Frost in calling up the sidewalk ordinance asked to have the same amended so as to include curbing as well as the laying of sidewalks. This matter was also referred back to the committee for further consideration.

At this time Mr. Serrell asked to have the application of the Plainfield Sanitary Company re-considered as he understood the company has agreed to the conditions specified. The request was granted and on his motion the company was given permission to erect their plant. Here is where the surprises were introduced, for the Council developed a "Big Six" with the following: Messrs. Dumont, Runyon, Newman, Tolles, Westphal and Leivers, while Messrs. Stebbins, Frost, Barrows and Serrell remained on the other side. However, Mr. Serrell voted in the affirmative for the application of the Sanitary company, and Mr. Runyon voted in the negative.

Mr. Leivers then introduced the license application of P. O'Keefe, and he moved that the same be granted. The "Big Six" stood together and Mr. O'Keefe secured his license, as did also John Sullivan. Mr. Lievers then asked that the application of Mr. Willis for a license be re-considered. There were objections to this and Mr. Barrows called for a division. It was granted and Mr. Leivers' motion prevailed that the application lay on the table until the next meeting. In this instance the power of the "Big Six" was evident.

Mr. Barrows then moved that when Council adjourn it be to meet in two weeks. This finished the business and the meeting adjourned.

ON GOES THE TROLLEY.

LOCAL COMPANY WANTS TO BUILD TO SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Route Planned to Touch the Crescent Oval, Hillside Cemetery and Driving Park—The Necessary Consents Probable.

Plans for another extension to the present system of trolley lines of the Plainfield street railway are actively under consideration. The extension to the Mountain Park Inn and Washington ville seems assured. The other line proposed is to go in another direction. The plan is to have a switch from the present extension on Putnam avenue, at the corner of Kensington avenue, and a track to run out Kensington avenue to Martine avenue and then to the Crescent Oval, touching on the way at the entrance to Hillside cemetery, and ultimately reaching the Gentlemen's Driving Park and perhaps South Plainfield.

It has long been the wish of the company to extend its lines in that direction, but the impossibility of securing the necessary consents has heretofore stood in the way. It is understood that by going the route already mentioned the necessary permission from the property owners can be secured. The route selected will not include Park avenue, but will go by the back roads.

It is understood that the plan will be pushed forward at once and the line will be completed before the summer is over, if the permission of the Council can be secured.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the party purchasing.

I employ no agents and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shops, myself and son doing the largest portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of work, and look upon these items in this light, that good Work and good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertisement for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and second stock any cheaper than I can.

GREENLAND'S ICY SHORE

LIEUT. PEARY MENTALLY CARRIED HIS AUDIENCE TO ARCTIC REGIONS.

One of the Most Absorbing and Impressive Lectures Ever Heard in This City—Its Thrilling Experiences of the Explorer.

Those who attended Lieutenant Robert E. Peary's lecture at Music Hall, last week, returned home feeling that they had actually stood upon the northern shore of Greenland and looked out over the unknown Arctic sea. Seldom, if ever, has a more absorbing and impressive lecture been given in Plainfield, and the large audience, entirely filling the hall, sat motionless and oblivious of everything but those wonderful pictures and the marvelous story told by the quiet young man upon the stage, until the last scene faded from view.

Lieutenant Peary is rather a small man, slight, and somewhat worn-looking, with dark hair and moustache. He was far from being the strong-looking, rugged sort of man one would look for in the Arctic explorer, who must face many privations, and live for months in a temperature the mere mention of which chills the unaccustomed blood. Mr. Peary has known the mercury to fall as low as minus 60 degrees F., but he said that properly clad, a well man need fear no evil results. On two of his journeys Mr. Peary has been accompanied by his wife, and, delicately nurtured woman as she was, she returned really in better health than when she started.

In beginning his lecture, Mr. Peary said that there was an indescribable charm about the Arctic regions; a man who had been there once was forever afterward possessed with a desire to go again. He then, showed charts of the Arctic circle, tracing the routes of his various journeys and those of other explorers. His plan has been to go to Greenland in the summer, establish his headquarters as far north as practicable, winter there, and then during the following summer make sledge journeys across the interior ice-cap of Greenland.

Three times he has succeeded in reaching the northernmost extremity of Greenland, the last time narrowly escaping death from starvation, the supplies left by him on the previous journey being buried so deeply under the snows of the intervening winter as to be hopeless of recovery.

Mr. Peary showed photographs, taken by himself, of the ships in which he made his voyages—ships which would ram their way through the ice packs by main force; of the most northern civilized settlements of Greenland, Godhavn and Upernavik, and of the Danish and half breed inhabitants of those settlements. Then came exquisite views of Greenland scenery, the ice pack, the brown cliffs with brilliant-hued flowers nestling in every sunny sheltered valley; the magnificent glaciers—enormous rivers of ice cut through by great crevasses, and those wonderful features of the Arctic scene, the icebergs, gleaming with beautiful colors under the midnight sun.

In regard to the Arctic night, Mr. Peary said that it was enough to make persons of certain temperaments actually insane. Plants will live in the dark, so will not live any healthy life; and while the members of an Arctic expedition can live and go about their occupations through a half year with out the sun, they all feel the results of it more or less.

Most interesting of all, however, was the last part of the lecture, describing Mr. Peary's last journey across the great inland ice-cap to the northern coast of Greenland, with two companions and forty Eskimo dogs, only one of which returned with him to the lodge. Only the edges of Greenland are habitable, the whole interior being covered with eternal ice and snow, thousands of feet deep, filling all the valleys and burying the highest mountains, making a desert in comparison to which that of Africa is a fertile plain. Very silent was the audience, looking at the pictures of the three men who, disappointed in their supplies, could make no new explorations, but could only turn about, and weak, worn, and nearly starved, make their way with great difficulty back to their lodge, while the faithful dogs, working till they could work no longer, dropped one by one, till at last the welcome brown cliffs came into view, and the almost despairing men and their one noble remaining dumb companion dragged themselves down from the ice to the shelter where awaited them those almost forgotten luxuries, food and rest.

Boehm's Increased Facilities.

Boehm, the Front street dry goods merchant, has taken possession of his new store adjoining his old-established place of business. With these increased facilities this popular merchant is prepared to carefully handle his growing business.

Bank For Cranford.

James W. Ferguson, of Cranford, has a subscription list with nine names on it subscribing $32,000 for a proposed bank in Cranford. Cranford's possibilities are immense and her citizens are live men.

MURDERER NO. 4 IN JAIL

GUISSEPI CHALBI CAPTURED AT SUMMIT THURSDAY.

He Walked to Bernardsville Where He Boarded a Train and Was Recognized by the Conductor.—Denies the Murder.

Somerset county's fourth murderer is now lodged in jail at Somerville. After an exciting chase he was captured in Summit as he stepped from the platform of the mail train at the station in that place.

The news of the murder spread like wildfire through Bound Brook and the surrounding country. The Daily Press was the only afternoon paper that thoroughly covered the story and the large number of papers that were sent to Bound Brook in the afternoon sold like hot cakes. Everybody was anxious to learn the details of the fatality. There was much speculation as to the chances of the murderer being captured and every strange Italian that was seen was viewed with suspicion. The police of this city were among the first to learn of the murder and they were on the alert for a glimpse of the murderer.

As soon as the murder was generally known in Bound Brook, searching parties were organized and set forth on foot and in wagons in search of Guiseppe Chalbi, the accused man. Constables Anderson, Taylor and Seberg started on the trail in a wagon. They followed Chalbi from Bound Brook to the mountains and across them to Mt. Horeb, where he stopped to warm his hands in a blacksmith's shop. From that point all traces of the fugitive were lost. The hunt was continued but without success.

In the meantime, Chalbi had walked over to Bernardsville and boarded a train there on the N. J. & W. railroad. It happened that Conductor John Rogers had heard of the murder and read a description of the man who had committed the crime. He recognized Chalbi at once and telegraphed ahead to Chief of Police Stewart, of Summit, who was waiting for the wife murderer when he left the train.

Chalbi at first vigorously denied his identity, but later confessed. He declared, however, that the wound from which his wife died was self-inflicted. He said that they had quarrelled frequently because of her relations with a member of the Bound Brook police force. She was intoxicated on Wednesday night, and yesterday morning they quarrelled again. He was about to leave the house when she grabbed a knife and plunged it into her breast, saying she had no desire to live. He declared that he remained with her for fifteen minutes endeavoring to stop the flow of blood from the wound, and then he started from the house and walked to a store across the street. He says also that the proprietor of this store advised him to run away, and that he was acting on this advice when caught.

Deputy Sheriff Barkalew, of Somerville, went to Summit in company with a constable, late Thursday, and brought the prisoner to the county jail in Somerville on the one o'clock train. He is now lodged in the county jail.

The postmortem examination was conducted Thursday afternoon by County Physician Wagoner and Dr. D. C. Adams, of North Plainfield. It was found that the sharp instrument, whatever it was, pierced the subclavial vein, close to the juncture with the innominate vein. The wound was a clean cut, apparently made by some very sharp, pointed knife with a narrow blade, similar to the stiletto. The wound bled profusely internally, but very little blood flowed outside. She lived about twenty minutes after receiving the wound. There were also scratches on the right side of the face, on the neck and the right hand. There was a bruise on the left shoulder which appeared to have resulted from an attempt to bite her through the clothing.

The coroner's jury came in during the afternoon with a verdict that Bridget Chalbi had met her death at the hands of Jo Chalbi and that the death wound was inflicted with a knife.

Red Men Select Chiefs.

At a meeting of the Improved Order of Red Men last week at Trenton the following officers were elected: Great Prophet, J. A. Russell, Washington; Great Sachem, D. B. Excitement at Peapack.

Great excitement prevails in the village of Peapack. James Pickle, while digging in his garden, turned up a clod in which he saw a glittering substance. Investigation showed that it was native gold. Mining will begin as soon as the frost is out of the ground.

A TRIO OF SURPRISES.

A HOST OF BOROUGH YOUNG PEOPLE SPEND AN EVENING OF PLEASURE.

Two Popular Misses and One Boy Pleasantly Surprised by Their Many Friends—Young People Enjoyed Their Hospitality.

Last Friday the young people of the borough had a jolly good time at the several social gatherings which were held, and all of them were surprises. Among those who were surprised were Miss Nettie L. Bauersachs, of Grandview avenue. She was wholly unaware of the invasion and was completely taken by surprise. Pleasing games were the feature, interspersed with music. The guests included the Misses Florence McDonald, Belle Williams, Lucetta Clark, Mabel Stevens, Minnie Nischwitz, and Raymond Stevens, William Emmons and Theodore Merklinger, of Newark, cousin of the hostess.

Another surprise was tendered to Robin S. Hamilton, of Verdon street, and it was a surprise for the young host who was asleep in bed when his young friends arrived. It was the anniversary of his twelfth birthday. Music and games helped to pass the hours with pleasure, after which a bountiful supper was partaken of. Those who took part in this celebration were Mabel Hamilton, Hazel Martin, Clara Martin, Bertha Neely, May Neely; Irving Mills, Edward Perrine, William Perrine, Arthur Perrine, Christopher Utzinger, John VanHorn, Lester Hamilton, Walter Hamilton and Frank Codwise.

The last of the surprises was given to Miss Ada Woolston, of Fairview avenue. It was arranged by Miss Grace Emmons and was complete in every particular. Dancing and games furnished the young people with a good time, and during the evening supper was served.

The guests were the Misses Maggie Fritz, Carrie Fritz, Grace Emmons, May Bennett, Clara Buckle, Julia Williams, Clara VanFleet and Mildred Everitt; Charles Woolston, Mortimer Slater, Raymond Poole, Willard Martin, Horace Martin, Harry Vetterlein and Walter Emmons.

The zest with which the young people entered into the festive occasion was marked and all enjoyed themselves fully.

OLD VETS ARE COMING.

ANNUAL REUNION OF THE SECOND BRIGADE IN APRIL

Will Meet in This City, and It is Expected That They Will Be Given a Hospitable Time—G. A. R. to Act.

Early in April the Second New Jersey Brigade will come to this city, where their annual reunion will be held. It will be remembered that last year when the brigade met at Paterson, ex Mayor Gilbert and a delegation of citizens from this city attended the gathering and extended a personal invitation to the members to come to Plainfield this year. The invitation was accepted, and now that the time for the reunion is drawing near it has been thought advisable to commence planning for the reception of the 200 members of the brigade who will be here. Among the number will be several distinguished generals of the late war who are members of this brigade. In every respect the gathering will be a notable one, and it is desired that the citizens of this city join in making the affair one long to be remembered, and it will depend largely on the citizens as to the success of the meeting.

Committees have been appointed by Commander McVoy, of Post No. 73, G. A. R., President Mrs. Stephens, of the Woman's Relief Corps, and Capt. H. C. McVoy, of the Sons of Veterans, and a meeting was held last Monday evening at the home of Wm. Hand on Park avenue, at which time the matter was discussed and preliminary plans were made.

Another meeting will be held next Monday evening in the rooms of Post No. 73, when the actual work of the committee will commence.

PROPOSED RAILROAD CONNECTION.

A Scheme for Connection of Morristown With Other Roads.

James F. Pidcock, of Morristown, proprietor and manager of the Rockaway Valley Railroad, which connects the Central Railroad of New Jersey at Whitehall with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad at Morristown, is negotiating with Mayer E. A. Quayle, receiver, and a number of the stockholders, concerning a scheme for the connection of the two roads at Morristown. The plan as laid out by J. E. Melick, general manager of the Whippany road, is to extend the terminal points of both railroads to the old Speedwell Iron Works, at Morristown. The cost of the improvement will approach $50,000, $10,000 of which is to be raised by the Whippany River Railroad, and the balance by J. F. Pidcock. The plan has been long talked of, but no practical steps have been taken until now. A branch will also be laid from the Chippany road to Malpardis, a distance of four miles.

—Next Sunday will be Communion Sunday at the Congregational church.

ROLLED HER IN THE MUD

SUCH WAS REBECCA McCREE'S TREATMENT OF HER NEIGHBOR.

Mary Willis' Mother Objected and Arrest Ensued—City Judge DeMeza Was Called to Settle Affairs and Reprimanded Both

Two angry colored matrons made things lively in the dingy little court room of the city jail last Friday as they aired their quarrel before City Judge DeMeza. Mrs. Rebecca McCree was arraigned before the Judge on the complaint of Mrs. Lucy Willis, charged with being disorderly, breaking the lock on Lucy Willis' house and rolling Mary Willis in the mud of West Second street.

Both of these women live on West Second street, next door to each other, in Samuel Drier's houses. According to the story of Lucy Willis, her dusky neighbor was a bad case. Lucy told how Rebecca McCree used to come home at night and after listening to the stories of her children, would come over to Lucy's house and "fuss" with her.

"She said," continued Lucy, "that she was going to bust my brains out and she used to empty her ashes out in front of my door."

She then said that she had a witness who would come if she wanted him. The Judge sarcastically suggested that she might go after the witness and bring him down but the complainant did not see the point of the remark.

Then the plaintiff was sworn and told her story. It was rather contradictory to the statement of the other woman. Rebecca described her neighbor and the latter's child as being anything but angels. She said that the daughter, Mary, used to come over when she was away and swear at her little daughter. At last Rebecca declared that she could not stand it any longer and that she had chased Mary into her home.

"I caught her and brought her out and wallered her in the mud and that's the truth," she explained.

Mary Clark testified that she had heard Mary Willis swear at the McCrees.

The Judge severely reprimanded both plaintiff and complainant and then suspended sentence.

LYNCH LAW THREATENED

CITIZENS OF SOMERVILLE AROUSED OVER MURDERS COMMITTED.

The Expense of the Trials Will Be a Heavy One to the Taxpayers and Summary Methods Suggested by Citizens.

Somerville is excited. Her jail now contains four murderers, two of whom are Italians. It is some time since the residents of that town have been so worked up over anything as this wholesale storage of murderers. In each case the evidence is so strong that it is almost a certainty that the men are guilty. Two of them have been tried and found guilty by the courts.

The spirit shown is not a peaceful one. The expense of these trials will be a burden to the taxpayers and there is a sentiment among some of the people there not to await the slow process of law. Hints have been made since the day of the last murder in Bound Brook, that some night the citizens of Somerville would take the law in their own hands and dispose of the four criminals without expense to the county. Of course, the county officials have done their best to keep the matter quiet, but the story is the principal topic of conversation there.

It has also been learned that one of the prominent county officials, living in Somerville, has received a letter in which he was notified to have all the other prisoners, except the four murderers, removed from the jail, as it was the intention of the writer and his friends to blow that building up, and let the county devote the money to a new court house that would have otherwise gone to pay the expenses of the trial of the prisoners.

While there may be no truth in this threat, for such it is, it is very evident that there is a strong feeling in that direction, and that some attempt at the life of the four would not be improbable.

NEW POSTMASTER AT PLAINS.

F. K. Clark, a Dark Horse, Received His Appointment Yesterday.

F. K. Clark Thursday received his commission as postmaster at Scotch Plains, in the place of James A. Baker, deceased. Mr. Clark is a Democrat and his appointment came somewhat as a surprise, as it was not known that he was a candidate. The commission expires some time in June. By many it was thought that Norman C. King, who has been looking after the office since the death of Mr. Baker, would be appointed, as there was a numerously signed petition presented by him.

Board of Health Office.

The office of the Board of Health has been established in the rooms of A. J. Gavett in the Codington building on Park avenue. Mr. Gavett is a member of the board as well as street commissioner.

TWO STATES JOIN HANDS.

NEW JERSEY AND PENNSYLVANIA LIBRARIANS TO CONFER TOGETHER.

Meeting to be Held at Atlantic City in April When Numerous Papers Will be Read and Discussed on the Work.

On Monday, April 8th the first joint convention of the State Library Associations will be held at Atlantic City. It already promises to be a highly significant meeting. An important discussion on "What the State could do for Free Public Libraries" will be opened by Librarian Thompson of the Philadelphia Public Library, Thomas L. Montgomery of Wagner Institute for Pennsylvania, and Librarian Hill of Newark and Wm. R. Weeks for New Jersey. This discussion will be the most interesting feature of the convention as it as to do with the improvement of the Library laws of both states. The movement last year to establish a State Library commission in New Jersey was a failure. It had been hoped to secure the passage of a bill that would permit the expenditure of small sums in towns without libraries, the people of those towns having raised a certain sum themselves. The commission was also to be a sort of bureau of information to which all could apply for advice, etc., as to the best way to establish libraries, and library methods. New Jersey is far behind other states in its libraries, and such a commission would go far towards increasing the number of libraries as well as raising the standard of those already established.

Papers will also be read by Prof. Richardson, of Princeton, on the new University Library, by Librarian Hill, of Newark, and Miss Winser also of Newark Library. Miss Adams of the Plainfield Library will read a paper on "The Public Library and the Child."

A local reception committee headed by Mayor Stoy and H. S. Seme will do all in their power to make the stay of the librarians as pleasant as possible. One interesting feature of the convention will be the question box. Queries of all sorts, pertaining to libraries and their management can be submitted at any time during the day, and they will later be taken up and answered or discussed.

It is hoped that reduced rates may be procured, but at present the entire trip can be covered with $7.50.

All who are interested in libraries, whether members of the Association or not, are very cordially invited to be present. Miss Adams of the Public Library will give to any who are interested particulars of this convention.

JOINED THE NATIONAL LEAGUE

Local Y. M. C. A. Proposes to Take an Active Part.

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. proposes to take an active part in athletics during the coming year. Already considerable in the line of indoor athletics and athletic contests has been done, the local association has joined the National Athletic League of Y. M. C. A's, which is to take general control of athletics among the members of the associations in this country.

At present the Athletic League is arranging the records of that organization. The records made in the Pentathlon contests, which have been held for the last three years, were recisted with the international committee and will form the basis for the League's American records. The Pentathlon contests consisted of contests in five events—100 yards dash, running high jump, throwing the 12-pound hammer, pole vault and mile run. So far New Jersey has not been represented, but with the formation of the new league it is hoped that not only New Jersey but Plainfield will be represented in the list of records.

Manager Moulton at the Inn Again.

The Mountain Park Inn owners have completed arrangements whereby George S. Moulton will again manage the hotel next season, and are thus assured of having a thoroughgoing hotel man in charge. Mr. Moulton was in charge of the house last season, which was the first, and gave entire satisfaction. This winter he is engaged in managing the "Laurel-in-the-Pines" House at Lakewood.

RESIDENTIAL CHANGES.

WHERE VARIOUS PEOPLE WILL RESIDE AFTER MOVING TIME.

The Time is Close Approaching for the Annual Removals [and its Consequents] The Real Estate [Agents Have Been Busy.

From present indications it looks as though the coming spring will bring with it many changes in the way of removals and exchanges in property. This is evidenced by the amount of business transacted by E. C. Mulford & Son, the North avenue real estate and insurance firm. The following a partial list of the removals arranged by the above firm:

Reuben Knox and family, from Sherman and Grant avenues, to the corner of Mercer and Washington avenues; Daniel Aller, of East Fifth street, to 624 LaGrande avenue; Tell Beguelin and family, of East Front street, to the corner of Fairview and Watching avenues; Daniel R. Douglass, of Rockville Centre, L. I., to Sandford avenue; G. W. Stevens, of Duer street, to No. 75 Sandford avenue; A. L. Baldwin, of LaGrande avenue, to Leland avenue near Front street; James Middleditch and family, of Park avenue, to No. 80 Mercer avenue; Mrs. Augustus Nevius from the Jackson building to East Fifth street; E. J. Pope and family, of Elm place, to West Front street; Robert Lackey and family, from East Front street and Franklin place, to No. 311 Orange street; Mrs. McKee, of Orange street, to No. 422 East Second street; W. D. Williams, of Morristown, to No. 426 Kensington avenue; Mrs. Winn, of Grove street, to No. 20 Westervelt avenue; David Dunavan, of East Second street, to East Front street opposite Sandford avenue; J. A. Love and family, of East Sixth street and Berkman streets, to No. 507 LaGrande avenue; Charles Lister and family, of Orchard place, to No. 431 East Fifth street; A. W. Kenworthy, of New York, to No. 52 Westervelt avenue; D. B. Rogers, of this city, to the corner of West Third street and Grant avenue.

AN EARLY MORNING BLAZE

D. W. Littell's Barn Destroyed by Fire—Partly Insured.

Another supposed incendiary fire broke out Saturday at 1:45 a. m. in the barn owned by D. W. Littell, No. 715 West Seventh street. Just a few minutes before Patrolman Totten had passed the place and everything seemed to be all right. He had heard but a short distance when he heard a cracking sound and, turning around, he saw that the barn was in a blaze. He then ran to the corner of Seventh street and Spooner avenue and pulled box 37. Only a few minutes elapsed before the department was on the spot, and the firemen performed valuable service, although they were unable to save the building. Quickly as possible Mr. Littell and his sons came out of the house and rescued the two horses and wagons. Everything including hay, grain, three sets of harness and several other things was destroyed. The barn and contents was fully insured and the loss is reported to be about $700. Mr. Littell desires to thank the firemen and all who assisted at the fire.

Two Birthdays in One.

A pleasant event occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Winckler, of Park place, Thursday, when Mr. Winckler and his brother, Julius Winckler, of Detroit, celebrated the anniversary of their birthdays. The birthday anniversary of the former was yesterday while the anniversary of the latter is today. In order that they might celebrate together it was arranged that the event should be carried over this morning. Those who joined in the celebration were Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Winckler and son, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Weseman, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Dieble, of this city, Mrs. Emerson Quick, of Brooklyn; Mrs. Julius Winckler, of Detroit. During the evening there were vocal instrumental and violin selections.

Played Whist.

The Jolly Whist Club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Buckle, of Westervelt avenue, Thursday, and the usual pleasant time was enjoyed by the members. At the beginning of the season the members decided to combine the four presents, usually given, into one. Last evening Mrs. Buckle won the honors, which was a very handsome fancy work table. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Toles, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Woolston, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Emmons, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Emmons, Mr. and Mrs. John Whitenack, Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Buckle, Mr. and Mrs. Burtis.

New Trolley Scheme in Union.

A trolley road through Union county is projected which, it is expected, will absorb the Newark and Elizabeth branch of the Jersey Central. The road is to start from Plainfield and will run along the south side of the Central Railroad tracks to Elizabeth, where it will connect with the Morris avenue and East Grand street lines, owned by John Kean. At Elizabethport connection is to be made with the Newark branch of the Central.

HAD TO RETURN THE GIFT

EX-MAYOR SAUNDERS RECEIVED A PRESENT WEIGHING TEN TONS.

It Was So Heavy That There Was No Way to Transport it and the Mayor Had to Send the Stone Back to the Donor, Wang.

As a comic opera comedian Wang had an elephant on his hands that nearly ate him out of house and home, and as a popular man ex-Mayor William L. Saunders, of the borough, has a stone on his hands that, while not eating him in quite such a predicament as the owner of the pachyderm was in, has nevertheless been the cause of much figuring and many sleepless nights in his efforts to wrestle successfully with the disposition of the boulder that friends have been good enough to present to him.

People who have had occasion to go to the North Avenue station recently have noticed a large blue stone mounted on a flat car, and have wondered to what use it would be put. The stone was the property of Mr. Saunders. When the ponderous article of concrete earth, which weighs between nine and ten tons, arrived, those in charge at the freight house telephoned to Mrs. Saunders and told her that there was a stone at the yards from King of Prussia for her husband. Mrs. Saunders replied that there must be a mistake, for they had never had any communication with the King of Prussia.

When Mr. Saunders reached home that night he was informed of the message and he solved the mystery at once. It was a fact that such a stone had been sent to him as a personal compliment by a friend who lives at King of Prussia, Pa., and it was intended for a monument to be placed in Mr. Saunders' plot at the cemetery. For several days Mr. Saunders had different people figuring on plans whereby the massive article could be taken from the car and erected as intended. The task had to be given up, however, for there is not a convenience in town that could do the work for anything less than a fortune. In consequence Mr. Saunders was obliged to send the stone back. It is a very handsome stone and was greatly admired by all who saw it.

The friends of Mr. Saunders claim that the stone has something to do with the annexation of the city and the borough, while others have said that the stone was intended as a corner stone for the new city hall and that Mr. Saunders desired to contribute the borough's share toward the municipal building.

DIVIDED HONORS.

Plainfield Catholic Club Won and Lost One to Elizabeth Visitors.

The Plainfield Catholic Club and the Elizabeth Y. M. C. L. A. divided honors at the bowling alleys of the Plainfield Club last Thursday. The visitors from Elizabeth won the first game by 90 pins and then the home team woke up and took a victory by 44 pins in an exciting game. None of the scores were high, while in the first game the local bowlers put up very poor scores. They improved in the second game, but did not come up to their old time form.

The individual scores were as follows:

Plainfield Catholic Club.	1st game	2d game
Bertle	119	120
Butscher	176	151
Bamhart	178	186
Kenney	124	140

STRUCK ON THE HEAD WITH A PICK.

Narrow Escape From Death by a Little Girl Yesterday Afternoon.

Miriam Hall, four-year-old daughter of Mrs. Hall, of Central avenue, met with an accident Thursday afternoon which nearly resulted in her death. She with some other girls were walking along the above avenue near Front street, when a man who was using a pick accidentally struck the girl in the forehead near the temple.

Her cries attracted a large crowd of people who carried her to Barker's drug store, where proper treatment was given. The great loss of blood was almost dangerous. An attempt was made to secure a doctor, but the search was unsuccessful at the time. Mr. Barker rendered valuable assistance in the saving of the life of the little one.

Engineer Clapp Fully Recovered.

Engineer Clapp, who has been at the hospital for sometime being treated for injuries received in the accident at Skillman, left the hospital last week cured. Mr. Clapp feels very grateful to those who have attended him through his illness and is glad to be able to return to his position as engineer, which he will do in a short time.

The More the Merrier.

The Westfield local papers will have to hustle harder than ever now that the Plainfield Daily Press has invaded the field—Cranford Chronicle.

MRS. REED'S PINK TEA.

CHARMING SOCIETY EVENT IN THE BOROUGH LAST WEEK.

Several Hundred Ladies Enjoyed the Hospitality of the Hostess Who Presided Gracefully—Those Who Assisted Her.

The charming home of Mrs. Charles A. Reed, of Washington Park, was the scene of rare beauty Thursday afternoon, when from 4 to 7 o'clock an informal reception and tea was given to nearly three hundred prominent society people of the city and borough. The grace and charm with which the hostess and her assistants received was marked, and a more thoroughly delightful event has not taken place this season.

The decorations were pink, and this color was prettily displayed through a profusion of roses and carnations of the choicest variety. The table decorations were admired the most. Here the roses and carnations were blended with perfect harmony, while a dainty arrangement of asparagus vine gave it an additional touch.

Another pretty effect was obtained by darkening the rooms and using lighted candles. This novel feature was greatly enjoyed by the guests.

Mrs. Reed was assisted in receiving by her mother, Mrs. A. A. Clark, and her sister, Mrs. A. W. Mack, of Somerville, Mrs. Robert Lowry and Mrs. F. O. Herring.

Mrs. Samuel St. John McCutchen poured the tea and Mrs. Henry McGee poured the chocolate, while those who assisted in the dining room were Mrs. J. H. Howell, Miss Sadie Howell, Miss Alice Thompson, Miss Adelaide Ball and Miss Mabel VanDeventer.

Between the stated hours the house was thronged with people who enjoyed the pleasing sociability evidenced on the part of all.

TALKED ON HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT.

F. A. Dunham the Guest of the Connecticut Valley Highway Association.

F. A. Dunham, the well-known civil engineer of this city, has just returned from Springfield, Mass., where he attended the first annual banquet of the Connecticut Valley Highway Association. He reports that the people of Massachusetts and Connecticut are very much interested in the subject of highway improvement. A special invitation Mr. Dunham made an address on the subject, which was well received by the members present. About 175 attended the banquet, among which may be mentioned ex-Governor Hale, of Massachusetts; Mayor Stevenson, of Springfield; W. E. McClintock, one of the Massachusetts State Highway Commission; Hy Manley, of Boston, engineer in charge of street improvements, and the Mayors and city officials of several small cities. On Mr. Dunham's return he stopped at Hartford and visited the Capitol, where he was pleasantly entertained by the chairman of the Connecticut Highway Commission.

LEHIGH VALVE SHOPS LOCATED.

They Will Probably Be Erected Near the Coal Plant at South Plainfield.

South Plainfield has already been used by the Lehigh Valley Railroad as a point at which to store their winter supply of coal and now the company is planning to locate their shops at that place also. The erection of the railroad shops means much to the people of that vicinity as it would bring with it the several hundred men that are employed there.

It is stated on good authority that the company has been silently at work among the property owners of the neighborhood and purchased a tract of land, ten acres in extent.

Laid to Rest.

The funeral of the late Michael McCarthy was held from his late residence, No. 645 South Second street, Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The services were conducted privately by the Rev. Father Murphy, and only the immediate members of the family were present. The floral tributes were grand and impressive and evidenced the personal esteem of a large number of friends.

The pall-bearers were J. E. Mosher, James Whalen, Hugh McDonald, Joseph Newman, James McCarthy and Patrick Muldoon. Interment was in St. Mary's cemetery.

Paul Ackerly's Magazine Sold.

Current Events, the monthly news magazine, founded two years ago by Paul Ackerly, formerly connected with this paper and later of the Rockville Journal, and which was later removed to Hartford, has been sold to William Beverly Harrison, publisher of the Great Round World, a New York weekly filling a similar field. Unexpired subscriptions of Current Events will be supplied with the Great Round World.

New Paper Company.

The Union Paper Company have filed articles of incorporation in the office of County Clerk Howard. The incorporators are Spencer C. Blake and Rufus L. Robinson, Jr., of Cranford; Robt. S. Hasbrouck, Brooklyn; Wm. R. Anderson, Jersey City, and Orlando D. Hughes, New York. The capital of the company is $100,000. The plant is to be located at Cranford, and the company will manufacture various kinds of paper.

WHILE FAGGOTS BURNED

MISS YATES AND MISS BUTLER GAVE A CHARMING TEA.

The Invited Guests Took Turns in Entertaining While Their Fagots Burned—Quaint Souvenirs of the Faggot Tea.

Another of the unique "Faggot teas" was held at the home of Miss Yates, East Seventh street, Friday. Miss Isabelle Butler, of East Front street, entertained with the hostess and each of the twelve invited guests had a part in the novel programme of the afternoon. Each lady had a small decorated hatchet given her, on which was tied a bunch of tiny faggots, the number of which designated the number of the faggot which she was to throw on the open fire. While this burned she was to entertain the others with "Something original, something new, or something old, or something true." Miss Ella Martine gave a free-hand drawing interspersed with witty descriptive suggestions, though the talent displayed needed no assistance in recognizing the picturesque groups in crayon. Even Nast himself might not do better.

Mrs. Dennis recited very beautifully a story of the sea. Mrs. Will Murray entertained by a fine selection of "Characteristics of Authors," from which the names were guessed, a bunch of violets being given the winner.

Miss Mary Martine conducted in her own bright way, a spelling match, and many watched eagerly for the last bit of her faggot, hoping it would be gone before their turn came around again. Miss Kirkner and Miss Hardenberg both rendered vocal solos and Mrs. Charles Lewis gave an instrumental piece, each of which would have been encored, but for the fact that hurriedly their faggots, Mrs. George Clay gave a choice selection of floral conundrums, and Miss Jobs, a game of authors and their works. Miss Fritts presented hand-painted cards on which a sort of "village" game was played, the most successful contestant, Miss Jobs, receiving a silver souvenir. Mrs. Ira W. Travell had twenty or more illustrations of well-known books to be guessed.

During the beginning of Miss Yates' faggot, a souvenir tied to a bunch of faggots, and previously hidden, was found by Mrs. Travell. Miss Butler had arranged a group of photographs of famous men, each numbered, and the ten minutes the fire gave was none to much for recognition. Miss Hardenberg, knowing the greatest number, received a beautiful bunch of red carnations.

After this dainty refreshments were served at small tables in one of the adjoining rooms which presented a most charming and fairy-like appearance. The decorations were in red. Souvenir hatchets were at each plate and a bunch of eatable faggots on each table. Each guest found her seat at the table by watching the half card cut irregularly given her before and on which were written quotations relating to the foreign spoon to be used by her. The number of guests and faggots had to be limited and even then old Father Time, like the fire with the faggots, hurried the minutes away regardless of the good time, and all departed with the thoughts of a charming entertainment.

KIRMESS TO BE REPEATED.

Will be Given for the Benefit of the Hospital Next November.

At a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Hospital, held last week, it was decided to hold a kirmess during Thanksgiving week of this year for the benefit of the Muhlenberg Hospital. It will be given under the same auspices as the last one and Miss Stewart, who was the successful manager of it, will again have charge. It has not been decided just where the kirmess will be held, but probably the Cycle Academy or Music Hall will be used. This news will be a source of great pleasure to the many people who so thoroughly enjoyed the previous one.

Former Postmaster Becomes Insane.

Former Postmaster James S. Fisher, of Flemington, who served under the administration of President Harrison, was taken to the State Insane Asylum at Morris Plains Sunday morning. A sudden mental sickness, which almost resulted in his death, while traveling through Pennsylvania, is said to have resulted in his present condition. His recovery is expected.

Mrs. Hall Busy in Woman's Cause.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall lectured in Moorestown, recently, for the benefit of the Children's Summer Home of that place. Her subject was "Personal Reminiscences of Distinguished People." On the following day she assisted in the formal organization of an Equal Suffrage League, of which Miss Susan W. Lippencott was elected President.

New Real Estate Firm.

Ex-Councilman Elmore D. Moffett and W. V. Mundy, of this city, have formed a partnership and purchased the real estate business recently conducted by Lawyer Arthur Miller on North avenue. The new firm will deal in insurance as well as real estate, and the offices will remain where they are.

MRS. ROBERTS SET FREE

SHE WAS CHARGED WITH PERJURY BY A BROOKLYN MAN.

She Formerly Resided in This City Where She Married Frank Roberts—Claimed That She Had Blackmailed Marvin Cross.

Mrs. Frank Roberts, formerly of this city, was placed on trial in the criminal branch of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, last week. Justice Gaynor presiding, on an indictment charging her with perjury. The perjury, it is alleged, was part of a scheme to collect money from former Park Commissioner Marvin Cross, of Brooklyn.

The jury was quickly secured, and Mr. Backus, lawyer for Cross, said that he intended to show that the defendant had been blackmailing the Cross for years. He said that she had obtained from Mr. Cross over $12,000 by representing to him that the child was his natural son. Mr. Cross finally became tired of paying money to her, and after his wife died, and he was no longer afraid of having his old relations with the accused made public, he told Mrs. Roberts that he would not give her a cent.

Then she threatened to sue him, and did begin an action in the Supreme Court for the appointment of herself as guardian ad litem in order to compel Mr. Cross to pay for the support and education of the child.

Letters covering a period of five years were then shown to the witness and were identified by her as letters sent to her by Marvin Cross. She testified she had been married to George Roberts, who is also under indictment on the same charge, for twelve years. Her maiden name was Townsend, and she had been known as Small. When fourteen years old she married Willard Pierson, but only lived with him a year, as he threatened to strike her. She said that her brother's child was born in 1883 and that her son was born in November, 1882. She had only sent one letter to Mr. Cross since her marriage to Roberts. In all she had received about $9,800, of which amount her mother had received about $1,800.

The jury retired at 6 o'clock and returned at 9:45 o'clock with a verdict of acquittal.

INSURANCE PAPERS FOUND

Taken the Night W. H. Coles' Safe Was Blown Open at Dunellen.

When W. H. Cole's safe was blown open and robbed at Dunellen several weeks ago, there disappeared among other things, the fire insurance policy on the Presbyterian chapel, which does not expire until November, 1897. The document was given up as lost, but Friday a lad named Mohan and a companion were wandering along the railroad tracks near the round house when they espied a package of papers neatly tied up, but with no outward appearance of any value. The boys took the papers into Mr. Coles' office where they were at once recognized as the missing church policies.

TROLLEY RIVALRY.

Two Companies Striving to Obtain Franchises to Run Over Same Route.

Trolley matters are lively in Middlesex county. Friday evening representatives of the Brunswick Traction Company and the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company met at a public hearing given to the former company on its petition to construct a road through the borough of Bound Brook.

Partisans of both sides were on hand. Vice-President MacAfee, of the New York and Philadelphia company, charged the Brunswick company with working a game of bluff, saying that its only object was to block his company. Mr. MacAfee's company secured a franchise two years ago, but has not begun work. He exclaimed in reply to a question that his company wanted a new ordinance, because it desired to change the style of rail.

Fred Weigel, representing the Brunswick Traction Company, retorted warmly to the charges of Mr. MacAfee, and charged that the bluff was on the part of the other company. Its excuse about rails, he said, was only so many words, and if it had intended to build it would have done it before. Action on the petion was deferred.

DIED AWAY FROM HOME

J. L. Metler Was Visiting His Brother in Pittsburg When Taken Sick.

The many friends of Jessie Metler, aged 4 years, son of J. L. Metler, of Plainfield avenue, will learn with deep sorrow of his sudden death which occured at Pittsburg on Saturday from typhoid fever. Mr. Metler was visiting his brother when he was taken with the fatal disease. He was removed to a hospital and only lived a few days.

The deceased was a member of Trinity Reformed church, the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society, and he took an active part in all lines of Christian work.

Mrs. Andrew Stuart Patterson, of Central avenue, and her son, Edward James Patterson, are at Atlantic City, where they will remain for several weeks.

GAVE BLOWS FOR FAVORS

A NEGRO ASSAULTED A MAN IN HIS OWN LIBRARY.

M. L. Freeman Befriended the Fellow Who Finally Became so Importunate That He Was Refused—Will be Arrested.

Assaulted and beaten in his own home by a negro he had befriended, Marcus L. Freeman is now preparing to obtain redress through the courts.

Marcus L. Freeman resides in Norwood on South avenue, just beyond Leland avenue. His house sits some distance from the road. There is a colored man named George Young, better known as "Sam," who formerly worked around Freeman's place and received in return his lodging and clothes. The colored man spent but a portion of his time there and tried his hand at what ever he could get for the rest of the day. Sam arrived here from the south some time ago and has always found a good friend in Freeman.

Saturday morning, Mr. Freeman lent the colored man 25 cents. That evening, at about 9 o'clock, Young came into the library where Mr. Freeman was reading and said that he wanted to borrow 15 cents more to go to Plainfield. Freeman said that the money he had given him in the morning ought to be enough, but the colored said no. Then, according to Freeman's story, the assault was committed.

After more money was refused him the colored man turned, it is alleged, and struck the other man on the temple. The blow came without warning and Freeman was stunned by the force of it. Another followed which landed heavily on Freeman's eye. Other blows were rained down on his head and neck. He managed to crawl to the door where a breath of fresh air revived him. He then scampered upstairs, leaving his dusky guest in possession of the library.

In his room upstairs Freeman dragged out his gun, loaded it with a tremb ling hand, for he had not recovered from the effects of the rough handling. He then started down stairs to interview his assailant of a few minutes before. There was no one in the library, however, and a search failed to reveal any signs of the colored man.

Mr. Freeman suffered severely in the assault. One eye was in a bad condition, while he was badly bruised about the head. He came to this city Monday morning and appeared before Justice Newcorn. A complaint was made and a warrant sworn out for George Young on the charge of assault and battery.

A complaint was also made in the city court.

Young was arrested Monday by Freeman's house by Chief Grant and Roadman Frederickson, and placed in the lockup to await his hearing in the afternoon.

The man was unable to furnish bail and Justice Newcorn committed him to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury. Young admitted that he had assaulted Mr. Freeman, but that the latter had also done something to him.

FELL INTO A BAPTISMAL POOL.

Unfortunate Predicament of a Fine Church of Christ Member.

An unfortunate accident occurred at the First Church of Christ last Sunday just previous to the baptism of two candidates. The baptismal pool was uncovered by John Staats, an official of the church, after which he took a seat in the audience. Presently word was sent to him that he was wanted in the rooms back of the pool. In his haste to answer the call he did not think about the pool being uncovered and he ascended the steps to cross the platform. Before he could regain himself he tripped and fell headlong into the pool. The sudden splash of water startled the congregation and it was with difficulty that laughter was suppressed. Mr. Staats escaped as quickly as possible and retired to his home. The baptism was continued a little later in the evening.

X-RAY MACHINE AT HOSPITAL.

The Instrument is the Gift of a Friend of the Hospital.

One of the latest intentions, or rather discoveries, of interest to the surgical world is the X ray instrument. All of the up-to-date hospitals are having the apparatus placed in their laboratories and now Plainfield's hospital is to have one also. A friend of Dr. Endicott, of the medical staff of Muhlenberg Hospital, has just presented the Board of Governors of the hospital with $200 with which to purchase an X-ray instrument. The gift was received with thanks and the instrument will be placed in position for use in a short time.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement of Nathan R. Titsworth, of Madison avenue, to Miss Gertrude Page, daughter of Joel Page, of Geneva, N. Y., is announced. Miss Page was formerly a teacher in the public schools of Plainfield.

T. H. Keller, of East Front street, has returned from an extensive trip in the west and south. During his trip he was introduced to William J. Bryan.

BLOWN DOWN OR UPSET?

THE QUESTION IS, DID THE WIND OR HAY WAGON DO IT.

At Any Rate Mrs. Annie Huffman Found Them Knocked Over and She Would Not Pay the Mason Who Built Them.

The stone pillars in front of the residence of Mrs. Annie Huffman, near Fanwood were the subjects of interest and the question was whether they were blown down by the wind or upset by a hay wagon. The question was such an important one that Justice Newcorn was called upon to decide.

Some time ago summons were issued by that Justice in the case of Wm. H. Smith against Mrs. Annie Huffman. Smith is a mason and sued for payment for the erection of these pillars, or posts, which he alleged was due. He had first built these posts and they had then come to grief Mrs. Huffman had ordered him to rebuild them as she said they had not been put up properly or the wind would not have blown them down. He had repaired them and on her refusal to pay any more, sued her to recover the amount which he alleged was due him.

The case came up in Justice Newcorn's new office Monday. The plaintiff was represented by Fred Pope, of Somerville, while the defendant's lawyer was Counsellor W. K. McCutchen.

Mrs. Huffman claimed that Smith's workmen had not done their duty when Smith was not around, but had loafed about the yard and that she was not going to pay for the time they idled away.

Mr. Smith and most of his workmen that had been at the house were in attendance and gave their testimony. Pope tried to shake Mrs. Huffman's testimony regarding the way in which the posts had been upset by the wind.

Justice Newcorn reserved his decision.

ACTING QUEER.

Westfield Man Taken in Hand by Police for Safe Keeping.

Chas. Austin, who said he hailed from Westfield, was found wandering about in a dazed condition near the Revere House, Saturday night, and he was taken in charge by the police. The man had committed no offence that would justify his arrest and incarceration, but his actions were so strange that it was deemed advisable to care for him over night at least. When questioned at the station house he was very rational, and it was only after close questioning that his name and address was worked from him. Sunday morning the man seemed rational, so Chief Grant bought him a ticket and put him on a train for home.

How to Travel Abroad.

A complete and useful hand-book has been issued by the United States Express Company for the benefit of European and Oriental travelers. The book tells one how to prepare for a trip abroad and also gives an endless amount of valuable information about everything that is essential. Those interested should call on Manager Mills who will be glad to accommodate them with a copy.

OF HIGH SOCIAL CHARM.

TWENTY-SECOND WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF MR. & MRS. NIGHTINGALE.

The Occasion Made Pleasant by the Presence of the Saturday Night Euchre Club.—The House Prettily Trimmed.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Nightingale, of Sandford avenue, was last Saturday evening the scene of an event of the highest social charm when they had the unique distinction of celebrating the twenty-second anniversary of their marriage as well as entertaining the Saturday Night Euchre Club, of which they are members.

The attractive home of the host and hostess was decorated with taste and beauty. The prevailing color was pink and this idea was executed with a profusion of pink roses and carnations, and here and there a choice potted plant. The use of ferns and smilax added not a little to the artful method used in decorating. In the dining room the table was richly embellished with the prevailing color. Suspended from the chandelier and reaching to the four corners of the table were broad bands of pink ribbon, forming a canopy beneath which the guests were seated. There was also a profuse display of roses and carnations intermingled with smilax.

The fore part of the evening as sumed the form of a reception. Mr. and Mrs. Nightingale were assisted in receiving their guests by Mr. and Mrs. Tunis, of New York, and they were showered with congratulations. Following this bit of pleasantry, the members of the club and their guests engaged in the feature of the evening which was euchre. Six tables were filled and during the progress of the game, sweet music was rendered by an orchestra of string instruments. A spirited rivalry was evidenced in the attempt to win the honors and toward the last there was the most intense interest.

The favored ones were Miss Force, who received, as a first prize for the ladies, a solid silver salad fork, while Mrs. DeLong was presented with a beautiful foliage plant as second prize. For the gentlemen, Assemblyman W. R. Codington won first honors, a handsome silk umbrella, and the second honors, a stein loving-cup, was received by Mr. Nightingale.

Departing from the usual custom of the club, supper was served after the game, and this part of the programme was indeed a pleasant one. The eagerness to secure a ring which was hidden in a cake afforded additional pleasure to the guests, and when it was learned that Miss Scrymser was the fortunate one, she was congratulated.

During the evening an unlooked for surprise was enjoyed by the host and hostess, when Mr. Terhune, on behalf of the club, presented them with a very handsome cut-glass berry dish. In presenting the gift Mr. Terhune displayed that rare wit and humor for which he is noted, and the happy response on the part of the recipients showed that they were equal to the occasion.

The club had the honor of entertaining as their guests Miss Scrymser and Miss Buck, of Baltimore; Miss DeCamp, of Chester; Mr. and Mrs. Tunis, of New York; Whitfield Terry berry and Dr. Chas. R. Thiers, of this city.

The guests in departing extended to Mr. and Mrs. Nightingale their best wishes and many happy returns of the day.

From Cripple Creek

After the big fire in Cripple Creek, I took a very severe cold and tried many remedies without help, the cold only becoming more settled. After using three small bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, both the cough and cold left me, and in this high altitude it takes a meritorious cough remedy to do any good.—G. B. Too Much Can be Taught.

The devotional exercises at the Primary Teachers' Union meeting Monday afternoon were led by Miss Rocap, and the lesson was taught by Miss Beeching. The topic for discussion was "Can there be too much taught?" It was unanimously decided that there could be. It was announced that next week a business meeting would be held at a o'clock, and one hour later Dr. C. R. Barnes would give a talk on the "Jewish Festivals." A cordial invitation is extended to all who are interested.

—Robert W. Barnes, of Grove street, and John Butler, of Prospect place, have formed a partnership and opened a produce exchange in the building in the rear of the Trinity Reformed church.

DEATH AND A MYSTERY

MRS. MARY NOBLE LEFT FGR NEWARK AND DIED SOON AFTER.

While Living in This City She is Said to Have Had an Admirer Who is Employed in One of the Local Shops.

Mrs. Mary Noble, who is said to have resided in this city for sometime past, died in Newark Sunday under rather suspicious circumstances.

Mrs. Noble went to Newark last Friday night, at 11:30 o'clock, and was met at the railroad depot by Robert Hibbans who had known the woman during her residence in Newark, when she lived on Nicholson street. Hibbans lives in Newark but is employed in Plainfield and had been requested to meet Mrs. Noble on her arrival at Newark and see that she obtained a place to board. He did so and brought the woman to his home, but owing to sickness in his family was unable to find accommodations for her at his residence. Mr. Hibbans escorted her to the residence of the Francisco family, and Mrs Francisco readily agreed to allow the woman to stay at her home. Mrs. Noble seemed in good health and spirits and appeared pleased at the prospect of being able to go to work again.

On Saturday afternoon she went to Mrs. Hibbans' house, were she spent several hours, returning to the Francisco residence in time for supper. At about 7 o'clock Saturday night she went out again and did not return until 1 o'clock Sunday morning. Then she complained of feeling ill, but gave no information as to where she had spent the early part of the night. She was found dead Sunday.

It was also learned that the woman, during her residence at Plainfield, found an ardent admirer in the person of a machinist whom she spoke of as "Ed," and who worked in the shop where Hibbans is employed. To Officer Lotus Mr. Moore, Mrs. Noble's brother, stated that he had met Hibbans on Arlington street soon after the latter had visited the Francisco home Sunday afternoon, and that Hibbans had said nothing whatever about Mrs. Noble's presence in this city, although he knew at the time that she was in a precarious condition. Hibbans came to Plainfield Sunday night soon after the young woman's death.

The autopsy showed that the woman's liver and kidneys were somewhat congested, but Dr. Washington says that the cause of death was due to hemorrhages produced by a criminal operation.

Mrs. King is a sister of Mrs. John Kavanaugh, who resides at the corner of South Second street and Grant avenue. Mrs. King was once employed at the City Hotel.

REDEEMED THEMSELVES

Plainfield Catholic Club Defeated the Orange Bowlers.

The bowlers of the Plainfield Catholic Club redeemed themselves last Monday by winning two games from the Orange Y. M. C. L. None of the totals were very high, but the Plainfield bowlers put up by far the best game, and had no trouble in defeating their opponents. Carty made the highest score of the evening by rolling an even two hundred. The following is the individual scores:

TO SHOW CAUSE FOR NEW TRIAL.

Judge VanSyckel Grants an Order in the Phelps-Howell Suit.

In the case of Adella C. Phelps against Russell O. Howell, in tort, for $6,000 damages, tried before Judge McCormick and a jury last month, and in which $3,000 damages were awarded the plaintiff, Judge VanSyckel has allowed a rule to show cause why a new trial shall not be granted, certifying that in his judgment the case is a proper one to be reviewed by the Court.

Dangers of the Grip.

The greatest danger from LaGrippe is of its resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough Remedy taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventative of that dread disease. It will effect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

THIRD SUSPICIOUS FIRE.

JOHN BICKNELL'S BARN THOUGHT TO HAVE BEEN SET ON FIRE.

Tne Owner Left Everything All Right About the Structure When He Retired—All But Wagons Lost—Insured.

The third supposed incendiary fire occurred Tuesday at 12:27 a. m., when a barn owned by John Bicknell, of South avenue, was totally destroyed. When Mr. Bicknell retired for the night he was very particular to see that everything was all right, and at the above hour he was awakened by a bright light, accompanied by a cracking noise. As quickly as possible he dressed and ran to box 28, which he pulled with Fred Hand's key. In the meantime Patrolman Mattox saw the fire, and being near box 28, corner of East Fifth street and Franklin place, he pulled that box. It so happened that the alarm from the latter box was received first, and when Mr. Bicknell returned to his place he found the department there doing good work. The barn was filled with harness, hay, wagons, etc., but every thing was destroyed but the wagons It is thought that the loss will be near $400, but the things were partially insured.

The reflection of the fire led many to suppose that a large house was in flames, and it attracted the attention of people for miles around.

It was nearly an hour before the fire was extinguished and the firemen did good work in saving nearby dwellings. An unfortunate thing occurred when the alarm came in at headquarters. The truck was ready to go but there was no one present to take the wheel. This delayed the apparatus considerably.

A PASTOR BICYCLED.

Rev. Mr. Simpson Received a Token of Esteem from Parishioners.

On Saturday afternoon last, after the Rev. Mr. Simpson had finished instructing his confirmation class in the church, he was invited into the choir room by some of the ladies. There he found assembled a number of his parishioners. S. S. Guion, the junior warden, in a neat speech on behalf of the congregation, presented the rector with an up-to-date Spalding bicycle and all attachments necessary. Mr. Simpson was thoroughly taken by surprise, not having had the slightest intimation of the intended presentation. He was evidently much moved by this token of the affection of his people, and thanked one and all for the valuable and useful gift.

To Miss Edith Clarke, of Netherwood, is due the success of the project, the first contribution being given by Mrs. Miller, of LaGrande avenue. Netherwood. Miss Clarke's indomitable perseverance brought the matter to its happy issue, which will make the 27th of February a red-letter day in the almanac of St. Stephen's parish.

Few Names Added.

Tuesday the borough board of registry was in session to revise the lists and add names thereto. In the first district four names were added and six were erased, leaving a balance of 614. In the second district eleven names were added and no erasures were made. The total registry was 483 for this district. In all there are 1,097 names registered.

NEW JERSEY SUPREME COURT

To Richard Garretson, defendant, or whom it may concern:

Please take notice that the following writ of Scire Facias has issued out of the Supreme Court of the State of New Jersey, to wit:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, ss.

The State of New Jersey to our Sheriff of our County of Somerset, GREETING:

WHEREAS, lately in our Supreme Court of Judicature, holden at Trenton, before the Justices thereof, by the judgment of the same Court JOHN D. BARTINE recovered against RICHARD GARRETS N the sum of five hundred and thirty dollars and eighty-three cents, which he had and ought to have by occasion of certain promises and assumptions to him, the said JOHN D. BARTINE then lately made by the said RICHARD GARRETSON, defendant, and also thirty-one dollars and seventy-three cents for his costs and charges about which he had suit and his suit in that behalf expended, whereof the said RICHARD GARRETSON is convicted, as appears of record, and now in behalf of the said JOHN D. BARTINE we have been informed that ath ugh judgment be thereupon given, yet execution for the said damages and costs remains to be made to him. Whereupon the said JOHN D. BARTINE hath humbly sought us to provide him a proper remedy in this behalf. We being desirous that what is right and just should be done in the occasion, command you that by good and lawful men of your County you cause to be made known to the said RICHARD GARRETSON that he be before our said Justices at Trenton, aforesaid, on the thirtieth day of March next, to show if he has or knows anything to say for himself why the said JOHN D. BARTINE should not have his execution against him for the damages and costs aforesaid, according to the form, force and effect of the said recovery, if it shall seem expedient for him so to do. And further to do and receive what our said Court before the Justices aforesaid, shall then and there consider of him in this behalf, and have you then and there the names of those by whom you shall so cause it to be made known to him, and this writ.

WITNESS, MERCER BEASLEY, Esquire, Chief Justice, at Trenton, aforesaid, the seventeenth day of February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and [illegible].

New Firm to Open Saturday

Woodhull & Martin's big department store will open to the public on Saturday. Many changes have been made in the store since it has passed into their hands and the people of Plainfield may expect to see some new ideas introduced. Both members of the firm are enterprising business men and will have a store that will rival any establishment outside of Newark and New York.

Entertained a Euchre Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Case, of Central avenue, entertained the Central Avenue Euchre Club at their home last evening. Mrs. Thomas Munford and Mrs. J. Parker Mason won the first and second prizes for the ladies, while Irving Brown and R. M. Stelle won the first and second honors for the men. The club will not meet again until after Easter.

Hillside Club Dues Raised.

A special meeting of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club was held in the Casino Monday. Several changes were made to the constitution. The principal ones were to dues and the initiation fee. The dues were increased from $8 a year to $12 a year. The initiation will hereafter be $15 instead of $10.

Old Comrades Meet.

Comrades Peter V. Weaver and J. Newton Anderson, of this city, spent Friday afternoon with Comrade Thos. VanNest at the latter's home in South Plainfield. A very pleasant time was enjoyed by these old vets of the late war, and the wish was expressed that they might soon meet again.

Entitled to Service Stripes.

There has been no more efficient and capable officer on the Plainfield police force than James Saunders. On Monday evening, Patrolman Saunders completed his five years of service on the force and is now entitled to one service stripe which will be given him at once.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXX. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1897. NO. 10

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

MANY BOROUGH AND TOWNSHIP ELECTIONS WENT DEMOCRATIC.

COL. JOHN F. WILSON ELECTED MAYOR IN NORTH PLAINFIELD BY A MAJORITY OF NINETY-THREE.

He Was the Only Democrat Elected Across the Brook—Westfield, Scotch Plains, Piscataway and Warren Went Democratic—The Issues at Bound Brook Were Not Political, But Made a Hot Contest—The Vote in Detail is Given for the Several Places.

As a result of the election in North Plainfield Tuesday there is a most peculiar state of affairs which confronts the people of the borough who are interested in her welfare.

Col. John F. Wilson, the Democratic nominee for Mayor, was elected by a majority of 93. His total vote in both districts was 422 while Mr. Place the Republican nominee received 329 votes. The great fight was made on the Mayoralty, and there was lots of scratching on the part of the Republicans. There was a large number of Democrats who voted for the Republican nominee and vice versa. In all there were 760 votes cast and of this number 292 were Democratic and 468 Republican. The latter gave the former great support for Mr. Wilson and this is what made his majority so large.

During the evening while the votes were being counted there were many Republicans who made the remark that they would show their fellow Republicans that the latter could not afford to bolt the ticket in the primary. On this score there seemed to be a great deal of satisfaction for those who were helping to elect Mr. Wilson.

On the other hand the bolters, so called, evidenced a smile and said that they could stand it if the rest could, and they were willing to stand by the election. As the votes were being counted, and it was seen that the Democratic nominee was sure to be elected, it was thought that the majority would be about one hundred.

The greatest cut for Mr. Place was in the first district where the voters of Washington Park cast their strength against him with great force. In this section he received 173 against 237 for his opponent. In the second district the former received 156 and the latter 185.

The rest of the Republican ticket was elected with good majorities. T. J. Avrey for councilman, received a majority of 104, and Murray Burtis for the same office was given a majority of 147.

E. T. Douglass, the Democratic nominee for councilman, was given a vote of 329 and his running mate, G. W. Bird, received 299.

There were a few scattering votes as usual. Rudolph Spiegel, J. K. Arnold and William Fries each secured a vote for poundkeeper, and Peter Matthews and John Goodwin received two votes for the same office in the First district.

Below will be found a detailed account of the vote which will prove interesting reading for the political workers:

	1st Dist.	2d Dist.
For Mayor.
John F. Wilson, D.	237	185
Charles Place, R.	173	156
For Councilman.
Theo. J. Avrey, D.	229	207
Murray Burtis, R.	309	297
Edwin T. Douglass, D.	167	132
George W. Bird, D.	159	140
For Justice of the Peace,
Jonas H. Cooley, R.	255	211
For Surveyors of Highways.
William H. Lenger, R.	254	212
John W. Vanliew, R.	267	214
Lewis S. Bird, D.	157	133
David D. Smalley, D.	151	131
For Com. of Appeal.
Geo. Troyer, R.	253	214
Edgar M. French, D.	157	131
For Constable.
James Line, R.	255	214
David J. Carney, D.	147	130

The fall amounts were voted for the appropriations, and there was no cutting.

After the result had been announced several bon fires were lighted in the streets, and a quiet celebration was enjoyed on the part of those who were glad that Mr. Wilson was elected.

ELECTION AT BOUND BROOK.

Mayor John B. Coddington Reelected by a Handsome Majority.

Unusual interest was manifested in the annual borough election at Bound Brook Tuesday. This resulted from the recent agitation concerning the trolley question, both the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, and the Brunswick Traction Company having applied for franchises, and having attempted to outdo each other in the way of inducements. The former company had given out that they intended to locate their power-house and offices in the town, and asked inducements for the use of the recently completed undergrade crossing; while it was rumored that the latter company had offered to macadamize Main street from curb to curb, its entire length, and to forego the privilege of the underway.

Two tickets were in the field; the Regular, which was nominated at a caucus held on the 27th ult. and was headed by Mayor John B. Coddington, and the Independent, which was headed by Major J. K. DeMott, and which was slated by those, who considered the first nominees too conservative. In the set of resolutions, which were drawn up in connection with the Independent ticket, the granting of the franchise to the New York and Philadelphia Traction was clearly advocated, and the matter of further litigation concerning the sewer system was condemned, as was also the employment of outside counsel to manage the legal affairs of the borough.

Great activity was displayed by both parties, and carriages were kept running throughout toe day to convey tardy voters to the polls. The result was in doubt until the votes were nearly counted, when it was found that the regular ticket had won by a substantial majority, Coddington having received 233 votes as against 189 for DeMott for Mayor, and James McNabb 231 votes and David Hastings 236 votes, as against 179 for James Vosseller and 174 for L. A. Riffert, for Councilmen. Isaac McCord and David Taylor were elected pound keepers and Benjamin Billian, commissioner of appeals.

DEMOCRATS WON AT PLAINS.

L. W. Miller Defeated for Town Committeeman by Theo. Brouchman.

The fight at Scotch Plains centered on the town committeeman and great influence was brought to bear against the candidacy of L. W. Miller, Republican. As a result Mr. Miller was defeated by Theodore Bruchman, the Democratic candidate, and in his defeat Miller carried the rest of the Republican ticket to oblivion. There was not much excitement at the polls. The vote was as follows:

Town Committeeman: L. W. Miller, R., 111; Theodore Bruchman, D., 140. Assessor: John Robison, R., 109; Charles French, D., 145. Collector: Norman Dunn, R., 114; John L. Darby, D., 140; Com. of Appeals: A. D. Osborn, R., 139; Charles Haberkly, D., 115. Overseer Poor: August Klemser, R., 116; John F. Miller, D., 103. Constables: Robert Walpole, R., 3 years, 144; Wm. Traynor, R., 1 year, 143 James H. Gurrier, D., 3 years, 109; Thomas Emery, D., 1 year, 103. Surveyor of Highways: Andrew Schaffer, R., 147; Charles Brown, R., 149; Thos. Lee, D., 105; George Vanderbilt, D., 106. Pound Keepers: August Klemser, 139; Henry S. Little, 140; Edward Terry, 141. Appropriations all carried. Total vote cast 289.

PISCATAWAY RESULT.

Democrats Gain a Partial Victory at the Polls.

There was a hot consest in Piscataway township, the polls being located at New Market. As a net result of the voting it is called a "people's victory." The first Democratic collector in seventeen years was elected, the principle fight being over that office and the assessorship. The Democrats were also victorious with the assessorship candidacy. The vote was as follows:

Assessor: Charles E. Kelly, Democrat, 222; Myron J. Whitford, Republican, 188. Collector: William J. Nelson, Dem., 217; T. H. Bontingham, Republican, 194. Town Committeeman: John M. Dayton, Republican, (no opposition) 231. Surveyors of Highways: Samuel S. Giles and Albert L. Boice, Republican. (no opposition) 236 and 237 respectively. Commissioners of Appeal: Cornelius S. Boice, Republican, 234; Alexander Manning, Democrat, 181. Constables: Luther Mundy (three years) Republican, 238, Robert D. R. Pierse, (two years) Republican, 207; Lawrence Burke (two years) Democrat, 184. Justice of the peace: Walter Harris, Republican, 235; Bethune Dunham, Democrat, 186. The appropriations were as follows: For support of poor, $1,000.00; for working roads, $4,000.00; for small bridges, $550.00; for ice and snow, $100.00, hand and team, 35 cents per hour; hands, 15 cents per hour.

MAYOR BRAKELEY ELECTED.

There Was no Fight at Dunellen—The Exact Vote.

The Dunellen borough election Tuesday was a very tame affair, inasmuch as there was no opposition to the regular citizens' ticket. Of course there was the usual amount of electioneering, but it was altogether unnecessary. Many complimentary votes were cast, and many of them were for persons who never ran for office and never even aspired for any political honors.

The total vote polled was 180, out of a total regristration of 315, showing that the voters took little or no direct interest in the result. Had another ticket been placed in the field, the interest would have been greater and a larger vote polled. The individual vote follows:

Mayor, Peter W. Brakeley, 169; Councilmen, Arthur Gaston, 3 years, 177; Henry C. Gaskill, 3 years, 176; Frederick K. Wilcox, 2 years, 175; John W. Moynihan, 2 years, 167; Frank B. Wynkoop, 1 year, 184, Lewis Schneider, 1 year, 173; Assessor, Charles A. Coriell, 164; Collector, George W. Day, 164; Freeholder, Firman H. Gise, 176; Justice of the Peace, Thomas J. Todd, 167; Commissioners of Appeal, Henry V. Dunham, 3 years, 178; Samuel Luckey, 2 years, 176, John P. Apgar, 1 year, 177; Overseer of Poor, William H. Cole, 174, Surveyors of Highways, William E. Larkin, 178, Rufus J. Swackhamer, 178; Constable, Charles Wyhusker, 177; Poundkeeper, Charles W. Blaine, 176.

The appropriations, $1,500 for borough purposes and $300 for the support of the poor, each received 177 votes. Two votes were rejected.

One entire citizens' ticket was voted yesterday, with the substitution of the name of "Mat" Agency for Mayor, in place of the regular candidate.

REFORM CITIZENS' AT FANWOOD.

George C. Miller Elected Mayor by a Majority of Fourteen.

At Fanwood there were four tickets in the field, Citizens' Reform, regular Republican and two Independent tickets. The election was hotly contested throughout. The fact that almost all of the old nominees were turned down has caused quite a stir among the people. The Citizens' Reform ticket was elected and the head of the ticket was carried with a majority of fourteen. Below will be found the ticket elected:

Mayor, George C. Miller; Councilmen for three years, L. J. Ellis and H. L. Hall; Councilmen for two years, H. C. Christianson and H. Froal Robinson; Councilmen for one year, A. D. Beeken and C. W. Ten Broeck; Assessor, W. R. Stanbery; collector, O. B. Lightlower; Commissioners of Appeal, J. H. L. Todd, E. C. Kieb and Anthony Farley; Overseer of the Poor, George Edward Hall; Justice of the Peace, W. H. Hoar; Surveyor of Highways, Peter Frazer; Constable, Dennis C. Crane; Pound Keeper, Jacob Sell.

TOWNSHIP ELECTION.

The Citizens' Ticket Won Over the Republican Nominations.

The election in North Plainfield Township Tuesday was even a greater surprise than the one in the borough, for the Citizens' ticket was elected with one exception. Thomas Taylor, for collector, was defeated by Worth Coddington, Republican, by a small majority.

The following is the result of the election:

For Freeholder: Augustus Mobus, Citizen, 61; G. W. Bullman, Republican, 54. Town Committeeman: Chas. P. Sebring, Citizen, 62; W. H. Morris, Republican, 54. Assessor: Robert M. Clark, Citizen, 65; A. P. Voorhies, Republican, 52. Collector: Thomas H. Taylor, Citizen, 56; Worth Coddington, 60. Constable: Francis Bartel, Citizen, 65; Alex. Wolf, Republican, 50. Overseer of the Poor: Thomas McGann, Citizen, 61; Geo. Steward, Republican, 55. Surveyors of Highways: Ephraim S. Acker, Citizen, 116; Hiram Trust, Citizen, 61; Alex. Wolf, Republican, 52. Commissioners of Appeal: Philip Acker, Citizen, 116; Goldstein Smalley, Citizen, 62; Chas. Mooney, Republican, 54; Amos Vail, Citizen, 116. Pound Keepers: Edward Allen, Citizen, 61; Oscar Llebe, Citizen, 116; Thomas McGann, Republican, 55.

There were sixty-one Citizen and fifty-five Republican tickets cast. The full ticket was voted for the appropriations.

WARREN GOES DEMOCRATIC.

The Whole Republican Ticket Went Into Oblivion.

At the annual township election in "Old Warren" the sturdy Democrats were out in full forces. To those who remember "Old Warren" when it was only separated from Plainfield by the brook, the scenes of Tuesday would remind them of "Old Warren" in her palmiest days, when Dan Cory was the

ALL-AROUND SWINDLER.

EVEN TRIED TO BEAT A MAN ON A GRAVE STONE DEAL.

L. L. Manning was on to His Tricks, Though, and Defeated the Fellow's Intention to Bunco $10 From Him.

A clever swindler came to this city last week and selected L. L. Manning, the well-known monument dealer of West Front street, as a victim. It takes two to make a bargain, however, and Mr. Manning had heard of men of his stamp before so the bunco man departed no richer than he came. His scheme was a clever one and many men would have fallen into the trap that was so cunningly set for them.

Last Thursday morning a stranger walked into the office of Mr. Manning on West Front street and inquired for the proprietor. Mr. Manning introduced himself and the stranger proceeded to tell the cause of his visit. He wanted to buy a monument for a friend, so he said, and he had been recommended by the people of the City National Bank, of this city, to come to Mr. Manning. He presented his card which read as follows:

SHAPERO, ROSE AND HAND.
BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING.
36-38 East Broadway, New York.
I. HAHN.

He explained that a friend of his wanted to buy a monument and had asked him to purchase it. He wanted to pay about a hundred dollars, he said. Mr. Manning showed him several stones. Then the bland stranger wanted to know what he could buy for $90, explaining that he thought he ought to make something on the purchase. Mr. Manning exhibited another stone at the required price and Mr. Hahn, if such was his name, declared that it would suit. He then gave the inscription that he wanted carved on the stone, which was as follows: "Benjamin, son of Louis and Rachael Greenberg. Born May 9th, 1891. Died, August 5th, 1893."

The stone was to go to Perth Amboy and be placed in the cemetery there, in the south plot, east end, grave number 451. Mr. Manning was to learn all the details about the laying of the stone from S. Meitner, who, the stranger declared, was the leading grocer.

He came the question of pay. Mr. Hahn suggested that Mr. Manning take his friend's check for $100 which he had and give him $10 in change. The plan sounded plausible, but Mr. Manning did not bite. He suggested that Mr. Hahn keep his friend's check and give to him, Mr. Manning, his personal check for the $90. The swindler demurred at first, but as there was no reason for not doing so, he finally gave Mr. Manning his check on the Liberty National Bank, of New York, for $90.

Then Hahn showed the contents of his sample case which contained several children's suits. He offered one to Mr. Manning for $2 and the latter bought it for his grandson. The suit was a good one. Mr. Manning suggested that the price of suit be taken from the price of the monument but the stranger objected very strongly and Mr. Manning finally paid cash for it. The suit was no swindle but probably only a blind to cover up the other scheme.

Mr. Hahn departed and Mr. Manning took the check to the City National Bank for investigation. Inquiry was made in New York and the Liberty Bank sent out word that the check was worthless and the whole affair a swindle. Of course, Mr. Manning cancelled the order and is congratulating himself that he escaped the clutches of the bunco man. The New York detectives are now looking for the man.

Mr. Hahn visited several other of the merchants in town and swindled them out of small sums of money. He purchased a number of articles which he paid for with a check, asking a small commission which was paid in several instances in cash. In Dunellen, he also visited several of the dealers but as far as has been learned, no one was swindled. He signed his checks as Ivan Hahn.

Mrs. Tier Surprised.

A surprise party was given to Mrs. Josie M. Tier, of Bank place, last Tuesday, by the teachers of the primary department of the Trinity Reformed church, and Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Anthony, and Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Marshall. Mrs. Tier is the efficient superintendent of the primary department. The party met at the store of J. H. Leggett and went to the house in a body. The surprise was a complete one.

—A fair will be held in the parlors of Trinity Reformed church, Thursday, March 25th, afternoon and evening, for the benefit of the carpet fund of the church.

ELECTION IN WESTFIELD

THE DEMOCRATS WERE VICTORIUS AFTER A HARD FIGHT.

N. B. Gardner, the Head of the Republican Ticket, Had too Many Enemies in His Own Party and Was Thus Defeated.

Westfield, March 10th.—The election is over and was just as it has been predicted in The Press. The three Democrats heading their ticket were elected after a bitter fight from start to finish, as both sides did more or less cutting. Early in the day the Republicans gave up all hope of carrying ex-Town Committeeman N. B. Gardner, the head of the ticket, to victory, and confined their efforts in a vain endeavor to pull ex-Collector A. K. Gale out of the mire. But it was useless. He, too, was snowed under. There were many causes, it is said, contributing to the defeat of those heading the Republican ticket, which were that the voters objected to the high-handed primary, the sewer and the heavy assessments. And it was also alleged that Mr. Gardner in previous elections has worked for Democratic candidates. Especially at the polls last spring when he assisted in the election of I. I. Ross, Democrat, for town clerk, who defeated the Republican candidate, J. H. Cole. The votes were cast as follows: For Town Committee, Christopher W. Harden, D., 376; N. E. Gardner, R., 271; Assessor, John M. C. Marsh, D., 389, Wellington Moorehouse, R., 266; Collector, Addison H. Clark, D., 362, Augustus K. Gale, R., 294; Constable, Gustave H. Koester, D., 209, Eugene W. Chamberlain, R., 383; Justice of the Peace, James R. Patterson, D., 308, Walter B. Toucy, R., 341; Surveyors of Highways, John Darsh, D., 376, David E. Miller, D., 376, J. M. Wilcox, R., 380, Sherman Cooper, R. 382; Commissioners of Appeal, Henry C. Sargeant, D., 272, Benjamin H. Woodruff, D., 276, Isaac P. Whitehead, 267, William W. Connolly, R., 389, John J. Coger, R. 385, Charles A. Smith, R., 381; Pound Keepers, Jonas S. Miller, D., 274, Simeon W. Lambert, D., 269, S. H. Willoughby, R., 379, Oliver M. Pierson, R., 382, N. B. Gardner, R., 2. The appropriations went through as recommended, and are as follows: Roads, $6,000; street lighting, $2,700; poor, $600; fire department, $600; hydrants, $700; maintenance of sewer system, $1,500; township expenses, $2,500. The election passed off quietly, though there was more interest shown than at the National election last fall. Only at one time did there appear to be a fracas and that was when one Burke got up on the railing in the second district polling place and wanted to make a speech. Howard Manning, one of the judges, hurled him out doors, and he called for the men to come out and hear him. They didn't seem anxious, and Mr. Burke put off in the dark. The officers will qualify before Friday and the town committee will hold its first meeting of the new year next Friday evening.

REV. S. F. CUSTARD DEAD.

Dunellen Methodist Minister Dies After a Long Illness.

By the death of Rev. S. F. Custard, Dunellen loses a most highly educated citizen and an honored member of the Divinity. Born as he was near Stroudsburg, N. J., and educated in the University of Pennsylvania, he spent most of his time at home. For several years he taught school in Clinton, Hunterdon County, and it was not until 1891 that he entered the ministery. His first charge was at Milford, Pa., and from there he came to Dunellen. He was thirty-six years of age, and leaves a wife and one daughter, Letia, and a son, Stewart Franklin.

Rev. Mr. Custard was a whole souled man; he loved his neigbors as himself. He studied in no college for the ministry, but he felt his calling and took up preaching because the Lord had called him, and he was very successful in his work and was instrumental in making many converts. Funeral services will be held on Friday at 2 p. m. Presiding Elder G. W. Smith will officiate. Interment will be at Easton, Pa.

ARDENT SUFFRAGE ADVOCATE.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall Working Among the State Legislators.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall visited Trenton yesterday in the interests of the pending school suffrage amendment. A number of prominent senators expressed themselves in favor of the measure, and said they thought it would certainly pass, if the other amendments do so; but it will necessarily be delayed a year, should this date overtake the other amendments. In a word, the school suffrage amendment is expected to keep pace with the other constitutional amendments.

Mrs. I. A. Connett, of 903 Watchung Avenue, is ill with the grip.

TROLLEY CAR COLLISION

A MULE AND A HORSE STRUCK WITH TERRIFIC FORCE.

Motorman Foreman Could Not See Far Ahead in the Heavy Mist Tuesday Night and the Accident Resulted Thereby.

A trolley car, a mule, a horse, a load of hay and several human beings were mixed up in a conglomerate mass on the tracks of the street railway near Clinton avenue as the result of a collision Tuesday at 9:30 p. m., and for a time it looked as though the accident had been a very serious one. The trolley car, in charge of Motorman Foreman and Conductor Pierce, was going west at a lively rate of speed. The heavy mist prevented the motorman from seeing very far ahead and before he realized his danger he found himself mixed up with a mule, horse and a load of hay, in charge of Harry Rhyne who drives for W. O. Baldwin, of West Fourth street. It is said that previous to the collision Rhyne yelled loud and long to the motorman, but apparently the latter did not hear, for he paid no attention to the warning.

Rhyne was coming toward Plainfield and the car was so near to him that he was unable to turn out of the tracks to escape the blow. The force with which the car and wagon came together was so great that the mule was thrown over the fender and partly into the car, while the horse was thrown under the wagon. Both animals were bruised and scratched considerably.

The wagon pole struck the front of the car and then grazed the stomach of the motorman, inflicting a contused wound. He was laid out for awhile and unconscious. Later he was removed to the hospital, where he is now doing nicely. His wounds are not serious.

Rhyne was scratched and bruised slightly. He was treated by Dr. Fritts today.

The car was completely wrecked in front and the fender was put out of use. The wood and iron work was smashed as was also the glass in the front windows. There was one passenger on board and he escaped injury. He was treated to a severe shaking up and the conductor did not fail to receive the same treatment.

It was reported that the man driving the horse was asleep but this is denied by people who claim to have witnessed the accident.

The accident will be investigated and the blame will be placed where it belongs.

STOLE HARNESS.

Burglars Made a Raid on William Titus' Barn.

Thieves were at work in the borough again on Sunday night and visited the barn of William Titus, the proprietor of the Golden Rule Bakery on Somerset street, during that evening.

Mr. Titus returned from a drive Sunday evening at about eight o'clock. His horse was too warm to feed at that time and so he put him in the stable in the rear of the bakery. Two hours later he returned to feed the animal and found the door open. An investigation proved that some one had walked in and helped himself to the harness which hung in the barn. Several sets were missing. So far nothing else has been missed. There are no traces of the thieves.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

There were a number of cases to come before Justice Newcorn Tuesday, but all were, for some reason or other, settled or adjourned to another date. The case of Hetfield vs. Jartin, landlord and tenant, was adjourned for one week. The contract case of Thatcher vs. Thorn was discontinued and new summons issued. The contract case of Anderson vs. Davis was laid over for another week. The case of Schorb vs. Berthon, on contract, was settled by the payment of the amount of the judgment. The contract case of Bunyon vs. Curtille was also settled. Summons were issued in the landlord and tenant case of McDermott vs. McDonald, returnable on the 15th.

Helplessly Drunk.

John Burns, of Elm place, has gone to Elizabeth to spend sixty days. It was at the request of City Judge De Meza that he went. He was found helplessly drunk in the gutter near the Y. M. C. A. building on East Front street and arrested Tuesday. He was arraigned before the City Judge this morning and sent down to Elizabeth as he had not the necessary $10 to pay the $20 fine. He has been there several times before charged with drunkenness and non-support of his wife. He paid a sixty day visit to Elizabeth some time ago.

Mr. Buttfield, of North Plainfield, is planning a trip to Japan, expecting to start in a short time.

LIBRARY NEEDS $3,500.

DIRECTORS RECOMMEND THE COUNCIL TO APPROPRIATE THAT SUM.

A Cabinet Ordered to be Bought to Place the John Taylor Johnson Collection of Coins in—Other Business of the Directors

A regular meeting of the Directors of the Public Library was held last night with President Tyler in the chair.

The application of John Leal for eight teachers' tickets, or cards, to be issued in his own name, was granted. The Art Committee was authorized to obtain cases for the John Taylor Johnston collection of coins, presented to the library, and have the words "Presented by the children of John Taylor Johnson," placed there in compliance with the offer of Herbert Johnson. The president reported that the boulder given to the library by Mr. Fountain had been moved and is now in position in the library grounds.

The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, By this Board and this Board doth hereby determine that the sum or amount of $3,500 will be required in the year 1897 for the maintenance of the library and reading room established and existing in the city of Plainfield, under and pursuant to the act of the Legislature.

Resolved, That the president of this Board forthwith certify to the Common Council of the City of Plainfield that the amount or sum of $3,500 will be required in the year 1897 for the maintenance of said library and reading room.

On motion the papers presented by the president were referred to Mr. Tracy.

The Librarian's report for February was read, and on motion received and placed on file.

The Board adjourned to meet on the evening of March 13th.

GETTING READY FOR RACES.

The Driving Park to be Opened May 1st With a Good Programme.

The track of the Gentleman's Driving Park Association is being put in shape for the spring opening which will probably take place on May 30th. There will, however, be trotting there before that time. Some of the horses which will be entered for the series of trotting contests are A. C. Vail's team of handsome pacers, with records of 21 and 22, James R. Arkyll, of Westfield, "Royal," with records of 24 and 25; J. W. Johnson's black stallion "Sir Alfina," 2:19; Bob Fairbairn's "Lillie M," 2:24 "Lillian M," is a half sister to "Robert J," the acknowledged fastest pacer in the world. Mr. Fairbairn's trotter, "Whipple," which can also turn the track in 2 22 will participate in the races. Jed Smalley's "Westcott" with a record of 2 22 and Thomas Brantingham's "Myrtle Twig," in the 2 24 class.

These races in the past three years have proved very attractive and each Saturday afternoon the lovers of horse racing go to the track not to bet, but to witness friendly contests.

ASKS $10,000 FOR BEING JILTED.

Miss Deckhut Brings Suit Against Wealthy Farmer Ludlow, of Cranford.

A breach of promise suit for $10,000 has been commenced in the Supreme Court at Trenton by Miss Carrie Deckhut, aged twenty-three, of Cranford, against John J. Ludlow, aged thirty-five, a wealthy Cranford farmer.

Miss Deckhut is a farmer's daughter, whose land adjoins that of Ludlow. She claims that in January, 1894, defendant asked her to become his wife in the presence of her mother, and his suit was accepted. Ludlow had, she asserts, put off from time to time the wedding, but she had entire confidence in his promises. Now he refuses entirely to make her his wife, hence the suit. Offers were made to the young woman to settle, but the amount was not sufficient, she declares, to compensate her for the injury sustained. Ludlow has served several terms on the Union county juries, and is one of the best-known young men in Cranford. The case will be tried at the May term.

Baptists and Their Missions Debt.

It was announced last week that a conference of prominent Baptists of New York and New Jersey, both clerical and lay, will be held at the residence of S. H. Plum, in Newark, March 16. The object of the conference is to adopt plans for the liquidation of the combined debt of $486,000 of the Baptist Foreign and Home Missions. Toward the payment of this sum, Mr. Rockefeller of New York, has promised to contribute $250,000. It is reported that a number of other contributions from different States toward the $253,000 that remains to be collected will be announced after the Newark conference.

Women Interested in School Work.

The need of a new school building has impressed itself so strongly upon the women of Crandford, that a large number of them have determined to attend the annual school meeting on March 16, and exercise the right to vote. The Board of Education is unanimously in favor of erecting a new building on the site of the present structure. The plan is bitterly opposed by most the residence of the south side of town, who contend that the erection of a small school south of the railroad track would meet the needs of the south side pupils and relieve the congestion in the existing school house.

MURDERERS' APPEALS.

JOHNSON AND CLAWSON CASES BEFORE COURT OF APPEALS.

In the Case of Clawson the Decision of the Lower Court Was Confirmed—He Must Hang Unless He is Pardoned.

The murder case of Jacob S. Johnson, the colored preacher of Somerville, was argued before the court of error and appeals last week. Johnson is under sentence to be hanged on the charge of murdering Annie Rogers for her money. The crime was committed September 15, 1895, and Johnson was convicted and sentenced to be hanged on March 11, 1896. The case was taken to the Supreme Court and argued at the June term, and the judgment below affirmed.

Messrs Stelle and Meehan appeared for the condemned man and argued that the verdict of the Supreme Court should not be permitted to stand, but should be reversed for the reason that that tribunal held in effect that the County Court act of June 13, 1866, was unconstitutional; that the exclusion of negroes from jury duty, if not done designedly but as a matter of course, is legal, and that the decision of the trial Judge on a challenge to the array was of fact, and not subject to review; that the ninth section of the Jury act, which enacts that the Sheriff shall deliver a list of the jurors summoned to the clerk, who shall file the same, and that no person shall serve as a juror whose name is not contained on said list, if objection be made, is directory and not mandatory and declaratively law; that the testimony as to the similarity between impressions of footprints made in a box of sand in the presence of the jury and footprints made months before at the locus in quo, was one of the identity and competent. The footprints sought to be proven and identified, having at the time no existence; that the weight of evidence was not in favor of the prisoner, and was sufficient to sustain the verdict of guilty.

The Court of Errors and Appeals last week affirmed the decision of the court below in the case of Elmer Clawson, the boy murderer of Harry Hodgetts. Clawson must now hang unless the Court of Pardons intervens and it is understood that a petition in his favor has already been forwarded to that Court. The petition urges a commutation of his sentence to imprisonment to life.

A NEW DIRECTOR.

Curtis M. Thorpe an Officer of the Y. M. C. A.

At the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Young Men's Christian Association held last week the following men were present: W. D. Murray, E. L. Bonny, H. O Newman, James W. Jackson, A. B. Bevers, Nelson Runyon, Stephen Gahoone, Henry M. Maxson, A. C. LaBoyteaux

The Educational Committee reported the work of the Educational Department for the month. There were 28 sessions of the seven educational classes held during the month. The rooms committee reported that the association rooms had been used during the past month by fourteen different outside parties.

Curtis M. Thorpe was elected a member of the Board of Directors to fill a vacancy in the Board.

The Rooms Committee reported that the globe and fixtures for the light to be in front of the building had arrived and would probably be put up in a day or two.

MARRIED QUIETLY

Mrs. Margaret Kirch Becomes the Wife of Lafayette Rosenstehl.

The marriage of Miss Margaret Kirch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Kirch, of Somerset street, and Lafayette Rosenstehl, also of Somerset street, was celebrated last Thursday at 8 p. m., at the home of Rev. George Hauser, who performed the ceremony. Miss May Conover acted as maid of honor and Henry Bohl was the best man. The bride and groom are both well known young people of the borough and their friends wish them a happy and prosperous journey through life. Mr. and Mrs. Rosenstehl will reside in the borough.

Mechanics to Have Their Own Building.

The Junior O. U. A. M. of Mt. Bethel are to be congratulated upon their energy and push, for they are about to put up a new building of their own. Grandview Council, No. 248, broke their new ground on Thursday for a new hall. The building is to be 20 by 40 feet in dimensions, two stories high and is to be fitted up with a store and lodge rooms above. The Council now numbers some 30, and the most important part is that the members are going to do the whole work themselves. It is expected to have the building finished by the middle of April.

To Engage in the Grocery Business.

F. A. Long, who has been employed by A. M. Griffin, the Front street hardware dealer for a number of years, has resigned his position to go in partnership with George Kirch, the popular Somerset street grocer.

JUST FOR CHRISTIANITY.

THAT IS THE AIM OF THE CHRISTIAN ALLIANCE.

Dr. Farr Drew a Parable From the Book of John, Helpful to Those Who Heard His Remarks Last Night.

The rooms of the W. C. T. U., in the Cycle Academy, were comfortably filled by those last week who had gathered to hear Dr Farr lecture there, under the auspices of the Christian Alliance. He lectured directly from the Bible, and he quoted and spoke from John 2:1 to 12 inclusive:

"One thing we all can do," said the Doctor, "is to worship the Virgin Mary and whatsoever the Lord sayeth unto you, do."

"The Oriental foot-bath was given to teach a lesson of humiliation and the first miracle of Moses was turning water into blood. According to the New Covenant water was turned into wine, but water is the prevailing type of the present day and wine is a type of the ages that are to come. We are now on the side of the cross and we have no right to partake of wine at the present day. Jesus has been in Heaven 2,000 years, and there are many more heathen now than before. Satan always offers the best first, then deteriorates and makes worse. God gives the worst first and it grows better until the tides of blessings come rolling in, and when we get to Heaven we get the wine. God will transform; that which is low He will elevate, that which is dark He will illuminate, those who are weak He will strengthen. Repentance on the threshold of the Christian life is to change one's mind. We must become spiritually and Heavenly-minded. We repudiate our strength when we come to Christ, exchanging that which is human for what is divine."

Dr. Farr stated that at Old Orchard Beach, eleven years ago, the Christian Missionary Alliance was formed by people banding themselves together for mutual benefit, Christianity and sociability. It does not in any way conflict with or interfere with any other religious organization, much more is it helpful in itself and is prolific of much good. "Suffering with Christ," said the speaker in conclusion, "is an exalted honor. Study the word of God and accept that theory which is most consistent to your own personal welfare."

Dr. Farr then devoted a few minutes to answering questions, to every one of which he had a ready and most enlightened reply. The audience sang a hymn and the meeting came to a close.

THE BRIGHT SIDE'S, INDEED.

King's Daughters Entertained by Mr. and Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux.

The Bright Side Circle, Kings Daughters, were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, of Fairview avenue, last Friday. The house was thronged with the members and their friends who thoroughly enjoyed the pleasing programme and the genuine sociability. Interspersing the social chat, those present were entertained with vocal and instrumental music. The first number was a piano solo by Walter Raynolds, which preceded a vocal solo by Miss Emma Purdue, of Orange, who was accompanied on the piano by Miss Lillian A. Force. A vocal duet by Miss Grace Powell and Charles Powell was followed with another vocal duett by the Misses LaBoyteaux. The programme closed with a vocal solo by Stacy Raynolds. Each of the above numbers were given in a pleasing manner and were heartily received by all present. The rest of the evening was devoted to a social time and the serving of dainty refreshments.

Embryo Editors.

The following are those in charge of "The Autocrat," the North Plainfield High School publication: Miss Edna French, editor in-chief; Edouard Loiseaux, Miss Helen Phillips, literary editors; Harry Curtis, Miss Clara Van Fleet, news editors; Aubrey Hull, Miss Dorothea Wells, exchange editors; Douglass Drake, Miss Elsie Brokaw, review editors; Charles M. Dolliver, corresponding secretary; Richard McCullough, treasurer and business manager.

No Petitions for Edith

Edith Baehr's friends sent no petitions to the meeting of the Board of Freeholders Thursday afternoon. The Board has no authority, except to investigate the case and treatment of prisoners in the county jail. The jail committee approves the discharging of prisoners at the expiration of their terms, with the customary time allowances for good behavior, but beyond these matters the county legislators have no jurisdiction.

Died at a Ripe Age.

The death is announced of Mrs. Stephen L. Miles, which occurred at the home of her daughter in Washingtonville at 9 a. m. Saturday. Old age, 79 years, is the only cause assigned for her death. The children left are Mrs. G.W. Bullman, of Washingtonville; James Q. Miles, of this city; Rev. E. S. Miles, pastor of the M. E church at Hyde Park, and Mrs. A. M. Field, of Florida.

HOUSE WITH A HISTORY.

REVOLUTIONARY MEMORIAL SOCIETY DESIROUS OF BUYING THE PLACE.

It Was There That General Washington Made His Headquarters For One Winter —Plainfielders Appeals to For Relief

In the four Middle States there are extant just four houses that stand, or should stand, high in the affections of the American people. With Faneuil Hall in Boston they are entitled to be called the cradles of American liberty. During the most critical times of our country's history in them all public interest centered, and for successive anxious months toward one or the other of them the thoughts of all patriotic Americans turned with the deepest hope and solicitude. These four historic mansions were at various times during the Revolutionary War the headquarter of General Washington, and are ordinarily designated as the Stone House, at Newburg, N. Y., the Stone House, at Valley Forge, Pa., the Ford Mansion, at Morristown, and the Wallace House, at Somerville. Three of these dwellings are in the possession of Washington Associations, composed of patriotic citizens who zealously guard them against decay and destruction, and preserve within their walls valuable manuscripts, relics and antiquities relating to Washington and the Revolution. Strange as it may appear, one of the famous mansions, the Wallace House at Somerville, is today encared for by no public association and historically is known to but few persons outside of its own vicinity. Happily, thus far its successive owners have appreciated its close connection with great events in our country's history. It stands today, therefore, almost, if not quite the same as when it was the home of General and Mrs. Washington, and the headquarters of the Continental Army.

This Wallace House, completed in the autumn of 1778, stands in the midst of a grove of old oaks, some 600 feet back from the main street at the west end of Somerville. During the winter and spring of 1778 and 1779 when seven brigades of the Continental Army were cantonned at Camp Middlebrook. it was General Washington's headquarters, and for six months this honored house opened its doors to many distinguished people. Here Mrs. Washington spent the winter with her husband. Here, too, came constantly Governor Livingston, Lord Stirling, Generals Green, Knox and Steuben, and other great men of that day. It was in this house that the commander-in-chief received with great honors, in April of 1779, Mr. Gerard, the newly accredited minister from France, and it was here that the celebrated Spanish envoy, Don Juan de Miralles, came to pay his respects to the distinguished American general.

There has recently been formed in this State a society, its object being the preservation of just such historic places as this old mansion, and it is desired that the Plainfield public become acquainted with the work of the Memorial Society and share in the honor of saving from demolition such houses as the Wallace House located so near this town.

The president of the society is Mr. Richard F. Stevens, of Newark, treasurer, Mr. Ernest E. Coe. The shares are $10 each, and annual dues $1 for each member. It is earnestly hoped that some of the patriotic and public spirited citizens will become shareholders in the enterprise. Mrs. J. K. Myers, 139 East Seventh street, Regent of the Continental Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, will gladly receive subscriptions for this fund. This Chapter whose members are Plainfield women are going to give a reception on the evening of April 19th, the anniversary of the battle of Lexington, in the beautiful home of Mr. Charles W. McCutchen, for the benefit of this object, details of which will be given later.

NEW COUNTY BUILDING.

Board of Freeholders Will Purchase the Sheridan Avenue Property.

The Union County Board of Freeholders, at its meeting Thursday afternoon, received a report from the Building Committee of the Board stating that it had secured an option on the Sheridan Hotel for $25,000, the building to be torn down to make room far a new county building. The Board ratified the work of the committee, and will purchase the building as soon as all the legal impediments are removed.

Postmaster Sheridan, owner of the building, having died insolvent, the matter cannot be adjusted and the property disposed of before next June.

Ran Into the Fe

While a farmer, living near South Plainfield, was unloading lumber from a freight car near the site of the old freight house Thursday morning, the horses attached to his wagon became frightened at the engines and started to run away. They brought up against the fence that surrounds the iron fence around the little park there and laid out three lengths of the fence. The career of the horses came to a sudden stop, however.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DUTIES.

R. K. CASE TO BE SUPERINTENDENT OF FIRST BAPTIST SCHOOL.

Annual Meeting Held Last Week When the Reports of Officers Showed that the School Did Much Good During the Year.

The annual meeting of the First Baptist church Sunday-school was held last Thursday in the lecture-room of the church, at which time officers were elected and the reports for the year were received. Superintendent R. K. Case presided, and called for the reports of the home school and the Mrs. Olive Baptist church Sunday-school.

Treasurer Frank Jones reported that the receipts during the year had been $2,067.83, and the expenditures $1,777.88, leaving a balance of $109.95.

Secretary Charles Smith stated that the school had grown very much during the past twelve months and all the departments were in the best of condition.

The city missionary, Miss Shinn, reported her work for the past quarter and told something of her efforts in organizing a home department for those who are not interested in Sunday-school work. At present she has about sixty members and the membership is rapidly increasing. The idea of this department is to get the parents sufficiently interested so that they will agree to devote a half hour a week to the study of the lesson; also to get them to contribute something each week to the work and get their children to attend the school. Miss Shinn said that she was very kindly received wherever she called and that she had great cause for encouragement in her work. She reported the collection of $6.36 for the first quarter.

For the missionary committee Mr. McCutchen reported that the work in that department was in excellent condition and, while not as much money had been expended during the past year as during previous years, the committee was doing good woork in other ways.

Superintendent M. C. Dobbins, of the Mt. Olive Sunday-school, submitted his annual report, which showed that at present there is a membership of 208 with an average attendance of 104. During the year there were thirty-five conversions, and there are now ten candidates for baptism. Two deaths were reported. The collections for the year were $79.009, of which amount $3.56 had been contributed to the state and county Sunday-school work; $1.60 to the Primary Teachers' Union and $1.15 for the minutes of the state association.

These reports were followed by the election of the officers which resulted as follows: Superintendent, R. K. Case; secretary, C. H. Smith; librarian, B. J. Shreve; treasurer, Frank Jones; assistant secretary, Harry Drake; superintendent of the Mt. Olive school, M. C. Dobbins; secretary, Charles Conover.

A social time was then enjoyed by all during which Miss Bessie Blair and L. H. Bigelow, Jr., rendered several solos, and refreshments were served.

NOT PREPARED FOR THEM.

A Pleasant Surprise Party Given to Mr. and Mrs. Westphal.

A pleasant surprise party was given to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Westphal, of South Second street, at their home last Friday. The early part of the evening was enjoyed in listening to the following programme: Piano solo, Miss Anna Gray; recitation, Mr. Haskett; vocal solos, Miss H. Howard and W. G. Gray; piano solo, Mr. Fielding; vocal solo, Miss Thompson. Dancing and games were participated in afterwards.

The following were present: Mr. and Mrs. Fred Westphal, Councilman and Mrs. William A. Westphal, Mr. and Mrs. George Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Couley, Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard, Mr. and Mrs. Haskel, Mr. and Mrs. McInnes, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. D. Bowden, Mrs. and Miss Montgomery, Miss Lucy Westphal, Fred Schomp, D. H. Gray and Masters James and John Gray.

NICE WORDS AT THE END

THE OUTGOING BOROUGH COUNCIL INDULGE IN PLEASANTRIES.

Councilman MacLaughlin Says That He Has Profited by Experience and Advice—Different View of Clerk's Duties.

The last and shortest session of the present Borough Council was held last Friday, and it was marked by a little pleasantry which was appropriate to the going out of the Mayor and two Councilmen.

Owing to the fact that Councilman Lounsbury is ill and Councilman Valiant is away, neither was able to be present. In accordance with the custom it was 8:30 when Mayor Hagaman called the meeting to order, and the first business taken up was the receipt of a statement from Collector Spencer showing that since his last report he had collected $400.19.

Julius Stahl, in a communication, reported that Peter Bender had served the borough seven years as a fireman and asked that he be given exemption papers. The matter was referred to the proper committee.

Mr. Peck stated the fire department was in good shape and that the new house was about completed. All necessary apparatus had been secured except the electrical and that had been arranged for.

Mr. Woolston made a brief report of the work accomplished by the street committee since the last meeting and said that it would be necessary to issue two additional certificates for $2,000 in connection with the work of opening Watchung avenue. A resolution was offered by Mr. Woolston to the effect that the same be issued. This makes in all $24,000 in certificates.

Mr. Peck offered a resolution that a loan of $1,500 be made and that the same be charged to the borough account.

The ordinance referring to the opening of Whitewood avenue was called up and passed to its third reading. The ordinance will go into effect on March 27th.

This finished up the business of the Council and Mr. McLoughlin started the ball a rolling, so to speak, by making a few complimentary remarks. He said that he desired to tender his appreciation to the retiring Mayor and Councilmen, and he felt in so doing he would voice the sentiments of the people of the borough. Since he had been in the Council he felt as though he had profited by the advice and experience gained in being associated with the members of the present body.

The Mayor could not keep his seat and was obliged to respond, which he did in his usual happy manner. He said that during the past two years that it had been his pleasure to be the executive head of the borough, he had been surrounded with efficient and courteous gentlemen. He felt sure that the incoming members would perform their duties as conscientiously as they had during the past, and that the incoming Mayor, whoever it might be, would receive the same courteous treatment that had been accorded him. In closing Mr. Hagaman thanked all the members for the kindness extended to him.

Mr. Woolston said that he would like to say one word regarding the borough clerk. He admitted that when he first came into office he was prejudiced and thought that the clerk was getting too much salary, but as he became acquainted with the duties of the office he felt sure that the clerk was being paid no more than he should for the work that he was doing. He thought that it would be a great mistake to reduce the salary of the office.

The last speaker was Mr. Peck, and he said that as a retiring member he would like to say a few words in appreciation of the kindly sentiment expressed by Mr McLaughlin. He said he could look back with great pleasure during the past two years, and while a Councilman he had tried to act conscientiously. Regarding the salary of the clerk Mr. Peck said that by experience he had learned that a person will get cheap service when they pay cheap wages.

With Mr. Peck's remarks the Council for the present year adjourned sine die. After the meeting the members remained to shake hands and bid each other an official good-bye, and everybody parted the best of friends.

Rubber Factory Closed.

The Meyer rubber factory, of Milltown, one of the largest controlled by the Rubber Trust, is to be abandoned. The management has received instructions to send all orders on hand to the New Brunswick factory recently opened. The closing down of the factory at Milltown takes away the livelihood of nearly 400 families who live in the little town.

Twenty-five Friends Come at Once.

Mrs. Theodore Kurshals, of West Second street, was tendered a pleasant birthday surprise last Friday. About twenty-five of her friends and relatives called on her and spent an evening of sociability. The guests enjoyed some music and refreshments which added to the pleasure of the evening.

OBSERVANCE OF LENT.

REV. A. C. NICKERSON'S TIMELY THOUGHTS ON CHRISTIAN DUTY

He Says that Lent Comes to Focalize our Living and in a Way Affords a Reckoning Looking into the Eternal Life.

Rev. A. C. Nickerson preached in All Souls' church Sunday on an interesting topic, taken from Matthew 4:4—"Man shall not live by bread alone." In part he said:

"Reverence is one of the noblest traits of human nature. Evenly held it crowns a man with perfecting dignity. It moves to worship and to service of some sort for the object reverenced. This has been so from the lowest savagery to the loftiest Christian idealism. Life is in action. The motive of service causes us to feel the touch of God's hand. Something of asceticism is a part of all true religion. Wire men see the good in what the indolent, the shiftless, the vicious flinch from. Acceptance of darkness, pain, trial, as divinely sent to us, leads through all thickets of selfishness directly to the cross of Christ. Reverence looks up to God, as the man with the diseased eyes looks, so bidden by the oculist, into the dazzling light set before his face, for there his weaknesses are analyzed and their remedy discovered. Reverence also looks down to the world that it may assist in healing it of its distress. There is no true reverence which loses itself in adoration. Nothing softens us and draws us together like the consciousness of our common, human need. Men need to feel, not their superiorities, their safety from loss, their uncertain strength, but their sense of shortcoming, their brittle hold on life, their desire to repent and do better together. This law of action, of rigorous self-denial, has been a part of man's best life from the earliest times. It is in the nature of man, since that nature is made in the image of God.

"Therefore, The prompt shouldering of some cross, for the good the discipline will bring, has always been and must continue to be a prominent feature of all worthy religious living.

"There are many reasons why men believe that He who 'had not where to lay His head' was a frequent visitor to this community. The Christian is afraid of too much luxury, too great ease, too continuous enjoyment, unempered by labor.

"Lent comes to focalize our giving up, to call attention to what many will not do without special effort. It is a resolute looking into heaven, a check given to worldliness. Truly, it is only 'for a time,' but how many of us do good and live well otherwise than pasmodically?

"How many of us do not neck stated times when we shall set our houses in order? Of course there is danger of substituting the weekly devotion for what should be the unfaltering practice of the whole year. Worship may be perfunctory rites taking the place of self-examination and self-exaction. Limited sustenance for the body may cut off rather than increase the soul's supply. In churches, where the righteousness of another is substituted for our own, a habit is to be feared which delegates to the priest and the officers a function belonging to us all by virtue of our creation in the image of God. And fasting must not be set over against feasting. The effect which the relinquishment has on ourselves is alone of value.

"Put misuses of Lent aside, do we not all need to seek of our own option, a corrective? Do we not need to be more fervent religiously? More charitable toward our neighbors whose opinions differ from our own? More true to duty when fidelity means self-sacrifice? And must we not harden our souls through endurance to Christian activity? In this season we must think of life as it is, exigent, changeable and quickly sped."

Prizes for Choristers.

A number of prizes for good behavior and good attendance were awarded to the members of the choir of the Grace P. E. church at the evening service Sunday. A cross was given to Miss Louise Egan. Medals were given to seven others. Linn Adams and Reginald Chandor received the first medal. Miss Mary Collier, Blanchard Fosgate and Albert Ford were awarded the second medal. Walter Hockridge received a medal for the first month on the book prize, and Charles Shepard for the second month on the same prize.

Sent to the County Jail.

Frank Murphy and John Smith, two disreputable characters from St. Louis, were arrested by Detective Blackford last Sunday for trespassing on coal cars. As they could not pay their fine of $3, they were sent to the county jail for ten days. Chief Grant took the offenders to Elizabeth this morning.

Just D, and D.

Michael Crowley, an employee at the Pond Tool Works, was arrested on Somerset street Sunday afternoon by Marshal Hansen for being drunk and disorderly. Monday he was arraigned before Justice Crossley and was fined $15, which was paid by the young man's brother.

NEEDED IMPROVEMENTS.

CENTRAL RAILROAD TO ASSIST IN MAKING A BETTER CITY.

Railroad Embankment to be Repaired, and it is Intimated That the Rushmore Property Will be Bought by the Company

The officials of the Jersey Central Railroad Company have done much in the interest of the commuters of this city in the past and, from present appearances, it looks as if they intended to continue to do so in the future. A conference was held Saturday afternoon between General Superintendent Peddle, of the railroad company, and Councilmen Frost and Barrows, of the street committee of the Common Council.

One of the places visited was the portion of the railroad embankment that lies along East Third street, near Watching avenue. The rains have washed the earth down from the embankment over the sidewalk, and it was the wish of the committee to have a stone embankment put up there to keep the earth off the sidewalk and street. Mr. Peddle thought favorably of the plan and agreed that the company would do its part of the work and build a stone wall at once.

Another place of importance that was discussed was the property lying about Grant avenue station. According to the action of the council, it is necessary to lay acurb and stone sidewalk about the property according to grade, which by the city lines it will be necessary to change several culverts and make some changes in the general arrangement of the ground. All those Mr. Peddle agreed to do and work on them will begin at once. These changes will greatly improve the appearance of the station as well as be a great relief to citizens who have to walk in that direction in stormy weather.

While nothing was definitely stated regarding the changes to be made about the North avenue station, especially to the park on the opposite side of the track from the station, the Councilmen were given to understand that a change was coming very soon.

In conversation with a Press reporter, last Monday, regarding these changes, Councilman Barrows said that they were led to believe from what they learned at the conference, that the company intended to buy the property now occupied by Rushmore & Co.'s lumber yard and make the entire plot of land into one park. A capacious waiting shed will be erected across the tracks from the present station and connected with the main station by a subway under the tracks while fences will be put up between the tracks as at Westfield and Elizabeth.

TROLLEY ROAD SAID TO BE ASSURED FROM ELIZABETH TO WESTFIELD.

Property Owners Are Anxious for it and an Application for a Franchise is to be Made to the Proper Authorities

It now seems an established fact that the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company will have a trolley road in operation between Elizabeth and Westfield, says the New Jersey Contractor. Roselle property-owners, together with the Westfielders, are unanimously in favor of the road and the majority of Crandfordites have signed the company's petition.

Very little trouble will be experienced in getting in line the dilatory property-owners, and at the next meeting of the Board of Freeholders the petition will be presented by the company.

The route of the new road is laid out as follows: Starting at Morris avenue in Elizabeth and running through Sayre street to Clinton street, then crossing some lots to Westfield avenue and out Westfield avenue to the farthest line of Westfield.

Possibly in the near future the line may connect with the Plainfield city railway. On the Elizabeth end the cars will connect with the Consolidated Traction line and passengers will be transferred. The fare is to be five cents, it is understood, and if this plan is carried out passengers may board a car at the Staten Island ferry and ride to Westfield with but one change of cars for five cents. If the line is connected to the Plainfield line the fare will be double to this city.

As the Westfield and Elizabeth tracks are to be laid in Elizabeth and townships it will be necessary to secure the consent of common council and the respective township committees.

This new road will be laid in a first-class manner and the cars will be the best of their kind. The projectors of the scheme are well-known in the state, the capital stock is $200,000, and the officers are Chandler W. Riker, Newark, President; Adrain B. Riker, Vice-President and Treasurer; Edwin W. Hine, Secretary.

Randolph Marsh, of Plainfield avenue, is arranging for a trip to Hartford, Conn. He expects to leave town on Thursday and will be gone a fortnight.

GIFT OF THE GOOD BOOK.

A PRESENTATION MADE TO TRINITY REFORMED SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The Bible Given by Mrs. Lydia Beach in Memory of Her Late Husband—Received Appropriately by Mr. Anthony.

For a long time past the officers and members of Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school have felt the need of a suitable Bible to be used in the school, and when it was learned that they were to receive one as a present there was a deep feeling of appreciation.

The presentation took place Sunday afternoon after the session of the Sunday-school. All of the teachers, officers and members adjourned to the main part of the church, where the exercises were held.

The opening exercises consisted of a prayer by the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, and Scripture reading by Superintendent E. E. Anthony of the Sunday-school. Mr. Schenck then presented the Bible on behalf of Mrs. Lydia Beach, wife of the late Joseph Beach, in whose memory it was given. The pastor spoke somewhat as follows:

"One of the signs of the times is the privilege of seeing people interested in God's Word. We meet in the world all classes of men who profess not to believe the Bible. I thank God for the Y. M. C. A., the Christian Endeavor Society and the Sunday-school, because their aim is to teach and preach the Word as it is given. I am glad to note an increasing love on the part of all for the Bible.

"I prefer to call the Sunday-school a Bible school for it is a place where we come to study the Word as it is revealed and it is eminently proper that the Bible should have a prominent place.

"Last August it pleased God to take from our midst a man with a beautiful Christian character; one who was devoted to God and His Word. Mr. Beech had a peculiar love for the Bible, and when Mrs. Beech expressed her desire to present a Bible to some school, I suggested that she present it to our school. She readily gave her consent and I now take great pleasure in presenting to this school this very handsome Bible. We shall think of the donor and of the devotion of the departed for the Word and we shall cherish his memory in whose name it is given."

Superintendent Anthony accepted the Bible for the school and made a few remarks as follows:

"There is one thing which we have reason to be thankful for, and that is the great blessings conferred upon this church by Godly men and women. It is an incentive to the young. We have seen the sweet and childish faith of those who loved God and we shall cherish their memory always for what they were to us.

"The life of the late Elder Field and Mr. Beech, with their shining faces and their hearts filled with love for God. The Holy Word was given to the people for comfort and help and what could be more fitting than such a present to our Sunday-school. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of the school when I say that we shall always remember the donor and the memory of the departed."

The exercises closed with the singing of "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow," and the pronouncing of the benediction by the pastor.

The Bible is a large one and is very handsomely bound. It will be placed on the desk in the Sunday-school room where it is needed. On the first leaf of the Bible is inscribed these words: "Presented to the Sunday-school of the Trinity Reformed church by Mrs. Lydia Beach, in memory of her husband, Joseph Beach, March 7th, 1897."

RELIGIOUS WORK IN BULGARIA

Thirty-eight Years of Constant Work Has Had a Good Effect.

The cozy and pretty little Monroe Avenue chapel was filled with a large and appreciative audience last Sunday evening to an interesting missionary address by Miss Rhoda Pavleya, a missionary in Bulgaria and Macedonia. James McGee presided, and after a brief service of song the speaker was introduced as one who had spent ten years in Macedonia and was in this country taking up a course of medicine.

She said that thirty-eight years ago missionaries first found their way into Macedonia, holding meetings in inns and taverns. Finally they were invited into the homes of the people. Later the missionaries were persecuted; boys and men would spit at them and drive them from the streets with sticks and stones; the priests collected up all the Bibles and religious tracts and burned them.

The speaker said that she graduated from a girls' school in 1885 and was then called away from Macedonia. Now 2,000 people are receiving religious training in Sunday schools.

Named After McKinley.

The two sons of Caspar and Annie Schroepfer, of Park avenue, were christened by Rev. E. M. Hodman at the afternoon service Sunday in the Grace P. E. church. Their names were Conrad Francis Henry and William McKinley Schroepfer.

GERMANS ARE SOCIABLE.

GESANG AND TURN VEREIN ARRANGING FOR FUTURE EVENTS.

Exhibition by the Turning Section to be Followed by a Family Gathering—Children to be Given an Outing.

The officers and members of the Gesang and Turn Verein have for some time been considering methods whereby a greater interest could be awakened, and they have arranged several events which will tend to accomplish this purpose. The first event will occur on Easter Monday, when an exhibition by the Turning section will be given and the Singing section will render a programme of music. The affair will close with a dance and admission will only be by invitation.

The next will be given on the last Sunday in April, when there will be a family gathering for the members and their wives. The committee in charge will arrange a programme and each member will be expected to contribute in some way or other to the enjoyment of the event. This has been arranged so that the families may become better acquainted and thus interest themselves in the work.

The last and one of the most important events will take place early in the spring when the children of the Turning section will hold an outing for educational purposes. For some time past those in charge of the society have felt that the younger members should become interested in the work of the society and this method has been suggested by Henry Haurand. The idea is to take the young people to some historic point of interest and give them an object lesson which will be indelibly impressed on their minds. The first outing will probably be to Washington Rock and Wetumpka Falls. A competent person will chaperone the party and tell the young people all that is of interest in a historical way about these two places. The rest of the day will be devoted to playing games, and a feature of the affair will be the refreshments which will be desirable.

There are now twenty members of the younger division of the Turning section and new members are constantly coming in. If the above outing is a success they will be given every month.

A New Book by a Plainfield Writer.

There has come into our hands a new book, published last year by Thomas Y. Crowell & Company, of Boston, entitled "The Victory of Eary Gardner," the author of which is Miss Imogen Clark, of Rockview avenue. The book is well worth the reading. There are pleasant descriptions of moor and sea, close analysis of the character of the homely hero who thought himself unworthy to be called a hero, and an uplifting influence in the honest endeavor of a soul struggling after truth and God, whose result is conscious victory.

Happy Day For Trinity.

At the communion service in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning the hearts of Pastor Schenck and his people were full of gratitude and praise to God for an accession to the church of twelve persons, eight by letter from other churches and four on confession of Christ as their Lord, four, two of the latter being young men, and two young ladies, all belonging to the Sunday-school of the church.

An Approaching Nuptual Event.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Alexander, of Rutland, Vt., have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Susie Lena Alexander, and William Symons, of this city. The wedding will take place Wednesday evening, March 24th, at the home of the bride's parents, 23 Melrose avenue, Rutland. Mr. and Mrs. Symons will be at home, 406 East Third street, Friday evening, March 26.

Helping to Build a Church.

A meeting of Miantonomoh Tribe, Red Men, was held Friday evening. One proposition was favorably acted upon and another one received. At the request of the Tribe in Sinclair, Pa., the tribe made a contribution towards the rebuilding of a delapidated church in that town. The meeting was followed by an entertainment by Thomas Schaefer on his phonograph.

Evening of Music and Reading.

An evening of music and readings will be given at the Plainfield M. E. church for the benefit of the Ladies' Aid Society, on Friday evening, March 19th, in Vincent chapel. Miss Allen, of Hackettstown, will be the reader; Mrs. Collier will be the soloist; Charles Lewis, basso; Miss May Whitney, Miss Livinia French, pianists; and Clarence Mills, violinists.

Borough School Election.

The annual school election in the borough will be held on Tuesday, March 16th, at which time three school trustees will be chosen and the usual matters will be voted for.

Business College to Move.

The Plainfield Business College has rented the top floor of the new City National Bank building and will take possession on April 1st.

WAS HIBBINS A TOOL?

MRS. FRANCISCO INSISTS THAT HE IS VERY MUCH TO BLAME.

Hibbins Asserts That He Did Know For What Purpose Mrs. Noble Went to Newark—Mr. Hibbins is in Custody.

A general topic of conversation in the west end of the city is the arrest and charge made against John E Bisburg, implicating him in causing the death of Mrs. May Noble. Bisburg is well known in the Fourth ward. His wife died about a year ago.

One surprise to the Newark officers was Mrs. Francisco's statements regarding Robbert Hibbins's connection with the affair. She denounced Hibbins for having said that he had been used as a "tool" by Risburg. Hibbins, she declared, knew that Mrs. Noble was coming from Plainfield, where, as has been published, both men are employed by the Potter Printing Press Company. Hibbins, she says, knew that he was to escort Mrs. Noble, but whether Hibbins made the arrangements to have Mrs. Noble taken to Mrs. Francisco's house neither of the officers will now admit.

After Mrs. Noble's death, Hibbins, according to Mrs. Francisco, took a gold watch and chain which had belonged to the deceased and put them into his pocket. When he left the house she said the jewelry went with him. Before concluding her story Mrs. Francisco became very nervous. She persisted in her statements that if Mrs. Noble had not misrepresented some things to her, all trouble would have been avoided, and the crime would not have been committed.

After leaving the jail the detectives concluded that as they were in a great measure responsible for Hibbins being given his liberty, and fearing that he might leave the State if he learned that they had an idea of what Mrs. Francisco had imparted, they quickly agreed that if, for no other reason than for their own protection, Hibbins should be again made prisoner. They went at once to his home, 49 Arlington street, where they found him. Hibbins was not told why he had been arrested a second time until he reached police headquarters. There he was questioned only regarding the watch and chain and he very quickly, the officers say, told where they could be found, and the detectives recovered the articles last week. The detectives learned, after recovering the watch and chain, that Risburg had given Mrs. Noble the jewelry and $5 last Friday, shortly before her departure from Plainfield. The chain belonged to Risburg's wife, who died some time ago.

CYCLERS WON THE GAME

DEFEATED THE POND TOOL WORKS CRACKS AT BOWLING.

Large Number of Spectators Attracted to Witness the Game by the Spirit of Rivalry Between the Teams—Individual Scores.

There was bowling in all its glory on the East Second street alleys, last Friday and there was an unusually large number of spectators present who had been attracted there by the announcement that the Cleveland Cyclers were to compete in the first of a series of games with the Pond Tool Works employe experts. Both teams had "coachers," and there were also many "rooters," but everybody was good natured and the contest went along without special incident. The Cleveland Cyclers started the ball rolling and kept it up all through the game, and at the close their score was 1325 to their competitors 1280. The individual scores are as follows:

CYCLERS.		PONDS.
Overbaugh, H.	141	Millington	119
Bandy	113	Wilcox	132
Babcock	143	Brown	146
Bandy, H.	116	Hall	148
Lucht	116	Malcolm	111
Overbaugh, W.	126	Shepherd	140
Bowden	132	Gaskell	124
Sutphen	132	Carty	99
Young	137	Muir	161
Tunis	172	Leland	199
	1325		1280

Speaker Unable to be Present.

Dr. Rosella Hall was announced to lecture in Monroe Avenue chapel last Sunday, but she was unable to be present. A letter was received from her and read, stating that one of her children had received a severe scalp wound and another one was very ill. Dr. Hall had also expected to speak in Vincent chapel on Thursday evening of this week, but whether or not she will be able to fill the engagement is not known. She is president of the Medical Department of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and is spoken of as a fluent talker.

Park Club Bowling Tournament.

The individual bowling tournament at the Park Club has come to an end after several months duration. Many exciting games were rolled and while some of the members of the club did not take much interest in the tournament, there were many that did and the competition was an exciting one. The tournament was won by F. O. Ellis, one of the regular bowling team of the club. Of the eighteen games he had to roll, he won fourteen and made an average of 181 in all the games he rolled, which is an exceedingly good one.

A WHITE WING AT WORK

WIDE AWAKE NEW BRUNSWICK WOMEN HIRE A STREET CLEANER.

Members of the City Improvement Society to Persevere in Spite of Jibbs and Taunts—Thirty Days Trial to be Given.

The City Improvement Society, an organization of New Brunswick society women, is sparing no effort to make the town better and cleaner. Mrs. Williamson, wife of the Mayor, is president and is backed by the wives of W. R. Duryee, Charles Hart, Samuel Long, D. D. Williamson, Mrs. M. B. Hutton, with Mrs. Janeway, the Misses Booram, Hill, Atkinson, Anable, Williamson and about fifty others. The regular monthly meeting was held yesterday.

The society recently decided to employ a man to clean up the streets daily for one month. He picks up every piece of paper and rubbish he can find.

The movement was started in order that the effect of having cleaner streets may be felt by the public and that eventually contributions may be secured to continue the work. Thus men will be hired by the year.

Recently the society placed green cans at various places throughout the city, where waste paper might be thrown. Local wits declared that cuspidors on every corner and mats at street crossings would be the next reform, but the ladies persevered.

Last spring a man was engaged for a month to keep one street clean. So favorable an impression was created that ever since the residents of that street have continued the work.

CHRIST'S ESTIMATE.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck's Sermon in the Series on "The Bible in the Crucible."

In the Trinity Reformed church last Sunday the pastor preached on "Christ's Estimate of the Old Testament," this being the third of the series of sermons on the general subject, "The Bible in the Crucible." The text was John, 10-35, "And the Scripture Cannot be Broken." He spoke in part as follows:

"It is interesting to notice what was Christ's opinion of the Old Testament, its inspiration, its authenticity, its genuineness. All Christians trust Him and His attitude toward any question is sufficient to determine the position of His disciple. What was our Lord's testimony to the Old Testament Scriptures; what was His opinion of them; how did He view them; how did He quote them; what did He think of the very word and letter of Scripture; what use did He make of them, and what reliance did He put upon them? What we think of those Scriptures may amount to little, but what Christ thinks amounts to a great deal. Follow Jesus in the days of His flesh. With what grave and tender respect He holds in His hands the 'volume of the book,' to quote all its parts and to point out its least verses. A word, a single word has for Him, whether of a song or a historical book, the authority of a law. 'It is written.' That was the arbiter of all questions, the silencer of all objections. There was no disposition on His part to go behind the returns and question the validity of the utterance. With confident submission He received all the Scriptures without disputing their sacred canon. From His cradle to His tomb, and from His resurrection from the tomb to His disappearance in the clouds; in the desert, in the temple, in the synagogue, it is the Bible, it is ever the Bible; it is Moses, the Psalms and the Prophets He quotes, explains and expounds. Not only was our Lord's endorsement of the Old Testament general; it was particular also. He employs special verses and words, incidents and illustrations, with which to confound the objections of Pharisees and Sadducees, and instruct His disciples. Even in the agony of death on the Cross He gives testimony to the word of the Psalmist that 'the Scripture might be fulfilled.' Moreover, those miracles which some irreverent critics discredit, He endorsed as facts. The miracles of the creation of man and woman; of the deluge; of the destruction of Sodom; of the exodus; of the brazen serpent; of Elijah and Elisha, and of Jonah in the preservation of the conversion of the people of Ninevah, our Lord confirmed as actual occurrences. He adds His testimony to the permanence of those Scriptures. 'Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law.' 'The Scriptures cannot be broken.'"

Man's Duty to Man.

Rev. C. E. Herring preached a very strong sermon last Sunday at the First Presbyterian church on the subject of "Man's Duty to Man." The speaker said that nowadays there was a great deal of plotting among men, and sometimes on the part of professing Christians who resort to all sorts of methods to get money from people who cannot afford to pay it. Mr. Herring held that it is the duty of man to help his brother man, even though he is not as rich.

TALK OF A JUDICIAL CHANGE.

A stir has been caused in legal circles by the report that a move is afoot among certain influential Republicans to cause the removal of Supreme Court Justice Job H. Lippincott from the Hudson county circuit to Union county. The plan was arranged, it is rumored, in the interests of Supreme Court Justice Gilbert Collins, who was appointed Justice Magie's, now Chief Justice, successor. Justice Lippincott is a Democrat. Mr. Collins is a Republican of wide influence. Incidentally there are several desirable appointments which will go to Republicans in the event of Justice Lippincott's transfer and Mr. Collins' appointment to his bench. Justice Lippincott was appointed a judge in 1888 to serve in Hudson county. When former Justice Werts was nominated and elected Governor, he appointed Justice Lippincott to fill the vacancy caused by his election. Since that time Justice Lippincott has presided over the Hudson County Court, and is said to enjoy the confidence and respect of the legal fraternity, irrespective of political beliefs, to a degree that is hardly surpassed by the terror and hatred offenders have of him. Justice Collins, it is said, has remarked that he prefers the Union County Court because of the less arduous duties it will impose. Lawyers and politicians are awaiting developements with interest.

THE BURGLARIES.

It is not to be wondered at that in this fair suburban section those of a timid temperament should feel an uneasiness, in view of the numerous and daring raids that are being committed by a gang of desperadoes whose proper idea of the world should be from behind grated doors and windows where striped suits have been, and will continue to late, be the most popular style of attire. The numerous burglaries that have been reported every morning for several weeks past seem to be the work of an organized band who go at their nefarious invasions so systematically that they have as yet evaded detection and arrest—principally, no doubt, because they select fields for operation where there is but little police protection.

AN EXCISE BOARD.

A few days ago a prominent Plainfield man in speaking about the unpleasant task which the city council has to perform each year in dealing with the licenses said that he thought that when the city passes into the second-class the job would be taken away from the city fathers. It seems that with second-class cities an excise board is provided for, whose purpose is to do nothing else but treat with licenses. They are elected for that one purpose and the people could have the say as to whether there should be "no" license or license men, and it would remove all doubt on the subject.

BUT LITTLE DEMOCRATIC MONEY.

According to Col. Price, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, the Democratic party machine went through the national campaign last fall on $2,600—all the money at the committee's command. This means little more than an average of $100 for each county in the State. Of the amount subscribed, Senator Smith gave $1,000 and the rest was the result of more than 600 appeals to Democrats all over the State. According to Col. Price, the Republicans burned more money in red fire in a single demonstration in New York than the Democrats had in the whole campaign in New Jersey.

A NEWSPAPER CHANGE.

The New Brunswick Fredonian has been undergoing frequent changes of management of late, and the latest to try a hand at making a successful newspaper is W. Scott Snyder, who acted as assistant secretary to the Republican State Committee last fall. In the sense of providing a lively newspaper the Fredonian has been a success for the past year, but as a paying enterprise it is said to be a woefully failure.

GOOD ROADS CHEAPER.

The New Brunswick Home News calls attention to the fact that it now costs but 50 cents per square yard for macadam road building, while a few years ago the cost of such roads was $1.07 per square yard.

EVIDENCE OF HARD TIMES.

Hard times are illustrated by the fact that the annual consumption of coffee per head fell to 8.04 last year from 9.22 in the preceeding year in the United States.

THE LEGISLATURE.

It is predicted that the Legislature will adjourn in about three weeks There is a lot of important business yet to be transacted, and the presumption is that night and day sessions will be held by each house beginning this week. This must be done if the Legislature intends to get through its business in that time. All the vital questions of the session are still pending, and, as most of them are of a controversial character, there is an outlook for much exciting debate. Foremost among those questions are the proposed constitutional amendments, the Jersey City equal taxation bills, the Railroad Commission bill, the proposition for the creation of a jury commission in each county, the Bicycle Baggage, Marriage License and Salary Reduction bills, the drafting of a new appropriation law for the next fiscal year and the anti-trust bills.

WHAT WILL BE THE RESULT?

In view of the fact that the borough now has a Democratic mayor and a Republican council, the question naturally arises, "What will be the result?" Some people have said that the hands of the Mayor will be tied and that he will of necessity have to stand by the decision of the council. This is not altogether true. It must be remembered that some of the present councilmen voted for Mr. Wilson, and if that is the case, what is there to prevent them from voting with him in councilmanic matters. It only requires 3 votes with that of the Mayor to decide a question, and it is believed that Mayor Wilson will have no trouble in getting three of the councilmen to stand by him.

ENCOURAGING TO DEMOCRATS.

The township elections throughout this particular section, as the reports published in the news columns of today's Paper show, are decidedly in favor of the Democrats, for in nearly every place where there was a contest the vote ended in a victory for them. Of course, the issues were not strictly partisan, but nevertheless the general result cannot but help encourage Democrats to further activity and aggressiveness, qualities that they have been sadly in need for sometime past.

MAYOR WILSON.

To those who watched closely the drift of political sentiment in the borough after the candidates of both parties had been nominated, the election of Col. John F. Wilson as Mayor was not unexpected. The Colonel as a business man always made a success of whatever he undertook, and there is no reason why as the chief executive of the "local Canada" he should not evidence the same ripe judgment.

INDUSTRIAL HOME.

Chairman Frost, of the Council manic Alms Committee, has termed the city poor farm as the "Industrial Home." Mr. Frost believes that the name will relieve any odium that might attach itself to the place if called the "poor farm." As a matter of fact, the new name is quite appropriate inasmuch as the occupants of the place are to be made to earn a portion of the living which the city will provide for them.

THE NEW BOROUGH OFFICERS.

The new Mayor and Council of the borough will meet next Monday evening at which time the new officers will be installed and an organization will be effected. The Mayor will make his appointments at this time. The first regular meeting of the Council will be held next week, Friday evening.

Suburban Residents.

When on your way to or from the Liberty street ferry do not fail to drop in and inspect the new retail department opened by Messrs. Charles Schlesinger & Sons, at 126 and 128 Liberty street, New York. This house, which is one of the oldest and best known in the trade, was established in 1850, and owing to the pressure of a large number of their friends they have opened a retail branch so as to enable the public to buy goods by the gallon or bottle The grade of liquors kept in stock by this house is of the very best, and combined with the ease of access to the store will no doubt result in a large suburban business. Messrs. Schlesinger & Sons own and control the famous Gold Seal Rye whiskey and there is none purer or better in the market—not a headache in a barrel. Orders by mail or telephone, No. 2796 Cortland, will receive prompt attention. Cases put up of four, six, eight, or twelve bottles of assorted liquors if desired. 1 7 2m

To Devote His Whole Time to the Work.

YOUNG FRIES HELD.

FURNISHED BONDS FOR $800 TO APPEAR BEFORE GRAND JURY.

The Examination Held Before Justice Crosley Tuesday—The Little Girl's Story Could Not be Shaken at All.

The case of the State against Fries, charged with assault on Stella Maag, seven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Maag, of Jackson avenue, came up before Justice Crosley this morning at 10 o'clock. The plaintiff was represented by William DeMeza while Lawyer Williams represented the defendant. The former was assisted by his brother Judge DeMeza and the latter had the aid of Lawyer Swackhamer.

The plaintiff was heard first and Stella Maag was examined. She told a very straight story and it was almost impossible for the defense to use her testimony to help their case. The whole affair seemed to be very clear in her mind and she told every little important detail concerning it.

Two or three witnesses were called for the plaintiff, and they substantiated the original story. The defense argued their side and contended that there was an absence of evidence to hold the defendant for the Grand Jury. It was practically demonstrated that there was an attempt at assault although no harm had been done.

After hearing both sides, Justice Crosley held Fries in $800 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury. His bondsmen were N. B. Smalley and William Fries.

Rheumatism Quickly Cured.

After having been confined to the house for eleven days and paying out $25 in doctor's bills without benefit, Mr. Frank Dolson, of Salt Ste. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

THE JEWISH SACRIFICES

DR. BARNES LECTURES BEFORE THE PRIMARY TEACHERS UN ON.

The Reverend Gentleman Explained the Meaning of the Various Sacrifices—The Festivals Were Also Described by Him.

There was an unusually large attendance at the meeting of the Primary Teachers' Union held Monday afternoon. The meeting was held at 3 o'clock, at which time the members enjoyed a blackboard exercise, which is a new feature At 4 o'clock Dr. Barnes was present and gave an interesting talk on "Jewish Sacrifices."

The speaker said that the original meaning of the word sacrifice was an outward expression of reverence and faithfulness. The sacrifice under the Mosaic law was a means of grace with a sacrificial meaning. Continuing Dr. Barnes spoke in part as follows:

"There were sacrifices or offerings of four sorts. The expiatory, consisting of sin and trespass, which were for those who were out of communion with God. The sin offering was something that a man offered to God as an acknowledgment for his sin in a general sense.

"Then there was the burnt offerings, peace offerings, meat and drink offerings, which were for those who were in communion with God. For the latter class it was a sacrifice of love. The peace offering was a giving of self to God, and his love would increase as his love for God would increase. It is a source of joy to God when we are sorry for our sins. Each sacrifice or offering had a great significance and meant much to those who practiced them."

The last part of Dr. Barnes' talk was devoted to a discussion of the Jewish festivals which are so interesting. He explained as thoroughly as possible the meaning of them and told about the different festivals celebrated by Jewish people and how strict they were to observe them. The subject was divided into several parts and each one was spoken of in an entertaining way. The speaker said that there were many things that he would like to talk about but time would not permit.

At the close Mrs. Batchelor suggested a vote of thanks to Dr. Barnes for his talk and the members gave a rising vote.

The regular lesson for the afternoon was then taught by Mrs. Batchelor. The members entered into this part of the programme with zeal and earnestness. Next week the meeting will be held at 3 o'clock.

THE CHURCH ROUNDERS.

PASTOR GIBSON WANTS HIS FLOCK TO STAY WITH THEIR CHURCH.

He Says That There Are Too Many Colored People Who go From One Church to Another Whenever Anything is Going on.

At the Mt. Olive Baptist church last Sunday afternoon the pastor, Rev. Mr. Gibson, gave those present a great surprise, and it has set the members of the church and Sunday school to guessing as to what they will do.

For sometime past this church has experienced great difficulty in counting on its membership, and the cause of it has been that the members would make a circuit of the other colored churches in town whenever anything was going on to attract them. This sort of thing has been very trying to those in charge of the church, and they have been considering ways and means to put a stop to it. In consequence last Sunday Mr. Gibson startled his congregation by making a statement that the members of the church would have to decide on one thing or the other, that is, to either remain at the church or else settle at some other church of their choice. He spoke of the various members of the church going to other churches and then drifting back to their first-love. This he said would have to stop, and then he stated that he would give them one month in which to make up their minds as to what they would do.

It is generally understood that the members of this church have gone out from it and been the means of helping to start other churches, and that there are colored Baptists scattered all over town who should be identified with this church.

It is confidently believed that this new order of things will tend to bring the members together, and that they will settle down as it is thought they should.

To Kill Thistles

It is not necessary to kill all the seeds of the thistles in order to exterminate these undesirable weeds. You can so cultivate the ground that they will not thrive; and at last will disappear altogether. It might be better to kill the seeds, but we cannot do it. It would be the wisest course to destroy all the germs or seeds, of consumption, could we do so. But this cannot be done. So we must keep the tissues of the lungs, the soil, in such a condition that the germs will not thrive

BAND OF BOY ROBBERS.

EDWARD SMITH LOSES ALMOST $500 BY A BAD SON.

The Boy is Only Twelve Years Old But, Associated With a Number of Boys in This City. He Spent the Money Freely.

Last Saturday night about 9 o'clock Edward Smith, of South Plainfield, called on Chief Grant and told him that the twelve year-old boy had left home with a large sum of money. The boy had been traced to this city where he purchased a ticket for Newark. Chief Grant at once telephoned to Newark and in exactly ten minutes after doing so he received word that the boy had been caught in the Boys' Lodging House on Market street. Chief Grant sent word to hold the boy until he could go to Newark and bring him to this city. Sunday morning young Smith was brought to Plainfield and placed under arrest.

The boy was associated with Howard Whitney, James Hinkle, Irving Young, Edward Demarest, David Demarest and Cornelius McCarty, all of this city, who have been helping him spend the money which he stole from his father at odd times for the past three weeks.

It appears that young Smith found the money, which amounted to over $400, in a bureau and that he has been helping himself to it at different times. Howard Whitney handled the money as it was secured, and David Demarest spent it. The boys spent about $40 for guns and revolvers at Drier's store on West Front street. One day the boys took an excursion to Bound Brook and all enjoyed a dinner at that place. Eating seems to have been one of the features of the good times which the boys had, for they admitted to having spent lots of money for dinners. In all there is about $75 accounted for and the balance, about $400, cannot be found. Young Smith says that he lost some of the money but he don't know just where.

Monday morning all the boys were brought before Justice Nash when an examination was held. James Hinkle, Irving Young, Edward Demarest and Cornelius McCarty were released as they were only held as witnesses. Howard Whitney was held as an accomplice for the things which were purchased and stored in the cellar at his home. David Demarest was also held as an accomplice for having assisted in spending the money. Thomas Smith was also held. Bail will probably be furnished and the boys will be released.

Most all of the boys come from well known and respected families and their parents feel the blow of disgrace exceedingly.

An attempt will be made to ascertain if possible where the remainder of the money has gone. As yet the boys are unable to tell of its whereabouts. The authorities are inclined to think that it has been hidden away in some secluded spot.

The boys when arrested did not seem to feel the gravity of their crime and were apparently unconcerned.

Young Smith gives no reason for going to Newark and when he was found he had no money with him He had paid five cents for his lodging.

Monday he said that he had given all his money to David Demarest and the latter hid it away. This the Demarest boy denies.

There was a cock fight at Garwood, Saturday night. The pits were dug in a cellar. Birds were there from Orange, Scotch Plains, Elizabeth, Westfield, Plainfield and Garwood. The Orange birds won six out of the nine matches.

BURGLARS AT DUNELLEN

FOUR HOUSES ENTERED AND A FIFTH ATTEMPT MADE.

Edgar Milliken's Wearing Apparel is Snatched From His Bedside While He Slept—Silverware and Money Gone.

Burglars were on the rampage at Dunellen Monday, but fortunately for the residents little of value was taken. It is evident that at least three persons were implicated in the four or five robberies committed there during the night, as footprints in the soft ground seem to indicate. Just where their operations began is not known, but it is supposed that Edgar Milliken's house on Dunellen avenue was the first house entered, by using a putty knife or some other sharp tool, running it between the two sashes in a front parlor window.

In the morning the first intimation the family had of the robbery was when Mr. Milliken arose and looked around for his clothes, which he always had on a chair near the foot of the bed. After a hasty search the clothes were found in the hallway at the foot of the front stairs. The pockets had been turned inside out, and papers and trinkets strewn about on the floor. From the dining room were taken four pieces of silverware marked "M. W. B.," and a lot of plated ware had been bent and tarnished.

William B. Mead's house was also broken into in the same manner, but here the family was packed up ready for removal, so nothing of value was taken.

Frank L. Reed's house on Dunellen avenue was entered and a pocket book belonging to his wife, with a little change in it, was taken. A front parlor window was found wide open when the family arose this morning.

The robbers had evidently intended to "crack" Engineer Dunham's house, too, for at two o'clock some one was heard prowling about the premises. Mr. Dunham had been out to a meeting of the Forresters and was not yet asleep. He jumped up and grasping his revolver made a quiet tour of the house. It was found that one of the front windows had been tampered with and an effort had been made to spring the catch on the parlor window, but without success.

Mrs. Dunham told a Press representative this morning that she saw two suspicious looking but fairly well-dressed men loitering in the neighborhood during Monday, but she paid no particular attention to them.

From the reports gleaned from the several places it seems to indicate that it was the same two or more who operated all around, and this theory is strengthened by the fact the footprints noticed about each house are of much the same.

Chief of Police Warden was notified of the robberies early in the morning, but he has no clue as yet.

The house of Charles Dieneen, conductor on drill engine No. 30, was also entered by the burglars. This Monday Mr. Dieneen found his coat and vest laying in the hallway while a silver watch that he had carried for twenty five years, was missing. The burglars also made away with a little savings bank that belonged to Mr. Dieneen's young child.

From Cripple Creek.

After the big fire in Cripple Creek, I took a very severe cold and tried many remedies without help, the cold only becoming more settled. After using three small bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, both the cough and cold left me, and in this high altitude it takes a meritorious cough remedy to do any good.—G. B. Henderson, editor Daily Advertiser. For sale by T. S. Armstrong Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

Realty Changes.

The following property transfers have been recorded in the office of the County Clerk, from February 25th to March 3d, inclusive:

Holton, North Plainfield, to Trustees of East Third Street Baptist Society of Plainfield, lot 13, block F, Astor place, $1; Harriet Markham, Plainfield, to Bound Brook Water Virginia, lot Church street, Plainfield, $2,400.

Bilious Colic.

Persons who are subject to attacks of bilious colic will be pleased to know that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and if taken as soon as the first indication of the disease appears, it will prevent the attack. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

A Picnic Social.

The Young Ladies' Missionary Society of the First Baptist church desiring to be social, have planned to give a picnic social in the parlors of the church on the evening of Tuesday, March 16th. An interesting programme will be arranged for the occasion and a general good time provided for all who attend.

Dr. Barnes' Literary Work.

Dr. C. R. Barnes, of Grove street, is compiling a new Bible dictionary which will make its appearance before a great while. He is also writing a series of articles for a New York paper on an important Bible topic.

A CLEVER SNEAK THIEF.

ASSUMED TO ENGAGE BOARD BUT ONLY TO PLY HIS TRADE.

He Was of Dusky Hue and After Obtaining a Room at William Fisher's He Departed With Clothes and Jewelry.

A colored adventurer, supplied with a plentiful supply of nerve, visited his brethern in this city to the sorrow of the latter, and, it is supposed, to the benefit of the wanderer. For a week the duped ones have been looking for the stranger but, as it was evident that he had left the city, they have now divulged the story of their experiences.

A week ago last Saturday afternoon a smooth-tongued colored man called at the home of William Fisher, 638 West Third street, and wanted to get board. Fisher is the sexton of the Grace P. E. church and was attending to his duties at the time. His wife was at the house, however, and showed the stranger a bedroom. He appeared very much pleased with the room and said that he would take it. He then explained to Mrs. Fisher that he had an abscess under one arm and that he would be greatly obliged if she would bring him some warm water and mutton tallow with which to dress it. Mrs. Fisher procured the required articles and left the man alone in the room. She remembered to remove her husband's gold watch to a place of safety as she left. After a time the boarder returned to Mrs. Fisher, thanked her, reiterated his statements about the excellence of the room and departed, promising to return at about 5:30 o'clock. They have not seen him since although Fisher, who is a special officer, has been very anxious to do so.

After the stranger had gone, Mrs. Fisher investigated and found that the would-be boarder had collected more than his share of the articles in the room. Her silver watch was gone as were two rings and a pearl stick pin. But the saddest blow to Fisher was the loss of his best trousers, which the colored individual had evidently taken a fancy to and appropriated.

The stranger was a colored man of light complexion, and with a small moustache. He wore a light serge suit and a black derby. He looked well except for his hat which was evidently of a former generation.

An investigation was started and it was learned that the same man had visited the houses of Wm. Mayhew and Spencer Conway on West Fourth street, and at the latter place tried to work the same little scheme that he did at the home of Fisher. Conway put him in a room where all the valuables were stowed away under lock and key and he departed no richer than he came, promising to return at 5:30 o'clock to occupy the room. As in the other case, they are looking for him still.

CLAMORING FOR SWIFTER JUSTICE.

Somerset County Taxpayers Fretting Under Expense of Murder Trials.

With two other murderers to try and two charged with atrocious assault with intent to kill, Somerset county's expenses this year will be heavy. The farmers are clamoring for swifter justice and there have been threats of taking matters into their own hands. Electric lights have been placed on the four sides of the jail at Somerville to make it more difficult for the friends of the prisoners to communicate with them. Clawson, who has been so indifferent to his fate since his arrest, has maintained this spirit. Johnson, who is a local preacher, reads his Bible daily. Joseph Chabbi, who stabbed his wife to death, has periods of remorse, when he throws himself upon the floor and breaks forth into lamentations. The murderers were startled Monday morning to find on the wall opposite their cells in large black letters the motto, "In God We Trust." It was done by one of the prisoners, who had been painting about the jail. It had a grim significance which made it all the more emphatic.

Ice House Three-Quarters Full.

As there is very little prospects of another crop of ice this winter, the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company is having the big ice house near Wilson's pond at Washingtonville roofed over. The ice house is now about three fourths full of ice, about 4,500 tons in all. The work of roofing over the big structure has commenced and will be completed in a few days.

Post Consolidation to be Settled.

Major Anderson Post, No. 100, G. A. R., will meet on Saturday evening of this week at which time the members will decide as to whether they will disband and join Post No. 73. The chances are that the above action will be taken as almost every member is in favor of the consolidation.

March April May

The months for renewing and healing in the physical world.

The months for new life, new energy, new blood in men and women.

The months when our need of help from medicine is greater than at any other time of year.

The months when Hood's Sarsaparilla will do us the most good because we are all now especially susceptible to benefit from this medicine.

The months when Hood's Sarsaparilla is taken by the millions because they have found that it is the medicine which does them good.

The months when you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it will purify, vitalize and enrich your blood, and put you in good condition to resist the debilitating effects of changeable, warmer weather. Try it now.

Satisfied with Hood's.

"For several years I have taken two or three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla every spring for eradicating the humors in the blood and for building up the system generally. My experience with Hood's Sarsaparilla has been very satisfactory." GEO. FRANZ, care of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

Great Blood Purifier.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla is our family physician and I believe it needs no recommendation. Wherever it has once been used there can be no substitute for it, as a blood purifier." MISS C. A. ELLIOTT, Grinnell, Iowa.

Builds Up the System.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for weakness with which I was a sufferer in the spring, and I have found it the best medicine to create an appetite and build up the strength that I have ever taken, and I recommend it highly." J. F. WARD, Labelle, Ohio.

Keeps the Stomach in Order.

I keep Sarsaparilla in the house all the time and regard it as the best spring medicine I can find. It has proved beneficial in keeping my stomach in order, and since I began taking it I can eat anything I wish." H. BROWN, Sharborn, Mass.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The pages in the Supreme Court of the United States are required to wear knickerbockers. Three of the pages are nearly full-grown men, and when on the street they always wear long trousers. The short knickerbockers are known as their official trousers, and are only worn when the Supreme Court is in session. Pages of the court receive a salary of $90 a month. This is more than either the Senate or the House pages get, their allowance being only $75 a month during the session of Congress. As Congress the pages are not restricted to any particular kind of trousers, but are privileged to dress as their fancy dictates.

Mr. John Addison Porter, of Pomfret, Connecticut, and formerly editor-in-chief of the Hartford Post, is to occupy, under President McKinley, the important and highly exacting office of private secretary to the nation's chief executive. Mr. Porter is the eldest son of the late Addison Porter, long time dean of the Sheffield Scientific School of New Haven, and Josephine Earl Sheffield, a daughter of the founder of that institution and was born in New Haven forty years ago. After his graduation from Yale, where he was distinguished in the classics, Mr. Porter studied law under distinguished auspices at Cleveland, Ohio, but subsequently left the legal profession for that of journalism. His newspaper experience, covering a period of nineteen years, has embraced service in various capacities with the New Haven Palladium, Hartford Courant, New York Observer, and New York Tribune. He has also been a frequent contributor to the leading magazines.

Representative Cooper of Wisconsin is known as the champion pie eater of Congress. His friends say he can eat more pie at one time than any other man in Congress. Whenever the Congressman's digestive organs are in good working order he can usually be seen at the Senate restaurant partaking of two or three pieces of Page's choice pie. Pumpkin pie, "the kind that mother used to make," appeals particularly to the palate of the Badger State Congressman. Frequently he has been known to eat two pieces of this special kind, and then glance about the counter to see if there was not another variety that he might select.

All but one of the Presidents inaugurated since the election of Abraham Lincoln in the year 1860 had experience in war before their election. Mr Lincoln was Captain of a company raised for the Black Hawk war, and Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Harrison and McKinley were engaged in the war for the Union. The only man inaugurated since the period spoken of who never carried a gun in his country's service is Mr. Cleveland. Andrew Johnson, who became President after Mr. Lincoln was slain, had previously been military Governor of Tennessee; and Mr. Arthur, who became President after Mr. Garfield was slain, had honorably served his state during the war as a Quartermaster-General and an Inspector-General, with the rank of Brigadier.

Mr. Dewey, U. S. N., the Arctic explorer, told some interesting things of the polar regions at a recent public dinner. He said he could talk of only one thing, and then laid hold of the pole. Picturing a man standing over the North Pole, he said that this person would have but one point to his compass, and that would be south. He could not move except south. Time would be unknown to him. He would know no east or west. His experiences of Nansen and himself during the last three years, he said, had shown that the ideal party to discover the pole must consist of only two or three persons. The old idea of a large party must be abandoned, as modern methods the pole could be reached without any of the horrors of the Franklin and Greely expeditions. He considered that the man who makes the discovery will rank with Columbus. The speediest way to what good it would be to such a man to discover the pol would be like asking what good we the wreath at the Olympian game It would be a tribute to endurance, energy, persistence, the conquering of obstacles. It would be the peerless prize of the day, and should go to an American. It had become possible, with all the recent light on the subject, he said, for him to advise and propose within the last month a practical plan to get there. There were only 260 miles beyond the highest point already reached to be traversed. He thought the only way to reach the pole would be to follow up Greenland as it reaches toward the pole. A certain tribe of Eskimos there could be relied upon to furnish assistance. A fund of $150,000 would keep such a small party as he advised for ten years working steadily away.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP

NORDICA'S AGE RENDERS PHYSICAL CULTURE NECESSARY.

Guilbert's Modesty is Not Displayed in Her Interviews—Viola Allen Gives a Glimpse Behind the Scenes—Bernhard and the Legion of Honor.

To preserve her slimness, Madame Nordica is continually sparring with a stout, inflatable bag, which cannot resent any amount of punching. Miss Emma Eames goes in for gymnastics Another well known operatic singer at present a statuesque creature, but who has had distinct warnings of a possible, calamity in the shape of embonpoint, has taken to "bowling." In addition, all these women have regularly to undergo massge.

In an interview, just before she sailed for Europe, Yvette Guilbert said: "For several years past I have been explaining to people why I don't go on the stage. 'Why don't you act?' I have been asked by the critics in Paris until I am tired of answering the question. Now I propose to try. I can do it even if I don't succeed at it at first. I could not sing six years ago as I do now. I began very modestly. One doesn't learn every thing in a day. No artist really great ever stepped on the stage who was perfect from the commencement. I may not be an actress when I commence, but I know I can become one. A year ago I thought that I should never go on the dramatic stage. I was unique, and I dreaded the risk of failure, but I feel that I can make the attempt now. My reputation is established, and I am rich. A failure can not affect me very seriously now. Besides, I won't fail. I shall succeed, may be not at first, but eventually." Yvette said that in New Orleans she had for the first time enjoyed the experience of singing before an audience which was as much in sympathy with her as the audiences that listen to her in Paris. She is taking back to Europe enough money to enable her to stay in Europe and let this country lie fallow for a year. She is said to have made on this trip be tween $30,000 and $40,000. The lack of appreciation which attended her efforts did not diminish her profits They were arranged before she returned here. That is the reason they happen to be as great as they are.

Viola Allen has been writing to the New York papers about the seamy side of stage life, and the burden of her story seems to be that monotony of the dreariest sort is the curse of existence behind the scenes. On this subject she says: "If you are in a stock company your relative positions in the various plays are very much the same. Miss A. must at times during a five years' engagement get weary of being constantly proposed to or jilted by Mr. B., or Mr. B. must become most excusably tired of proposing to or being jilted by Miss A. six nights and a matinee year in and year out. I have often wondered myself how we have kept in sheer desperation, defied the author some night, and when I was proposed to, instead of consenting to marry the hero, have flatly refused him by way of variety. If I had done so it might have broken up the play, but it would have been an immense relief. Did you never have a nervous desire to say or do something that you ought not to, to laugh, when at a funeral or the like? Well, that is the way you feel sometimes during the long run of a play."

The proposal to bestow the Legion of Honor medal upon Sarah Bernhardt is bitterly opposed in some of the French papers. One writer, in reply to those who say that Mme. Bernhardt deserves a reward for her struggles in the cause of art, says that in reality the "great Sarah" has struggled, "not for her art alone, but for a hideous, turbulent, tedious, implacable and greedy notoriety. Always and everywhere, quand meme, we find her 'struggling.' By means of her hats, by means of her toilets, by means of her dogs, her negroes, her poets, the lame panthers she brings back from her travels, she is ever before us struggling." This is, of course, perfectly true, but it does not constitute a reason why an actress of genius should not be decorated.

THE FUTURE OF GRAND OPERA IN NEW YORK.

An Interesting Contribution on the Subject by Maurice Grau—John Hare Speaks of the Differences Between English and American Audiences.

Regarding the future of opera in New York, and the large salaries paid to the principals, Mr. Grau said recently: "New York is too important a musical centre to be deprived of opera even for a season. The public is exacting, perhaps too much so, being absolutely unwilling to put up with any thing but the very best. I don't think, however, that such a company as ours could be duplicated any where. The salaries of the leading artists I don't regard as extravagant, as some would have the public believe, in view of what the same artists can earn elsewhere. The salaries of most of them, it is true, have increased since their first visit to America, but in many cases these increases were provided for in contracts which were for terms of years

MAURICE GRAU.

"Mme. Melba received during the present season fully sixty per cent more salary than during her first year here; Mme. Calve, nearly double what she received during her first season; M. Plancon, double; Signor Ancona, double; Mme. Eames, nearly five times as much as we paid her at first, while Mme. Nordica last season received nearly two and one-half times what we paid her during the season she began with us. MM. de Reszke are an exception to the rule, their fixed salaries and percentages never increasing since their initial engagement; on the contrary, wonderful to relate, a change being made in the percentage in favor of the management.

Mr. John Hare, the English comedian, in a recent interview, said: The English actor finds the American audience unusually quick of response. Its applause of a jest, a merry situation, a clever line, accompanies rather than follows the mental sense; they catch its meaning almost before the line is finished. They anticipate the point rather than wait for it, and they are often ahead of the actor. But it must be humor of action and speech that they can understand. They do not seem to care for humorous dialogue that they do not thoroughly comprehend. Thus, in "The Hobby Horse" there are passages that evoked roars of laughter in London but were received here in a dead calm of silence that almost took our breath away. If anything is depressing to the comedian it is to rattle off a speech that has never failed to evoke merriment, and when he reaches the climax, to find that he alone is laughing and that a profoundly inquiring look is on the faces of the audience, as though to ask, "Well, what in the world is he laughing at?" That he ever laughs again during the evening is a marvel. One such chilling reception of his possibly best line is enough to take all the spirit out of him, to make him dread the next speech of a similar kind that may be coming his way. "The English actor on the New York Stage" notices one marked difference between London and New York. I am told, in the manner in which popular disapproval of a play is shown. I have been so kindly treated that I have not had personal experience of a flat-out-and-out failure, which is hissed, but I know that in London we sometimes have a most obstreperous element present, who will not only hiss a play roundly, but will make it manifest beyond misunderstood that they want it stopped, then and there. And, not satisfied with hissing the play, they will even demand the author, and when they get him out, hiss him, too. Here, I am told, the audience show their displeasure in profound silence, or mock laughter; that, instead of hissing a poor play, they will pick up their wraps and leave the theatre. With us they want the play taken off; here they take themselves off. I believe, which is certainly much more dignified and self-respecting, an example of good manners that might well be copied.

REDJACKET'S MEDAL.

PRESENTED BY WASHINGTON TO THE WARRIOR AND PROPHET.

It Was Often Pawned for Firewater but Always Redeemed, and at Last Became the Possession of Gen. Parker, the Last Sachem of the Six Nations.

The silver medal which Washington gave to Red Jacket in 1792 was last the property of General Ely S. Parker, one of Grant's aids in the war for the Union, who was the last sachem of the Six Nations.

In 1792 President Washington called a council of Indian sachems to meet him in Philadelphia. About fifty of the most prominent chiefs responded. Washington desired to bring about an improvement in the moral and social conditions of the Indian; the red men desired to have their relations to the white men's government defined; neither object was attained; but the gathering was nevertheless one of importance. The conference was prolonged for over six weeks, the Indians taking great time to weigh every utterance of the white men. At the close, Washington gave to Red Jacket—who had been eminent as warrior and prophet, who was the spokesman of all the chiefs, and who was chosen as the bearer of the President's peace message to the Indians—this medal and a pipe made after the Indian fashion in the form of a tomahawk.

The pipe Red Jacket smoked to the end of his life, but the medal he pawned time and again as security for his debts for firewater at various barrooms, and time and again it was redeemed. Notwithstanding Red Jacket's attachment to his pipe, no one knows where that is; but his medal, after many vicissitudes of ownership, fell into the possession of General Parker. It is silver, seven by five inches; on its face an Indian is receiving from a white man the pipe of peace, while in the background a man is plowing; below are the figures in the inscription, "George Washington, President. 1792." On the reverse is the shield of the United States on the breast of a spread eagle, in one of those talons is a bunch of arrows, in the other an olive branch, Red Jacket has always given the credit to the Britishers because at the time of the Seneca chief's alliance with the British in the evolution he wore a military red coat which an officer had given him. His native name was Sagoyewatha, meaning "He who keeps them awake." He was at physically brave, though a great leader in war. He was very proud of the Washington medal, and when Lafayette visited him in 1825 he wore the medal, and he owned it when he died in 1830.—Boston Transcript.

No Bottomless Lakes.

The deepest body of fresh water in America is Crater Lake, Oregon. Only one lake in the world, Lake Baikal, exceeds it in depth, and is only 400 feet deeper. Until recently it was asserted Crater Lake was bottomless, but soundings have shown its greatest epth to be 2,000 feet. It is five miles n diameter, nearly circular and occues the crater of an extinct volcano.

No fish have ever been known to exst in Crater Lake. There are very few places in the lake where the depth less than 1,000 feet, and no lake on he western hemisphere approaches ts.

It is no wonder, then, that Crater ake was supposed to be bottomless. owever, the truth is that all rates er 150 feet possess a similar reputaon. Any body of water that is deeper than the length of the longest eling line is sure to lack a factor in he popular belief.

There is no data on which to base a ness as to the bottom temperature of rater Lake, but the supposition is at it will be very little above freezing. The temperature of the ocean remains at about 40 degrees Fahrenheit ll the year round, even in the tropics. evertheless, some volcanic heat may et remain to warm the waters of rater Lake.—Chicago News.

Frozen Milk.

European papers say that frozen ilk is becoming very popular. It is rozen in different-sized bricks, and in ils way its purity and freshness are preserved. The Danish Government intends to increase the trade at an annual outlay of £10,000, and in Copenagen, the capital of Denmark, a company has been formed and arrangements have been completed for the rebar export of frozen milk. The necessary plant has been erected, and contracts have been made already for the slivery of 110,000 pounds a week, hich will be sent to all parts of the orld in bricks like ice.

THE MUTOSCOPE.

THE LATEST THING IN LIGHTNING PHOTOGRAPHY.

A Mechanism Which Takes a Series of Photographs at a Rate Varying from Two Thousand Four Hundred to Six Thousand Per Minute.

[From the New York Journal.]

The fine picture by the mutoscope is pretty much like that seen in other scopes, except that as a matter of pressing a button and letting the scope do the rest. You work your own passage in the mutoscope by simply turning a crank. If you are enthralled with any particular pose of any particular picture you can stop the crank and study it. It is here that the mutoscope differs from its fellows in the pictorial machinesy field.

It is operated by hand and requires no motor, battery or attendant. It represents views six inches in length by four inches in height, or about the size of a cabinet photograph, and runs as smoothly and steadily that each picture appears to be a part of one continuous photograph of a scene, with every gesture and movement faithfully reproduced as in life.

The perfection attained by the mutoscope is due in no small degree to the special mechanism employed in photographing the subjects. With this mechanism successive photographs of subjects in motion are taken upon a band of film at the rate of 2,400 per minute. A much higher rate of speed—as great as 100 per second, or 6,000 per minute—can be attained by this mechanism if the motion of the subject to be photographed is so rapid as to demand it.

Photographic prints from the series of pictures thus obtained are mounted in consecutive order around the cylinder, standing out like the leaves of a book.

When this cylinder is slowly revolved, the picture cards being held back by a stop, and allowed to snap past the eye one by one, as one thumbs the leaves of a book, an apparently moving picture is the result, and it is difficult to realize that the picture is not endowed with life.

By far the most amusing feature of the mutoscope, if not the most instructive, is the capacity for reversing the usual order of things. Take, for instance, the curve at Union Square at the noon hour, in the natural order of things, crowds are seen hurrying to and fro. Vehicles of every description are moving in all directions. In the distance can be seen the Lincoln Monument, before which the cars of a cross town line are seen rounding the curve into the square, while on the crossing, between the tracks, paces one of New York's "finest," ever on the alert to assist pedestrians and prevent accident.

An old gray-headed man gives a hop, skip and jump backward across the track, frantically clutching his hat. A bevy of women approach backward, of course, and a sphinx-like policeman, also meandering backward, conveys them majestically across the track.

A car stops and two young women walking along the crossing gather their skirts about them, walk backward up the steps and chamber aboard, doing everything in a reverse way that is inexpressibly comic.

A newsboy with an armful of papers is stopped by a benevolent looking old gentleman, who saunters up with a backward saunter, shakes hands with the lad a paper, and then carefully abstracts a penny from the little fellow's outstretched hand, and backs away with quiet dignity.

MARRIAGE IN PURITAN DAYS.

Customs that Seem Queer Enough in These Luxurious Days.

The height of old time Puritan days—considered it, yet happy Easter brides of to-day were solemnly adjured to wear:

Something old and something new;
Something borrowed, something blue.

They were modest days in church, often in the new house that was destined to be their home, and you may believe it was generally bleak enough to give an almost funereal aspect to the affair. It was bad luck to look in the mirror after the toilet was completed—the godly maidens of that day were superstitious.

The wedding gown was first worn played in public meeting. Indeed there was no other place where the bride could surely count upon finding all her friends together.

Then the morning and bridal party opened the show by proudly walking in a little procession through the narrow streets to the meeting house on the Sabbath following the marriage. In Larned's "History of Windham County, Conn.," is a description of the morning scene in Brooklyn, Conn. Further public notice was drawn to the bride by allowing her to choose the text for the sermon preached on the first Sunday of the coming out of the newly married couple. The ingenuity often exercised in finding appropriate and sometimes startling Bible texts for these wedding sermons. The instances are well known of the marriage of Parson Smith's two daughters, one of whom selected the text, "Mary hath chosen that good part;" while the daughter Abbey, who married John Adams, decided upon the text, "John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say he hath a devil."

THE SUGAR TRUST.

HOW THE HAVEMEYER'S STARTED IN BUSINESS.

Descendants of the Founders of the House of Havemeyer Now Dominate One of the Most Powerful Business Monopolies in the World.

The production and distribution of sugar constitute one of the largest factors in the great aggregate of the world's business. The business of refining sugar, or rendering the raw sugars pure and fit for consumption, measured by the value of its products, ranks third among the so-called manufacturing industries of the United States.

Now the gigantic industry, which directly affects every citizen in the United States, which is more or less directly affiliated with a score of other industries is practically in the hands of one man. That man is Henry O. Havemeyer, the head of that consolidation of firms which calls itself the American Sugar Refineries Company, but is better known to the public as the Sugar Trust.

THEODORE O. HAVEMEYER.

It is the fashion to call Mr. Havemeyer a Sugar King. But in these days of discredited royalty, when kings in the main reign but do not govern, the term really does not do justice to the authority which he wields. As a sugar king Mr. Havemeyer not only reigns but governs. He is an autocrat whose title there is none to dispute. He controls the sugar trade as the Czar controls Russia. At his nod fifty thousand men may be thrown out of work. At his nod the price of one of the greatest necessities of life may be raised or lowered.

The germ of the mammoth Sugar Trust of to-day was a home in Yaphank street in this city, measuring 20 by 40 feet. There in the year 1848 two German immigrants took up their quarters. They were Frederick Havemeyer and his brother, William F., who had learned the business of baking sugar in London. Hence the house in Yaphank street which they used both as residence and as a place of business, came to be known as the Havemeyer bakery. It was a family concern. When the brothers married their wives did not disdain to take a hand at helping in the little factory. In those days the boiling of sugar was a very creditable day's work.

Then the business grew in magnitude. An assistant was hired. More were added and the Havemeyers thought themselves almost at the top of the tree when they were able to employ a force of seven men, and produced one million pounds of sugar annually. This quantity may seem to us small in these days of big figures, but when we remember that last year the one refinery called the Domino, and raw sugar was selling at ten cents, we may conclude that the old firm made very satisfactory profits of their limited trade.

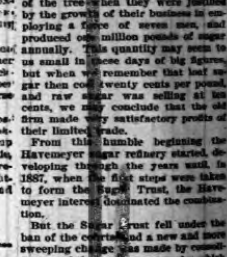
From the humble beginning the Havemeyer sugar refinery started, developing through the years until, in 1887, when the first steps were taken to form the Sugar Trust, the Havemeyer interest dominated the combination.

But the Sugar Trust fell under the ban of the courts, and a new and more sweeping change was made by consolidating all the rival companies which had entered into the Trust, and merging them into one great, new corporation. This was done on January 12, 1891, and the company being organized under the name of the American Sugar Refineries Company, which was the result of the consolidation of eighteen companies.

Starting as a $50,000,000, the capitalization of the Trust was later increased to $75,000,000, several additional refineries being absorbed at that time.

The total daily capacity of the American Sugar Refineries Company is 29,000,000 pounds, or between 20,000 and 30,000 barrels. The manufacturing plant in Williamsburg alone covers five city blocks, and has a great frontage upon the East River. It is the largest sugar refinery in the world. On the total capitalization of 29,000,000 a regular dividend of nine and one-half per cent was declared, but the capitalization, as already explained, represents in itself no enormous profit, little actual money invested.

ONE WAY OF TELLING IT.



"Where's Jones?"
"He stopped with the bear."

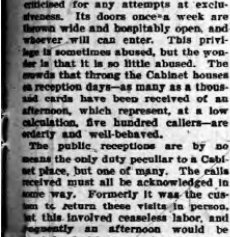
THE CABINET WOMEN.

NO SINECURE TO LEAD OFFICIAL WASHINGTON SOCIETY.

Public Receptions Where All Who Wish to Come Must be Greeted—Calls and Handshakings Without Number—How the Cabinet Women Rank.

The position of the wife of a cabinet officer is no sinecure, but oberous and exacting; the honor and distinction which the position confers are correspondingly great, and are, perhaps, its offset. At least there is some compensation, for the post is one that most women in official life are ambitious to fill, even when they understand and appreciate its exigencies.

There is an unwritten law that the Cabinet shall lead in official society. It is a position accorded it by both the Senate and Supreme Court, although some bodies claim official and social precedence of the President's advisers. A reason for this custom is not difficult to formulate. There is among the members of the Cabinet an esprit du corps, possible because of the smallness of its numbers, their political affiliation, and their ambition to contribute in every possible way to the success of the Administration of which they are a part. They are, in a word, the official family of the Executive, and responsible for social as well as official matters.



MRS. WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

It is a democratic body in an emphatic sense, and has already been criticised for any attempts at exclusiveness. Its doors once a week are thrown wide and hospitably open, and whoever will can enter. This privilege is sometimes abused, but the wonder is that it is so little abused. The crowds that throng the Cabinet houses on reception days—and many as a thousand cards have been received of an afternoon, which represent, at a low calculation, five hundred callers—are orderly and well-behaved.

The public receptions are by no means the only duty peculiar to a Cabinet place, but one of many. The calls received must all be acknowledged in some way. Formerly it was the custom to return these visits in person, but this involved ceaseless labor, and frequently an afternoon would be spent in fruitless search for an address in some obscure part of town. This was finally proved impracticable, and now all visits are returned by card, except those of high officials and personal friends.

The cabinet is expected to be in attendance at all social functions of an official character at the Executive Mansion, and on state occasions the women of the Cabinet assist the wife of the President in receiving, and must stand in line and suffer with her the ordeal of handshaking. They are, too, hostesses at frequent entertainments. Members of the Senate, the House, the judiciary, and officials of their departments must be entertained at dinner; receptions must be given for those not entitled to this consideration. Entertaining, indeed, becomes a business with them that they pursue as industriously and conscientiously as their husbands pursue their official duties, and however clever, astute and experienced a man must be to make a success in a Cabinet place, his wife must be equally clever, astute and experienced to make a success of her department.

The rank of the Cabinet women follows the law made by Congress in regard to the succession to the Presidency, and begins with the wife of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of the Treasury follows, then the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, the Secretaries of the Navy, of the Interior and of Agriculture.

Uncle Davy's First Thought.

One cold blustering morning in December, 1864, the tent of the late American General Mahone, who was an exceedingly thin man, was pitched on a bleak Virginia hillside. He was indulging in a morning nap, when "Uncle Davy," his negro body servant, tiptoed in, and, stumbling over something, knocked down the general's hat and spilled him on to the ground. Springing to his feet, the irate officer seized a sword and gave chase to the flying Davy. The latter jumped a fence, and, feeling safe, turned back towards his master, whose notably slender nacial limbs were shaking with the cold, and said: "Good Lawd, Massa William—you ain't trustin' yo'self in dis wind on dem legs, is you?"

John Milton.

Milton was born in 1608 and died in 1674. His first poem of note, "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity," was written in 1629; the "Paradise Regained" was finished a short time before his death. His literary labors covered forty-five years. His greatest poem was written by the hand of an amanuensis, and his most serious annoyance was the petulance of his daughters, who sometimes refused to write when he was in the mood to compose.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Etons Jackets Popular for Linen and Pique Gowns.

By Special Arrangement with the N. Y. Sun.

The modes in bodice decoration are legion, and, whatever the later French models may bring forth, the little bolero will hold its own throughout the summer with all sorts of wide collar effects, which may be put on as a yoke or loose at the edge like a collar. The bodice which blouses a little in front is still very popular, and some of the latest gowns are fitted very close and plain at the waist, where they are finished in two points, neatly corded after the manner in favor. Surplice effects, too, will be much in favor. Various trimmings of embroidery afford a favorite way of producing the desired shape, but there will be a variety of Eton and zouave jackets among the cloth gowns for spring wear which will have sleeves like the more pretentious spring coats. Eton jackets will be the most popular style for linen and pique gowns, and serve all the purposes of waists when worn with fancy vests or false fronts.

Transparent materials of all kinds will prevail this season for dressy gowns, but they are shown in greater variety than ever before in all sorts of mixtures of silk and wool, cotton and linens, and fabrics not transparent are made to appear so by being woven to look like one material over another. This kind of dress stuff is called moire grenadine, and has the appearance of a thin, open-meshed, fine black wool canvas over a colored silk. It comes in green, plum red, and brown, and is certainly a very charming novelty, giving the fashionable effect without the expense of a silk lining. Grenadines in both silk and wool are displayed in very attractive patterns, and the old-fashioned barege has come up in a new guise with a silk warp in the daintiest sort of textures and colors.

Tucked bodices are very popular in silk and thin materials, and a pretty example of this is shown in a linen batiste with narrow crosswise tucks for the yoke, which is outlined with cream lace insertion. The fullness below is tucked in groups three inches dowp from the yoke and the insertion is set in between. The sleeves have two small puffs, with insertion between and up and down the close part, which wrinkles slightly between the rows. The skirt is gathered on to a plainer part around the hips, which is trimmed with three rows of insertion. Another model for batiste or muslin has two lace-edged ruffles at the head of a Spanish flounce, full bodice with a ruffle of lace down the side where it opens, and a frill of material and one of lace over the sleeves. A pretty model for gauze, net, or thin silk grenadine shows bands of beaded galoon down the skirt and on the bodice, and narrow lace edges all the frills.

A FRENCH MOSLEM.

KISSES THE STEPS AS HE ENTERS THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Though a Frenchman He Adopted the Mohammedan Religion, and Devotes Himself to Teaching His New Belief in France.

The most curious figure in the French Chamber of Deputies is Dr. Grenier, the Mohammedan member for Pontarlier.

A sensation was produced among the French legislators by the appearance of a member wearing the costume of one of the nomad tribes of the Algerian desert.

He wore a flowing white burnous about his body, and his head was covered by a turban. The laws of his religion required him to wear his turban in the Chamber, for it is a Mohammedan custom always to keep the head covered in a place where great respect should be shown.

On his arrival at the Chamber Dr. Grenier knelt and kissed the steps before he entered and repeated this ceremony immediately after passing the vestibule.

As one of the youngest members of the Chamber, he was called upon to act as temporary secretary pending the election of the regular officers for the coming session. As he followed the President of the Chamber to the desk assigned to him he again knelt and kissed the floor.

Dr. Grenier, although a Frenchman, has features which adapt themselves rather well to the Arab dress. He was converted to the new religion in the French colony of Algeria. He made the orthodox pilgrimage to Mecca and then sought to become a mollah or priest. One of his legs, however, is shorter than the other, and as the Mohammedan law requires that a priest shall be free from physical deformity he could not take up the sacred office. Disappointed in this he determined to devote himself to propagating his new religion in France.

He settled in Pontarlier, where he gave free medical treatment to the poor and succeeded in making eight converts to Islam. His originality and charity enabled him to be elected Deputy.

The French Chamber has lately had a large supply of eccentric members. Among them was Thivrier, the workman-deputy, who always wore his blouse in the House. Another member was a professional strong man, who had gained fame by his ability to catch a cannon ball fired at him.

A CITY WITHOUT WHEELS.

A Mexican Town Where a Carriage is a Tradition.

Catorce is Spanish for fourteen. The tradition is that so many soldiers deserted from the Spanish army in Mexico some time in the last century, climbed to this almost inaccessible spot, turned bandits, and found that the mountain under them was full of silver, began to mine and in due course became rich and respectable. To-day Catorce enjoys all that goes to make life comfortable and agreeable, save one thing. The railroad and the telephone have reached the city, on poles which have been planted along slopes on which goats can hardly hold footing. There are pianos in the houses of the well-to-do. If the stranger is so fortunate as to be doing business with one of the substantial residents of Catorce about the dinner hour he will be entertained in a way to make the memory of hospitality on the mountain most satisfactory.

In every sense save one Catorce is metropolitan, as things go in Mexico. Catorce has no wheels. By this it is not meant that Catorce is without the bicycle. Catorce not only has no bicycles, but it has no wheeled vehicles of any kind. There is not so much as a baby carriage within the corporate limits. The back of the burro is Catorce's common carrier.

'It is not strictly accurate," said Mr. Kaufman, the leading druggist of Catorce, and one of the three English-speaking residents, "to speak of this city as never having known the presence of a wheeled vehicle. The oldest inhabitants will tell you of a tradition that once a carriage was seen in Catorce. The occasion was the celebration of a certain very notable anniversary. The carriage was separated into as many parts as practicable. The pieces were loaded on the backs of burros. When they reached the city they were put together. The carriage was used as the chief feature of a procession. There was only one street in the whole city on which the carriage could be drawn. That was the thoroughfare to the cemetery. After the celebration, the carriage was taken apart and carried down the mountain in the same way that it had been brought up.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SKILFUL SURGERY.

ASTONISHING RESULTS OF A NEW PROCESS IN BONESETTING.

Bye, it Patients are Able to be About Within Twenty-four Hours After Sustaining a Fractured Limb—A Practical Test of the Ambulatory Bandage.

That a man who is unlucky enough to fall and break a leg doesn't any longer have to spend weeks imprisoned in bed waiting for the fractured limb to mend but may be up and about sometimes within twenty-four hours after the accident was made plain to the doctors assembled in the surgical section of the Academy of Medicine in West Forty-third street, New York. A workman who fallen off a scaffold a fortnight before walked about the room without the aid of crutches and with only the slightest perceptible limp, although his leg, which had been broken, was still done up in plaster of paris.

The ambulatory system has been in use in Berlin for some time. It is simple. In the case of the fracture of either of the bones of the lower leg the patient is placed in a recumbent position and the injured bones are set in place and bound securely with an ordinary muslin roller bandage. No cotton whatever is used in the binding. Outside of this roller a plaster of Paris gauze bandage is wound. This hardens and leaves the limb incased in a plaster cast which generally extends from the toe tip to the knee joint. It holds the broken parts of the limb immovable, and hardens rapidly. The best quality of cast and bandage is always employed, and the patient is encouraged to walk without crutches, after twenty-four hours. Care is taken, of course, to avoid all possibility of inflammation setting in. The reason the patient can walk so soon is that the weight of the body is supported upon the upper part of the ambulatory cast, which acts as a crutch.

Dr. Fiske cited a case where a patient 72 years old had been able to walk within eight days after the application of the ambulatory splint. The healing of the bones goes on while the patient is walking about just as if he were lying down, as the fractured limb is in no way disturbed by the exercise. In fact, the reuniting of the fractured parts is hastened, and the stiffness of joints resulting from the old method of keeping a patient in bed and quiet is greatly reduced.—New York Sun.

A SOUTHERN SHERIFF.

Wishing to Save the Jail, He Made No Arrest and Shamed the Negro.

"Speaking of lynchings," said Jenkins, "reminds me of an incident that occurred in one of the country parishes of Mississippi several years ago. I was making a trip through a certain section of that state when the community was startled by a peculiarly atrocious murder and assault. The affair took the people by the ears, and for a few days, or until the culprit was captured, there was a perfect storm of fury on the part of the inhabitants of the county in which the murder took place. The guilty man was a negro, and it happened that the parish officials were the first to lay hands on the fellow. He was conveyed, with some show of secrecy, to the jail and locked up. Well, it didn't take long for the news to spread, and then the people, all in a body, began to make ready for the lynching. They did not seem to consider the matter that the negro was in the hands of the county—not a bit of it. I was curious to see how the sheriff was to turn out, and some little while before the mob was due at the jail I set out for that institution. When I reached the location, imagine my surprise when I found the sheriff calmly seated on the front steps of the jail with a rifle in his hands. Alongside of him was the negro, with fear depicted on his face. Both were watching the road. Approaching the sheriff, I asked him why he did not have the negro locked up and if he didn't know the mob was coming to lynch him.

"Oh, yes," he answered, 'I know the boys are coming, and I know that I've got the "nigger" ready. You see,' he remarked, apologetically, 'I know the fellers are bound to have the "nigger," and then the jail is brand new.'

"While I was pondering over this bit of sheriff sagacity, 'Am I the world be a pity to have the new doors broken up.'"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

An American Luxury.

"The thing I especially enjoyed after a somewhat lengthy sojourn on the other side was a real genuine American grate fire," commented the traveler. "In London I felt as if I was burning something very precious with the landlady charging sixpence a scuttle for coal. I remember sitting around a stove in an English hotel. The weather was cold and the coal in the stove touched together. I took a poker and stirred it up.

"That makes it burn faster,' commented the landlord, gravely.

"That's just what I want,' I replied.

A red-faced, hearty Englishman broke in: 'You Americans are dewcedly thin-blooded, don't you know.'"

Unpardonable Affront.

Church cars are a recent Russian improvement. They are intended for the Siberian Railroad. The cars look like ordinary first-class carriages, but the windows are shaped like those of Byzantine churches. The German carp introduced in American waters a few years ago proves destructive to other fish, and fortunately they seem to be on the decrease. The Legislature of New Jersey imposes a heavy fine on any person who introduces these fish in the waters of the state, and the fish commissioners of New York have come to a like decision.

In two states of the country, and in only two, California and Kentucky the electoral vote was divided between the two candidates. Mr. McKinley received eight of the votes of California and Mr. Bryan one, and Mr. McKinley received twelve of the votes of Kentucky and Mr. Bryan one. These were also the two states, and the only two, in which the vote for Palmer and Buckner was large enough to exceed the McKinley plurality. In California McKinley's plurality was 1,822; Palmer's vote was 2,086. In Kentucky the McKinley plurality was 281; the Palmer vote was 5,114.

The attention of financiers all over the world has been drawn to the financial budget of the Russian Minister of Finance. His "prosperity budget" shows an increase of revenue of nearly 75 million rubles over last year's and an increase of ordinary expenditure of only 53,750,000 rubles. Of the immense expenditure of 129 millions rubles, 64 million were expended in building the Siberian railroad and its branches. It is especially interesting to note that this branch increase of revenue came chiefly from railroad systems. In devoting the surplus to further extensions of those systems, therefore, she is investing her capital in the very enterprises from which it has been derived.

By the census just completed in France, the population of that country is shown to be 38,517,975, which is an increase of only 175,027 over the population it had in 1891. This is an ominous showing, but the Minister of the Interior is trying to minimise the alarm it has produced by pointing out that of late years there has been a large emigration to the colonies, especially to Algeria, and that more troops are now kept in remote possessions than formerly. At the same time he is compelled to confess that there is a marked tendency in the population to remain almost stationary, and that it does not increase in anything like the same proportions as its neighbors. While in twenty-four departments the inhabitants have increased, there has been an absolute diminution in sixty-three.

The immigration restriction bill recently adopted by both houses of Congress, and designed to exclude after the 1st of next July immigrants who are unable to read and write, provides a peculiar test. At each of the inspector's offices of the United States there are to be pasteboard slips with printed extracts from the Federal Constitution in double small pica type of not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words. These slips are to be kept "in boxes made for that purpose," so that they shall be concealed from view, are to be duly numbered and printed in different languages. The immigrant, having designated the language in which he claims to be proficient, is "required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterward write out in full view of the immigration officer the words printed thereon." It will be seen, therefore, that the plan affords a practical test of the immigrant's ability both to read and to write his own language.

A MILLION DOLLARS

HOW DR. RAINSFORD WOULD SPEND IT FOR CHARITY.

The Famous Critic of the Bradley Martin Ball Answers the Question, "How Would You Spend a Million Dollars in Charity?"

Rev. Dr. Rainsford has told what he would do with millions if he had them in reply to the question, "How would you spend a million dollars in charity if that sum were placed in your hands to-morrow?" The minister who criticised so harshly the lavish expenditures of wealth upon the Bradley Martin ball, replied:

"I would do one of three things, and am not equal to the task of choosing between them. The only way I can find out of it is to be allowed $3,000,000 instead of $1,000,000, for I guarantee a good investment on three times the money."

The question was asked Dr. Rainsford by the editor of the Illustrated American, and in a recent issue of that publication he made an interesting reply. The three things which he best tates as to a choice between are:

REV. DR. RAINSFORD.

First—To lay as large a plot of ground as the million would purchase in the very heart of the city and make a children's playground of it.

Second—Establish enough kindergarten schools to accommodate all of the children of the city over three years of age.

Third—Erect dwellings for working men to be rented at a low rate, sufficient merely to pay a percentage on the money invested, the money from such rents to be reinvested for the same purpose.

Dr. Rainsford declares that in order to effectually help the poor the giver must know something of their actual condition. Charity, he says, not only fails to do good in a great many instances, but often succeeds in pressing toward pauperism those whom it seeks to relieve.

"When we are dealing with poverty," he goes on, "we are dealing with a disease that affects mind and body and character, and therefore heed to avail ourselves of whatever experience or scientific knowledge others have acquired. We must know something about those whom we wish to relieve, and in order to know properly we must go ourselves. Every good citizen should know something of the main and important things in his city's life.

"In other words, when it comes to spending money, the problem is, all means, till your own intelligence is trained. But let no living soul do the studying for you, and so rob you of the solemn, yet large and hopeful view of life that such study will bring."

Then Dr. Rainsford describes more fully the details of his plans for spending a million—or rather for spending three millions.

"First I would buy as large a plot as I could in the most densely inhabited part of New York, knock the houses on it down, clear the ground, put a fence around it, but no sod on it or obstructions of any sort, give it to the city on the condition they guard it and there, Winter and Summer, let the people breathe and the children play. It is impossible to exaggerate the harm done the children of our city by refusing them, as we practically do, the right that every child should claim—of play room in order to grow.

"Second, our public school system in New York takes the children when they are six and is supposed to keep them until they are fourteen. Everyone who knows anything about education knows that education should begin at less than three. The time will come, and it may not be far away, when room will be made for every little tot in our cities in a kindergarten.

"In the third place, I would like to establish another trust fund, similar to that which George Peabody has given to London. It should be used to erect, where they are most needed, buildings for the working men, to be rented at a rate to pay a certain percentage on money invested for the same purpose.

leader who guided the Ship of State in many a hard-fought contest, when many of the staid old citizens of the borough were young men in politics. The surprise of the day was the discovery of spurious Republican ballots. A protest was filed against them and they were withdrawn. A messenger was sent to Plainfield to get tickets according to the party caucus, as it was found there were only six regular Republican ballots left at 11 o'clock. But six Republican tickets go a good ways in "Old Warren," and the clerk by entering the booths once in a while was enabled to keep supplied with regular tickets.
